Dodson owned a dog that he considered valuable. One Mock, a neighbor, raised sheep and poultry. Dodson's dog sucked one of Mock's hen's eggs, and caught one of his sheep. Thereupon Mock shot and killed the dog. Dodson sued Mock for damages for killing the dog. Mock set up as a defence the facts above. But the court, Judge Gaston, said that it was no justification; and so Dodson recovered damages. The Judge remarked that "it is not denied that a dog may be of such a ferocious disposition or predatory habits as to render him a nuisance to the community, and if suffered to go at large, may be killed by any person."

But Judge Pearson, in a later case, questioned this last exposition of the law.

But in a case that occurred about the same time, the court held that if a man kill a dog that had destroyed two of his sheep and is prowling around to kill others, he is not answerable in damages. "It hath always been taken for the law, that a sheep stealing dog, found lurking about where sheep are kept, incurs the penalty of death."

Judge Pearson's review of Judge Gaston, no doubt, had much to do with the passage of our present statute, which makes the owner of a sheep-killing dog indictable, if he knows that the dog kills sheep, and then lets it run at large. So that this question is not at rest.

But the question of the right of a man to kill a chicken-eating sow is still an open one. In the year 1858, in New Hanover, Mr. Nixon was the owner of a fine brood of chickens. Mr. Morse owned a sow that had been known to eat one chicken and to chase another. One fine morning, Mr. Nixon saw the old sow prowling around near his fence, where his chickens usually ranged, and, his patience being threadbare, he shot and killed the sow.

Result: Morse sued him for damages. The Judge below charged the jury that if they believed the sow was of a predatory character and had the reputation of a chicken-eating hog, the defendant had the right to kill her.

Up went the case to the supreme court. Our highest court said that the superior court was in error. They say that the position that a chicken-eating hog is a public nuisance and can be killed by any one, would lead to monstrous consequences; and they further held that what's law for the dog is not law for the hog. At all events a new trial was granted.

Back went the case again. This time new evidence was offered. It appeared that the old sow was seen with Nixon's duck in its mouth. Nixon chased the sow. She dropped the duck. Then the sow "put out" after the duck again, and while in hot pursuit, Nixon shot and killed the pest.

Still the lower court, taking the case from Judge Pearson, charged the jury that the defendant was not warranted in killing the sow. This time the defendant appealed, and he got a new trial, and the case went back again; and the books do not say if the case ever ended. But the law was and is settled, and is this: The owner of the duck had a right to shoot and kill the sow, if it was necessary to do so, to protect the duck. The knowledge that the owner of the sow had of its bad qualities ought to have induced him to keep her up, and if she was killed, it was in consequence of his own default. "Damnum absque injuria," as the law Latin has it.

So much for dogs and hogs. But how about a vicious bull? In 1850, John Nixon's bull gored Joseph Cockerham's horse. Nixon was sued to recover damages. The court say that if Nixon knew that the bull was vicious and turned it loose, he was responsible for all damages that the bull did.

How about injuries sustained in passing over bad bridges and roads? Suppose that a wagon and team break through a bad county bridge and the team are drowned, and the wagon lost, who pays the bill? No one, at all.

But if it is a town or city bridge, you get full damages. The distinction is this: Towns and cities are granted unusual privileges about markets, and police and fires and other things, and so they must be very careful. Down in Newbern, last year, a gentleman fell on a side-walk and broke his arm. He sued the city and claimed that he fell because of the city's negligence in letting fish scales and slime stay on the side walk. The jury took this view, and he recovered five hundred dollars; which our court said, on appeal, was right.

How about horses running away because of unusual noises and sights, such as drums and fireworks? and how about injury to people from the discharge of fireworks?

Two neighbors in Boston, a few years ago, were celebrating with the Grant Club. Each stood in his own house. One shot Roman candles and the other sky rockets. The stick of one sky rocket accidentally put out the eye of the neighbor's boy. Suit for damages and damages recovered.

In Massachusetts and in New York, it is held, and North Carolina would no doubt so hold, that the whole business of exploding crackers on the streets on any day is unlawful.

In 1825 in this State, a boy beat a drum and caused a horse to run away, and the owner recovered damages.

But it is to be remembered that one has the right to pursue his usual and lawful occupation, in the usual way, and if a horse take fright and do damage, on account of it, the law gives no damages to the owner. Once upon a time a man's horse took fright at the elephant belonging to a circus, which was travelling along the highway. The horse ran and destroyed its owner's buggy. But the court said that an elephant had a right to the public road, and that if the elephant behaved himself and was properly driven, no damages were recoverable.

For example, if a military company were drilling, and it were necessary to beat the drum and play the fife, horses must not interfere. So if a horse is frightened and runs away because the railroad engine blows for the station or for any other necessary purpose, the owner can get no damages.

But if the railroad has its cars at an unusual and unnecessary place and thereby the horse is frightened and does damage, the owner has a good cause of action. For example, Dr. Hassell, one day in 1890, was going out of Williamston, riding in his buggy. A box-car was not in its usual or proper place, but projected two feet at a bridge at a public crossing. The Doctor's horse took fright, ran away, smashed the buggy and injured the Doctor. The jury gave him five hundred dollars damages, and our court said that it was right. So if the engine blows in order to frighten the horse, the railroad is liable.

Suppose that a farmer has cotton to ship. He carries it to the depot and leaves it, and says to the agent that he will get his bill of lading in a day or two, and, before he gets it and before he tells the agent where the cotton is to be sent, it is burned, whose loss is it? Not the railroad's, if they have used ordinary care in keeping it, for they are not yet common carriers. But, if the bill of lading is given out and the relation of common carrier exists, then the railroad would be responsible for the loss. This case has just occurred in our State.

Again, suppose that you have some fine hogs or poultry, and you go the city and engage to sell them for a fancy price. You put them on the railroad and ship them to the purchaser, and they are lost or destroyed, what damages do you get, the market value of the property, or the price at which you sold them? Well, this depends. If you have told the railroad that you have sold the property to be delivered at such a time and at such a price, and they fail to deliver as agreed, you recover, as damages, the amount that you were to be paid; but unless you make such a contract with the railroad, your damages would be the market price.

A very funny case occurred at Haw River in Alamance county a year or two ago. Several parties made up their minds that they would go and see the circus to be held at Hillsboro. So they went to Haw River and bought railroad tickets to Hillsboro. The trains came along, and being already full of passengers, gave Haw River the "go by."

The disappointed circus goers took the matter into court, where it was decided that the railroad must not only pay damages, but if it had notice of the unusually large crowd, and wilfully, negligently and carelessly failed to make provision by putting on additional coaches, the parties were entitled to punitive damages, and the railroad paid about seven hundred dollars, it was reported.

Let us see a moment what is meant by this word "punitive." Whenever, generally speaking, an injury is done to your person, in a wilful, careless and grossly negligent way, the law says that you may have not only compensatory damages, but that the guilty party must be made to suffer punishment for his bad conduct.

For example, if a railroad conductor unlawfully puts a passenger off the cars, and suit is brought against the company to recover damages for the act of the conductor, an important inquiry would be, How did the conductor deport himself in putting you off?

If he was careless and insulting and blunt in his manner, and did you more violence than was necessary, the company would have to pay vindictive or punitory damages. But if he behaved himself in a becoming manner, with no carelessness or malice or recklessness, the damages would be only enough to compensate you for your loss. Of course, if you were in the wrong, that is to say, had no ticket, or no proper ticket, or were behaving in such a way as to be a nuisance and were put off, you would get no damages.

A year or two ago, a man named Young sued the telegraph company to recover punitive damages. They had greatly wounded his sensibilities, he claimed, by not delivering a telegram in time, and he was not able to be present at the death bed of his wife.

The court said that if the company was really careless in delivering such a message, it was a case for punitive damages. But the funny part of the matter was that Young dropped his suit because the telegraph company, before the second trial, found out that Young had wife No. 2 living when wife No. 1 died. The jury would, no doubt, have thought that he had no sensibilities to hurt.

If a mill owner order an important piece of machinery and it does not come according to contract time, damages may be recovered; but not anticipated profits on the mill, if the machinery had arrived in time. These would be speculative damages. "A reasonable rent and insurance, during the period of suspension, in addition to supplying the defective parts of the machinery," would be the measure of damages, say the court in the leading case of Boyle vs. Reeder in 1st Iredell's Law.

In Moore county in 1879, Roberts and Cole were neighbors, and had a division fence which they agreed, should be kept up in this way: Roberts to repair his separate half, Cole his half. Cole failed to keep up his half, and stock ate up Roberts' crop. Suit for damages. What was the measure, think you? Profit on the crop if made? No. This would be speculative. It would be the cost of repairing the fence and such sum as would pay the damage done the crop when Roberts first discovered the injury. You see a man cannot "make" damages for himself. If he can prevent further loss, it is his duty to do so.

But we must conclude with a damage case for selling liquor to a minor. If a liquor seller do this, the boy's father or his guardian, if the father be dead, can sue the liquor seller, and by our statute he can recover, not only what damage the liquor has done the boy, but also damages by way of punishment, which shall not be less than twenty dollars in each case and may be five thousand dollars. In some States the law makes the liquor seller liable for all the injury that any drunken man does while drunk with that particular dealer's intoxicants. But we have no such statute in North Carolina.

Charity.

"Above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins." 1 Pet. 4: 8.

I. "ABOVE ALL THINGS."

Here "Charity," or christian love, is commended as the most important of all the christian graces. In 1 Cor. 13: 13, it is said: "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." No other christian graces can exist without love. No one can have "faith" or "hope" who does not love God. The christian life begins in love. It can grow and strengthen in no other soil but love. Love lifts us higher than any other grace. It allies us to God. It makes us like him: "God is Love." Therefore, we should put love and keep it "above all things."

II. "HAVE FERVENT CHARITY AMONG YOURSELVES."

"Fervent charity,"—glowing, sincere love, not only to God, but "among yourselves" as brethren.

Hundreds of times in the Bible christians are exhorted and commanded to love one another. But perhaps no command is more constantly and universally disregarded. It would be a difficult thing to find a church all of whose members really love each other. In how many churches could you find twenty members who sincerely love each other as christians because they are christians? There may be a kind of dead peace and lifeless harmony. There may be no open breaches or broils. They may meet and work together in a cold and heartless way. But there is no brotherly love to warm and cheer and sweeten their work and union.

But in many churches it is far worse than this. Coldness, unkindness, hatred, strife, has driven from many hearts all brotherly love; and members of the same church—brethren in Christ—are open enemies of each other. They work against each other. If in church work one proposes a measure, the other will oppose it. They go about like buzzards smelling for foul things to say against each other.

Instead of "having fervent charity among themselves," they are full of hatred; and are so living as to stab the cause of Christ, to give the lie to their own profession of faith, and to be stumbling blocks in the way of sinners.

The command, "have fervent charity among yourselves," implies that christians can and ought to love one another. If we are christians we have a new nature of love. "God is love," and we partake of his nature. Love is of God; hatred is of the devil. If we are God's children we must love. But says one, "I have enemies. They are doing me wrong. How can I love them?" If you are a christian you have love. Love is mighty. It can drive out hatred and conquor enemies.

Sigismund, a king of Poland, captured in war a number of enemies. He kept them alive. His friends reproached him because he did not destroy his enemies. "I have destroyed them," he said. "I have by kindness destroyed their enmity, and made them my loving friends."

Bro. Richard Peed, a deacon of Flat River Union Baptist church, Granville county, N. C., once had a neighbor who for some cause became his bitter enemy. This neighbor was prostrated by a long spell of sickness amid the severity of winter. His wife and children suffered for fire wood. Bro. Peed took his hands and wagons and cut and hauled wood all day for the sick man. He then cut it the proper lengths for the fire places, and piled it on the porch where his wife could easily get it. This man ever afterwards was Bro. Peed's warm friend. Love conquored him. If christians differ, they should conquor each other with love, and have "fervent charity among themselves."

III. "FOR CHARITY SHALL COVER A MULTITUDE OF SINS."

Charity is a broad, thick cover. It can hide a "multitude of sins." If we have love, we will not always be looking for faults in our brethren. If they have faults, we would rather not see them. But if we are obliged to see them, we will want to hide them if possible, hoping they will soon be given up.

All christians have faults. None are perfect. Perhaps all have a "besetting sin" that "easily overcomes them." Sam Jones says, "When God converted me he showed me what a miserable, vile sinner I am. Ever since then I have felt more like pitying other sinners than abusing them."

If fault-finding christians could just see their own many and great faults, it would make them more charitable towards the faults of their brethren, and they would rather hide them than expose them.

As no one is perfect, it is wrong to condemn a brother and say he is no christian because he has faults. Travelling on the train, I heard a preacher and a lawyer discussing christian character. The lawyer was puzzled by the fact that christians were so imperfect. The preacher said: "You must not judge christians alone by their faults; you must judge them by the general aim and trend of their lives. When you lawyers want to prove a man's character you ask the witness, 'Do you know—not the particular—but the general character of this man?' If his general character is good, he stands in court. So we should judge christians. They may have some faults, but they may have many virtues. They may be striving to diminish their faults and increase their virtues. If christians, this is their daily aim and desire. As far as it is wise, we should throw the mantle of charity over the faults of christians, and magnify their virtues.

It is better to be impeffect and conscious of it, and struggling against it, than to be satisfied with our own self righteousness. A brother may think himself to be good, much better than his brother. But while he boasts of his goodness, as the Pharisee, his despised brother may be praying, as the Publican, "God be merciful to be a sinner;" and may "go down justified rather than the other."

It would be easier to cover the faults of our brethren if we loved them more and knew them better. As a rule, the brother you dislike is not near as bad as you think he is. If you would let him explain his acts they would appear in a very different light. If you show him that he has wronged you, he will readily confess the wrong and beg forgiveness. If christians would deal thus with each other there would not be so many faults needing covering.

Love does hide a multitude of sins. Here is a father and mother. They have a wayward, reckless boy. He has plunged into degrading and ruinous sins. But his parents do not see many of his faults. Those they do see they would palliate or cover. Why? He is their boy. They love him.

If we are God's children, he loves us in spite of all our faults.

If parents can love a reckless boy—if God can love such sinners as we are—ought we not to love each other as brethren, in spite of faults, and because we are brethren?

In Psalms 32: 1, 2, God in mercy says to us if we are christians: "blessed is he whose trangression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity."

When we remember how much of sin and imperfection God has forgiven and covered in us, let us cherish that christian charity that will, as much as possible, hide the faults of our brethren.

O for more "charity" among brethren. "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not. Seeketh not her own; is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil. Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

J. A. STRADLEY.

Death's Doings in North Carolina.

Scarcely more than a year has passed since I left the home and friends in my native State, and already of those who have gone away, not to a land of heathen darkness, but to the land of eternal light and joy, the list is rapidly lengthening.

On that last Sunday morning when I parted from the loved friends at Moravian Falls, I stepped in to say good-bye to old Mrs. Spainhour and her daughter, Mrs. Hemphill. They had just moved into a new cottage where they hoped to spend together their declining years of widowhood. The old sister said to me, as I took her hand in parting, that she would never live to see me again. But almost the first letters brought news, not of her death, but of that of her daughter, Mrs. Hemphill. For nearly thirty years a widow, she had long lived among the good people of that community, in her quiet and unobtrusive way doing good to all around her, and filling a place in the little church which must now remain vacant.

Only a few mails came till one brought the news that her mother was gone, even as she said. Raised in that mountain country in the early days of the century, she lacked the advantages of education; but she was ever alive to its importance, and was careful that her children should have as much as circumstances would allow. Her influence on the educational interests of a large section was great, exerted through her children, several of whom have attained eminence as teachers, and all are helpers in every good word and work.

A little later came word that there was a vacant place in the circle of friends at Wake Forest; Prof. Beckwith had passed beyond mortal sight. He will be greatly missed from the College, where his scholarship won him the respect of the boys, his contagious enthusiasm made them zealous in their work in the class-room, while his noble character and his devoted piety won for him their sincere affection. Even more, his churches will miss him, for his preaching power and pastoral gifts eminently fitted him for the work of the ministry. I was expecting to hear that he had left the school-room to give his whole time to the ministry.

The months that followed brought word that numerous other homes were desolate at Wake Forest, and that among those who had gone out from that community of good people were Mrs. Wingate and Mrs. Royall, full of years and full of usefulness; Mr. Simmons, young, active and energetic; the Misses Fort, modest, pious, useful; Mrs. Gill, so recently gone to the new home now desolate.

Once more, the last mail tells me that two more of my special friends have gone to the better land. Away back in the later sixties, N. B. Cannaday took me with him to Forestville to spend a night in the home of Dr. Vann. In all the years that have followed, I have felt that I could always count him my friend, always ready to help according to the need. But now he is gone, and for me North Carolina is poorer, and one of the warmest friends and supporters of the College will no more be heard in its behalf.

But none of these deaths bring a feeling of deeper personal bereavement than that of A. T. Denny. Several years ago he revealed to me his impressions which I saw were leading him to the ministry. The last conversation I had with him revealed similar impressions which I thought would bring him to China. Both as boy and man, he was noted for his fidelity to his convictions of duty. Pious, earnest, zealous, faithful, I had hoped for him a long life of usefulness. But God is wiser than we; may he give us who remain zeal and fidelity proportioned to our responsibility.

The Bible.

Other books may fascinate the intellect; by this alone can you cleanse the heart.

They who cease to reverence God's written word lose one of the most elevating, one of the most comforting influences of human life.

Other books may make you learned, or eloquent, or subtle; this book alone can make you wise unto salvation.

Read your Bibles! Fill your whole souls with the thought of Christ, make of him not only a Redeemer, but a Brother; not only a Savior, but a Friend.

In other literatures may trickle here and there some shallow runnel from the "unemptiable fountain of wisdom," and even these, alas! turbid too often with human passions, fretted with human obstacles, and choked at last in morass or sand; but in this book, majestic and fathomless, flows a river of the water of life itself, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb.—Frederick W. Farrar.

Never think that God's [illegible] denials. Hold on; hold fast; [illegible] tience is genius.—Beecher.

HASTY ENTRANCE INTO THE MINISTRY.

It is becoming quite common now for men to rush hastily into the work of the ministry soon after their professed change of heart. This tendency is especially noticeable among modern evangelists. There seems to be a popular demand for something sensational, startling, in the line of preaching as well as in many other directions; and it seems that there is no dearth of those who would supply this demand. Hence we have "boy preachers," "drummer evangelists," cyclone evangelists, &c., &c. As hinted above, one rather striking peculiarity of those who bear such questionable titles as the above is that a good many of them have entered the ministry of the word, and appear before the public as full fledged preachers, very soon after their conversion, or professed conversion. The cities of this and other States have recently seen the advertisement of a popular lecture by a popular evangelist under the title of "From Bar-room to Pulpit."

In passing, let us ask this question: If one acquires reputation as a preacher of the gospel, is it the wise thing for him, on the strength of that reputation, to leave for the time his chosen (?) work and canvass the country as a lecturer for gain? If a minister has talent he certainly can command a support in his work—why should he leave it for gain?

The title of the above-mentioned lecture may strike some as "quite the thing," but we must confess that the reading of it, and the train of thought it awakened, have made an unpleasant impression upon us. Of course we are always glad to hear of the conversion of a bar keeper, or of one of his constant patrons;—but it is quite another thing to hear, in the next paper we peruse after his conversion, that he has entered the ministry and is posing as a preacher of the gospel. There is something, to us at least, in this near association of the bar-room with the pulpit that has a strong order of incongruity about it and does violence to our spiritual perception of the "fitness of things." We would not presume to limit God's grace or his mercy, and we know that his religion can so transform a man that the sot of to day is made the saint of to-morrow. Yet the Lord knew what he was about when he inspired Paul to say, "Let all things be done decently and in order;" and again, "Lay hands suddenly on no man." If there is any step that a man can take in this life, which demands earnest prayer, consideration, and deliberation, it is that of entering the ministry of God's holy word.

It is, in our judgment, not doing things decently and in order for a man to rush into the ministry almost before the filth of the gutter is washed from him; and he certainly needs to become better acquainted with his new associates and his spiritual environment before he is set up, or sets himself up, as a spiritual guide among them. The Scriptures certainly give no encouragement, by precept or example, to the plan of hastily entering the ministry, and which has become so marked in these latter days as that it amounts almost to a craze. Christ trained and taught his disciples carefully for over three years before they were sent forth as full-fledged preachers of his gospel. The conversion and work of Paul really form no exception to the rule; for while he began at once to testify, after his conversion, that "Jesus was the Christ," yet the Lord sent him into a significant retirement for three years before he entered fully the grand work that the Master had given him to do. Besides, Paul had studied theology under Gamaliel before the fuller light of the gospel dawned upon him. The Bible directs that not even deacons should be chosen or set apart for the work they are expected to do until they are tried; and how often have churches, presbyteries, &c., been forcibly reminded of the wisdom embodied in Paul's words previously quoted, "Lay hands suddenly on no man." The want of caution here has led to many troubles, church disturbances, scandals, etc.

Another reason why this sudden entrance into the ministry is not a wise thing, is found in the fact that age demands men who are capable of doing the work they profess to understand. Now, a newly converted man is called by good authority a "babe in Christ." Is a spiritual babe well calculated to act as a spiritual guide and instructor [illegible] of Christ? Is he a safe [illegible] for other babes in Christ? There are [illegible] men and women before him that need [illegible] of the word," can he give it? Some one may say, "But cannot God use the weak things of the world to confound the mighty?" Of course he can, and he does; but it does not follow that it is best for a preacher to be weak in his understanding of God's work; and we contend that the newly converted man is not prepared to preach God's word until he studies it. It is impossible for a babe in Christ to be as strong at his conversion as he becomes afterward; and until he has the strength that some experience in the christian warfare gives, we contend that he is not a judicious and competent spiritual guide for others. There would have been as much sense in Isaac delivering a lecture or homily to Abraham on Mt. Moriah on faith and obedience, as there is in the bar-keeper of yesterday attempting from the pulpit to-day to enlighten his hearers on christian life and christian living. It would be eminently proper for him, in an humbler sphere, to testify about what the Lord had done for his soul; but if the Lord needs him in the pulpit he will put him there in his own time and in his own way. If we know anything about a call to the ministry, we are profoundly convinced that the Lord is the best interpreter of his own commands, and he is usually in no hurry to appoint men as his embassadors who are fresh from the slums of vice. A man should well quit the songs of the bacchanal before he attempts to lead the songs of Zion; and he should know well how to pronounce the heavenly shibboleth before he attempts to pass the barriers that the Lord has placed between the novice in religion and the sacred work and functions of a preacher of his gospel.

As we have before intimated, this sudden exaltation of men from the slums of vice to the pulpit is partly to be accounted for by a morbid or unhealthy desire on the part of many to have something new or startling in the line of preaching. And we opine that a good deal of this sentiment is the result of gathering a large number of unconverted material in the churches. The time will come, says the apostle, when "they will not endure sound doctrine, but will heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;" and that means they will tire of the old doctrine and multiply the number and variety of preachers or teachers. There are plenty of people that will go to hear a joke-cracking or cyclone evangelist that would not go to hear a man with the gifts of Paul who might come without any flourish of trumpets or parade of sensational names.

Let it be understood that these remarks do not apply exclusively to evangelists. Some of them are good and true men. The time has come, however, when our churches should use more care in calling for the ordination of untried men, and such a healthy public sentiment should be cultivated among christians as that the innovation spoken of would receive but little encouragement among us.

WE desire to call attention to a matter often overlooked by those who discuss this question, pro and con, and that is what may be called the "Incidental Bible proof that only men are called to preach the gospel." Of course we here refer to preaching publicly, before mixed assemblies, by those whom God has called to do the official work of preaching. In another sense it is the duty of all who know Christ to preach Christ, each, however, in his or her proper sphere of duty or action. Some may think that the incidental proof in the Scriptures that men only are called to preach is meagre, and, after all, not conclusive. But such evidence or proof, like circumstantial evidence before a human court, may be quite strong and convincing, and as such, deserves due consideration. Let us call attention, then, to some facts, true of New Testament history, and to passages that are found in God's word which furnish strong proof against the theory that it is scriptural for women to preach publicly or officially.

1. One strong fact in this direction is this: Christ did not include a woman among the twelve disciples whom he called, and whom he sent out to preach; nor was there a woman, so far as we know, among the seventy afterwards sent out with authority to preach. Let it be noticed also that Christ sent forth these his preachers two together into all the cities and places to which he expected to go. This teaches that the Lord endorses the plan of travelling preachers going in pairs. Would the Lord have countenanced a male and a female preacher journeying together to different places to preach his gospel? To say nothing of the current notions and customs of Eastern nations that existed during the Saviour's earthly ministry, we are free to admit that all the liberality (?) of a developed (?) christianity does not give room to endorse such a questionable method of propagating the truth.

2. We think that a New Testament call to preach the gospel is made directly by God, and is impressed forcibly upon the mind, heart and conscience of the one who is called. Do the women who persist in preaching claim to have such a call? As Baptists, we are opposed to this thing. It is passing strange that among the many thousands of pious, intelligent Baptist women of the South, and mostly of the North, there has not risen one, to our knowledge, that claims to have this experience. Would God call pious women of other denominations and pass ours by? Does not this state of things argue that the women who are preaching have called themselves, or that they have chosen the ministry, like one would law or medicine?

3. Again, let us notice the words found in 2 John 10, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed." Let the reader notice the words emphasized in the above sentence, and others we may quote from Scripture, and he will have a clearer conception of their force as bearing on this question. Here some may attempt to dodge the force of the passage by saying that writers cannot always be distinguishing between the sexes in writing any more than in speaking, and hence they use the masculine form for both. There is a little force in this reasoning; but still, as John spoke by inspiration, and the passage naturally produces the impression that he was writing of male preachers, we not only claim the natural interpretation, but insist on the discrimination that the passage makes between the sexes. By the way, is it in good taste for female preachers to travel alone in doing even a good work? We are pretty sure that each one of our brethren would prefer that it should be somebody else's mother, daughter, or wife, that thus bid defiance to a healthy public opinion by engaging alone in this work of a travelling preacher.

4. Again, notice Paul's words, Gal. 1: 9, "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." In the preceding verse he pronounces the same anathema upon an angel from heaven, if he should dare preach any other gospel than the one they had already heard. Now we contend that if Paul had been taught by the Holy Spirit that women ought to preach, he seems here to have shown a strange oversight by sticking so persistently to the masculine gender.

5. A fifth proof can be found in the statement, (Acts 14: 23), as to what the Apostles Paul and Barnabas did on one of their missionary journeys. "And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and prayed, with fasting, they commended them unto the Lord," &c. Here the apostles ordained men, and not women, to do the official work of preaching the gospel. Some may try to dodge the force of this historical statement by saying that the word "elders" here may include some of both sexes. But everybody knows that elders here is in the masculine gender. Besides, we find Paul writing to Titus in Crete, and saying that he had left him there for the purpose, among other things, of ordaining "elders in every city;" and he immediately afterward gives such directions as to their qualifications as to prove beyond doubt that the word elders included men only, (see Titus 1: 5–9). This naturally leads us to notice:

6. That Paul's language, when he writes to Timothy about the qualifications of an elder, pastor, or bishop, (for a preacher in the New Testament is known by all these names), furnishes undoubted evidence that he had men, and not women, in mind when he wrote. Notice 1 Tim. 3: 1, 2. "This is a true saying, If any man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. A bishop, then, must be blameless, the husband of one wife," * * * "one that ruleth well his own household," * * * "not a novice, lest being puffed up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of devil," &c. Now, we contend, not without reason, that if Paul was authorized to teach that women as well as men ought to preach, he here exhibits a strange forgetfulness. The conclusion is irresistible, to any one who wishes to be convinced, that Paul was certainly against the sisters preaching.

Now let us sum up the argument. We see from the above that Christ nowhere, by word, precept or example, countenanced the preaching of his gospel by women; that thousands of our godly women have had no intimation of a call to preach, while thousands of godly men have; that when inspired men ordained preachers, they invariably ordained men; that the qualifications that are mentioned, as essential for those who would preach, are such as to exclude women, and cannot be possessed by them. These things being so, we are forced to the conclusion that our women ought not to preach the gospel.

And so again, we lift our voice against this unseemly modern innovation. In the name of our mothers, our wives, our daughters, we call upon our people to halt, in the tendency here and there noticeable, toward this custom. Let those who differ from us question our motives as they may, but we do protest against this thing; because we think it plainly unscriptural, and because we love our mothers, daughters, and wives, too well to stand by with lips sealed by a craven silence while those that are dear to us are drawn into usages and customs that almost unsex them, and place them in a sphere and give them a work for which they were not designed by the great Creator.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

MOREHEAD.

Now is the time to go to Morehead to get cool. Ice and air are both cheap and abundant. The struggle now is for the inside rooms at the hotel, as far from the music of the wind as possible. I went there hunting a place where there was no snow, but while the ground was free from snow the keen cutting wind, fresh from the North pole, just about equalized the place of my retreat with those I left covered in snow. Only some of the bravest of the fishermen ventured to carry a boat from shore. Once in a while you would see a boat come with a few boxes of fish picked up in the shallow waters of the sound after they had been stiff frozen. A few were catching "scollops," which were worth $1.75 to $2.00 per gallon. This is a shell fish, and after the shell is opened, which is done very rapidly by one who knows how, the entire contents of the shell except the heart (?) of the fish, which is about the size and very much the shape of a silver thimble, is the only part of any value, and is considered by many a very choice dish.

In Bro. Bell's office were a few old sugar barrels, not over a half dozen, the tops covered over with cloth. These barrels had been shipped to him by an old colored man near Charleston, S. C., and contained about three thousand dollars worth of "diamond back" terrapins. These terrapins are caught while buried in the mud in summer and put in pens built in the water for the purpose, and kept without any food till the following spring, when they are sold to restaurants like Delmonico's, and are served only for the rich, and those willing to pay fancy prices, such as few are able to do. The strange thing about these high price delicacies is that you may pack them in barrels and let them remain for months with nothing to eat, yet they continue to fatten all the time. What is termed a "counter" must measure six inches from end to end of his bottom shell. These sell from fifty to sixty dollars per dozen in New York. Those that fall short of this measurement, though it be but little, will not bring more than half this amount. These, so Bro. Bell says, are often superior to those that come up to the full measure; but nothing for this, if he is not a "six incher" he is denominated a "bull," and sells from twenty four to thirty dollars per dozen. This latter price, I suppose, will strike many of the readers of the RECORDER as a fair price for terrapins. It will be remembered, however, that these are not the kind we often see falling off a log to escape the sight of the passers by, and are such experts in stealing the boys bait while fishing.

I found Bro. H. C. Moore as comfortable as a bachelor is entitled to be. He very cheerfully divided the comforts of his room with me. This was most agreeable to me, to say nothing of the joy it gave him. It was acceptable to me because the weather was very cold, and I was in the notion to husband every source of warmth, however small and inadequate. And then too "blessings brighten as they take their flight," and from what the brethren told me, and from what I saw on this brother's mantlepiece, together with some other additions and subtractions I noted in other portions of his room, somehow made me feel that this was the last time this sort of hospitality would be open to me at Morehead. This, however, shall be no cause for a quarrel, for while he will not be in a condition to share with me these nearer relations, yet he will still remember how necessary the RECORDER is to his people, and I shall always, as I have heretofore, find him ready and willing to help me in my work.

Bro. Leary, who about a year ago had a stroke of paralysis, is now much better—so much so that he goes to church, and is able to participate in the services. He is fully alive to every interest of our work. He came over to my room and spent an hour, in which he inquired with much interest after the brethren and their work.

I saw Bro. Ford only for a few minutes. The river at Newbern was frozen over from one bank to the other. Several vessels were hard frozen in the ice. I felt as though we had reached the arctic regions.

We went from here to Goldsboro in the worst snow storm I have ever witnessed. On reaching Goldsboro we were notified that the train could not get nearer than about two hundred yards of the depot, so each man taking his baggage—fortunately for me I had none—made his way to the hotel as best he could.

I was heading for Clinton, but on account of the snow and delayed trains, I turned my course homeward. But this is not the last of me. The Clinton brethren will soon have the pleasure (?) of seeing me and settling the business the weather interfered with.

Letter from Rev. L. N. Chappell in China.

Dear Recorder:—Perhaps a short account of a trip we took last week may be interesting to some of your readers.

For several days Bro. Hunnex and I had been planning to go to Yangchow, visiting several mission stations on the way there and back. And as the morning of last Monday one week ago was fine, and gave promise of fine weather for a two or three days' country trip, we started across the river in a Chinese boat at nine o'clock, intending to stop on our way at Kwa Tseo and Iang-tsz-ch'iao, two small towns on the canal, to preach the gospel, sell books and distribute tracts. We hoped to make a quick trip, get into Yangchow early in the afternoon as possible; and after doing some preaching there, and spending the night with Bro. Pierce, to get an early start the next day on our return trip, not by the canal, but across the country on donkeys, stopping at three places to preach. This was our plan; but "man proposes and God disposes." In the first place, the wind was dead set against us, blowing strong and full in our faces, and bitter cold. Nothing better than to cross by tacking, a long, tedious process, making us more than three hours going as many miles to our first point, Kwa-Tseo. Here we made a short stop, sending the boat ahead; for there was no other course to pursue but the hard-beaten path on the canal side for "tracking," a very slow process; for the boatmen must get out and draw the boat for ten or twelve miles by pulling it through the water with a rope attached to the mast-head.

Stopping in Kwa Tseo to preach the gospel, we resorted, according to our custom, to a tea-shop, the place where the Chinese congregate in moments of leisure to drink tea and chat; or else they meet there to transact business, of both private and public nature, to tell and hear the news—for Chinese newspapers are very few and are confined to the larger cities and metropolitan business circles for the most part. Here at the tea-shop family quarrels are adjusted. If the mother of the family has any wrong, however delicate in its nature, or well suited for a curtain lecture according to Western rules of etiquette, here in the tea shop, where the crowd is largest, and the curious, scandal-loving ears are most numerous, is the place to adjust that matter for the usages of Chinese life not only admit of it, but expect it. It is not supposed that honest people in China will have secrets, or any matter they are not willing themselves to publish in the streets at the top of their voices. Besides, it is about the only effective way of reaching each other's consciences, understandings, hearts, or other objective organ aimed at, by gaining through such eloquence as tears, a rolling flood tide of words, frantic gestures and such other maniacal proceedings as may prove effective in gaining public sentiment in the suppliant's favor; for this is the part that must be played. The public is the judge and the court. If the defendant should by greater eloquence of the peculiarly native kind, or by any ruse—for the Chinaman is rich in such resources in the domain of trickery and small artifice—so succeed in gaining the all powerful sentiment, or will of the public, he is triumphant, and he turns immediately and plays the part of the truly wronged one. And so it is, until the Westerner wonders what is right and what is wrong, and on what a Chinaman's ideas of justice and equity are based. One thing is certain, the "Celestial" brethren know nothing of the sanctity of privacy in home life, his heart's thoughts and loves, unless he is plotting mischief; and he is so much the slave of public sentiment that oftentimes he will seek death to escape the ridicule of his fellows for reasons that seem to us utterly insignificant and absurd. But I am off the subject, and we have not reached that tea-shop yet. Well, the man has shut up shop and moved to another place, so we must look for other quarters. After having made arrangements with another tea shopkeeper for future arrangements, we hurry on to overtake our boat, that all this time has been creeping up the canal.

We soon overtake the "trackers" and pass them, walking briskly to keep warm, and hoping to reach the next place, Iang-tsz-chiao, before the boat does, eat dinner at a Chinese rice shop or restaurant and preach or talk the gospel awhile before the boat can overtake us. As we walk, we are talking to those whom we overtake about Jesus, or to one another of Jesus' sustaining grace. I am getting a number of new expressions from Bro. Hunnex, which I hope may prove helpful in preaching to the Chinese, and am anxious to get a chance to use them so as to fix them, and add to my stock in trade.

Our native teacher is giving us a few points. Here is a new one for me. The goddess of Mercy, one of the most popular of all the idols in this part of China, among her other acts of mercy, is accredited with the office of entering Hades and opening the doors of the flaming pit, releasing by stealth some unhappy victims and conveying them to the stream and ferrying them over to Nirvana, or the land of blessed spirits, I do not learn which. We are at Iang-tsz Ch'iao. What a mean and poverty-stricken look it has. Too true of China as a whole. No one knows how many thousands are starving for food this winter. Famine, floods and locusts are the chronic complaints of China.

We eat a very fair dinner of rice and eggs and some other little things by way of sauce, and preach the gospel for awhile to the people who crowd the door and interior of the rice shop where we sit. We speak of Christ the Bread of Life. The people listen well.

After an hour's time our boat comes up. On for Yangchow; the rest of the way is quite cold and cheerless. We move so slowly on the boat that we again get on the bank and walk briskly. About dusk we reach our mission compound in Yangchow, and receive a warm greeting, warm supper, warm fireside conversation with kindred spirits, and a warm bed for tired limbs. What a time for thanksgiving it is to find yourself so cared for by God's servants, after a hard day's toil in heathen darkness, indifference, and often times hatred and contempt. But before our supper is fairly over, our hearts are cheered by Bro. Ma's account of the work that Bro. Pierce and he are doing in some neighboring towns. Bro. Ma is Bro. Pierce's native helper, and it does my soul good to see how warm and zealous his heart seems to be in the work of preaching the gospel, and anything that comes to hand by way of serving the Master. He entreats us not to go back to Chinkiang the next day, but go with him to a town some ten miles further on, where the people have never so much as seen a foreigner, and have not heard the gospel. Bro. Hunnex and I agree to go.

So the next a. m. we start out, seven in all, including a Norwegian brother whom we met there on a similar evangelistic tour, and the native brethren who belonged to the three parties. We ride donkeys, and form quite a little caravan, ambling over the bare plains. Rather a cold day; but our hearts are warm with the prospect of telling the good news to-day to those who have never heard it. Eleven o'clock, and here we are at Shing Kieh, a small market town. But the place is fairly swarming with people, cows, hogs, &c., such things as they can trade in.

The remainder of my trip must remain over until next week.

The Proposed Monument—What Shall It Be?

Dear Recorder:—I have just read Brother John E. White's letter proposing a monument to the memory of the late Dr. William Royall, and wish to add a hearty amen to all that he says. But what shall this monument be? The Wake Forest boys in this institution have been discussing the matter for the last week or so, and are quite enthusiastic over it. Some of us believe the most fitting monument that could be raised to the memory of our beloved friend and teacher, would be to endow a chair of the Bible and Moral Philosophy in Wake Forest College to be known as "The William Royal Chair of the Bible and Moral Philosophy."

In a recent letter to a member of the class of '92, Dr. Royall referred to the fact that he was teaching the Moral Philosophy course this year, and spoke of how much more he enjoyed teaching that than he did his own department. I had the pleasure of spending about two hours with him in his lecture-room one day last spring, and he gave me a good many of his own reminiscences, especially in connection with his work with the young preachers at Wake Forest. He talked freely about a chair of the Bible also, and expressed himself as being burdened to see the Bible take its proper place in our College.

Would not the endowment of such a chair be but the carrying forward of a monument of which Dr. Royall himself has laid the foundation? What would it take to endow such a chair? We think $20,000 would do it. Now could this not be divided up into blocks of one hundred dollars each and two hundred sons of Wake Forest each become responsible for a block? We know a few of her sons here who would take a block and see that the money is raised.

Death of Francis J. Timberlake.

Dear Bro:—During the nine months of my pastorate at Louisburg, our church has lost some valuable members, mostly by letter, but some by death. The students who were at Wake Forest College in 1882–85, and all others who knew him, will be surprised and saddened at hearing of the death of Frank Timberlake, who died at this place on Wednesday, January 4, 1893.

He was a consistent member of the Baptist church, a young man full of promise, and whose life was singularly beautiful for its modesty and piety of character. He was quiet, courteous, and attentive to his business.

Since his death the following selection was found in the little book in which he kept his bank account:

"I shall pass through this world but once. Any good thing therefore that I can do, or any kindness that I can show to any human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer it or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

The above familiar quotation was a favorite with him—one he was often heard to repeat, and one the sentiment of which, in a quiet way, he put into practice. Such young men are always missed from business, the church, and, most of all, from the home where loving christian friends mourn their loss, but his gain.

May God's all-sufficient grace fill the vacant place in the home and hearts of loved ones.

W. B. MORTON.

Louisburg, January 17, 1893.

Rev. William Royall, D. D, LL. D.

I cannot restrain the first promptings of my heart to write a few words about Dr. Royall, whose sainted spirit has so unexpectedly passed from us.

At the late Convention in Raleigh, he looked the same noble man of God he always did. The last conversation I had with him was at Dr. Skinner's house after dinner, when he was inquiring about some books of interest to the young preachers at Wake Forest. What a blessing it has been to them all to come in touch with a man who possessed such a rare combination of balanced virtues. He moved upon a lofty plane of noble aspirations and ideals. His mind always seemed so purely spiritual that you felt yourself grow in stature by being with him. Through these last years I have often felt the influence of his tender interest and the inspiration of his noble character. His attainments were profound. He was a loving and painstaking teacher who drew his pupils to him. He was a rare and quickening preacher. But his exalted character rose clear above all other attainments. Every one fell under this noble, yet peruasive force that made itself felt all over the College hill in many a wayward boy's life, and all over the State in many a humble heart that longed to be better because of what Dr. Royall was. He was not perfect. No man is. But I am inclined to think of him as one who walked with God. God be praised for his work, for his blessed memory that shall always be sweet to one who loved him.

The Late Dr. William Royall.

Dear Recorder:—Your last issue brought a painful shock in announcing the death of Dr. Royall. I feel a sense of personal bereavement. A prince in Israel, great and good, was he. Rich intellectual endowment, broad and accurate scholarship, great dignity, yet easy, affable, genial as June, venerableness of age, but fullness of youth, impressive repose overlying oceans of righteous wrath, stalwart faith without fanaticism, devoutness without cant, wealth of sympathy, charity that "seeketh not her own," gentle greatness and the spirit of a child—all these you saw in him. It was impossible to know him and not hold him in reverent love. He was an old-fashioned gentleman, of whom, alas, too few remain. I mourn him as one greatly beloved, and shall cherish the memory of his friendship as a sacred thing.

I dined with him at Dr. Skinner's during the recent Convention and congratulated him on his vigorous appearance. He replied, as I remember, that he hadn't felt better for years. I perceived a tinge of melancholy, to be sure, in his unwonted quiet, but took it for the shadow of his recent bereavement. It must have been the shadow of the valley. But no, that could not be. For such as he the valley has no shadow, and the even-tide is light. He labored till the sun set and then he slept. He slept and awoke, and behold it was day.

R. T. VANN.

From Chapel Hill.

Sickness alone has kept me back from laying a simple tribute on the grave of Dr. William Royall. You know that the University conferred on him his Doctorate of Laws.

One of my two pleasant visits to Wake Forest was made specially delightful by association with this beautiful and scholarly spirit. We saw verified in him Augustine's conception of "the true Shekinah, the visible presence of God on earth," a redeemed man reflecting the light of heaven. What a legacy and benediction for the young men of the College and for us all!

Our pastor, Dr. Carroll, is rallying well from the effects of his recent accident and doing his duty throughout the inclement season. The church is blessed in his sound and inspiring ministrations.

We deeply regret the departure of Rev. J. C. Hocutt. His churches had grown largely under his wise and consecrated leadership, and his excellent character had endeared him to all. But we congratulate Burlington.

THOS. HUME.

The Need of Houses of Worship in Florida.

I am sure that our greatest need just now is houses of worship for Baptists. The material interests of the State are developing, its salubrious climate becoming better known, so that for reasons of health and wealth, the country is filling up with new towns rising up here and there as if by magic. The denomination that is first to build respectable and comfortable houses at such places, of course has greatly the advantage. In some of our new towns we were the first, or with the first, in building as in DeLand, Kissimmee and other places; and now we have self-sustaining and mission-supporting churches, some of them now having to enlarge their houses.

I could use profitably and judiciously, $50,000 in six months at Appalachicola, Carrabelle, Cedar Keys, St. Petersburg, Braidentown, Palmetto, Punta Gorda, and Fort Myers, on the Gulf coast and Titusville (a county town), Daytona, New Smyrna and St. Augustine, also a county town, and the oldest place on the continent, and one of the most largely attended resorts in the Union. Besides these there are numbers of places in the interior where we cannot make any progress or establish ourselves till a house can be had, and the little nucleus, sometimes organized and sometimes not, cannot build without help in gifts or loans. Our people are willing, but the demands are larger in proportion to our numbers and means, than in most of the older States. Besides a good many of our churches in the larger places, as Lake City, Gainesville, Orlando, and Tampa, are compelled to build anew, or else much enlarge and improve their houses, and so cannot help others, but need help themselves, as in Jacksonville especially, and Pensacola.

During the ten years of our work in the State, more has been done in permanently establishing the cause in important places, by aiding in the building of houses of worship, than by sending out missionaries, which, in many cases, amounts to but little till a house is built. In many of the places named above, and others not named, we would now have had effective churches could we have built houses some years ago.

Resolutions Passed by the Roxboro Baptist Church.

WHEREAS, Elder J. H. Lamberth has resigned the pastorate of this church he has served for nearly eight years, therefore,

Resolved, That we will ever hold him in affectionate rememberance for his work's sake among us; that our best wishes and most earnest prayers shall follow him for his personal welfare and continued success in the Lord's work; and that we recommend him to those among whom he may go as an efficient laborer in the Lord's vineyard and worthy of their confidence and esteem.

Ordered that the foregoing be entered as part of records of this church and a copy furnished the BIBLICAL RECORDER and the Person County Courier for publication.

The Centennial of Missions.

As a member of the Centennial Committee recently appointed by the State Convention, I desire to emphasize some points made in the statement recently published by the chairman.

First, in raising an amount for Permanent Centennial Fund, it is the universal sentiment that nothing must be done to jeopardize the raising of money for the regular work. There is need for enlargement of contributions not only to maintain the work in its present ratio of advancement, but also to send out a large number of new missionaries to the foreign field.

Second, to make the advance noteworthy and complete along all lines, an effort is making in all our Southern States to raise a Centennial Fund for permanent work, the importance of which should not be underrated. If the alternative were presented that either the regular work or the permanent fund effort must go to the wall, by all means let it be the latter.

But is there such an alternative? We believe there is not.

Third, how are we, in the three months remaining, to bring up the contributions to the regular work, and raise the $15,000 besides? This is a practical and difficult question and can only be met in a practical way. The two objects must not be confused, and they must not clash.

The Chapel Card plan affords the easiest, if not the only solution, because it affords an opportunity of soliciting a small contribution from our entire membership.

About two thirds of the Baptists in the State, or over 100,000, are women. The Central Committee of Woman's Mission Societies have been requested and have kindly consented to aid us in this matter. One woman in every Baptist church in the State will be asked to act with the Central Committee in an effort to secure three bricks or thirty cents from every Baptist woman and one brick or ten cents from every child for the Permanent Fund. These amounts when raised are to be credited to the respective churches and forwarded to Bro. Boushall, our mission treasurer.

The name of every woman and child thus contributing is to be enrolled in a book which is to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of the Convention for reference during the years to come. There will be a Roll of Honor and a Roll of Most Honorable Mention for those persons who give up to, or beyond, certain amounts that will be indicated.

Will not the pastors throughout the State encourage the women in this noble effort?

With such a co-operation as this, the $15,000 for Permanent Fund can be raised, and our regular collections for the Boards be taken as usual, with this advantage that the general interest aroused by the Centennial work will result in enlarged contributions.

How to Have Our Roads Worked.

This seems to be a hard question to decide as to the best plan in having our public roads worked. But there is one thing I have found out in traveling over the country to my churches, namely, bad roads, and in many places, at certain seasons, almost impassable roads with a vehicle.

I think it would be the proper thing for the Legislature to make provision for better roads.

I have thought on this subject a good deal, for I am accustomed to travel much on the roads. I believe a good way to raise money to pay for working the roads would be by a system of toll gates, and have every one who travels the roads pay a fare at every gate—a price each for the mounted man, for the wagon and team, for the buggy, and for the footman. By this plan, every one would pay according to the manner in which he travels. Those who now work the roads have little to do in wearing them out.

If this plan is not a good one, then we want better roads on some other plan.

Learning by Practice.

We learn by doing. We never get to understand the Bible merely by studying it. It will never reveal itself to us until we begin to do what it teaches. He that seeks to obey it shall know it. Many people have the impression that there is something occult and mysterious about the words of the Scriptures. But this impression vanishes if they accept the teachings of the Bible and begin to fashion their lives according to them. Many christians will recall how dim and obscure faith in Jesus Christ seemed before they believed, and then how simple and clear it appeared after they had begun to follow the Saviour.

The same principle is found in other kinds of learning besides that of spiritual truth. A pupil wants to learn music. He may get books and a teacher and become familiar with all the principles; but he can never become a musician save by practice. One will never become an artist merely by studying the rules and principles of art; he must take his brush and paint as he studies.

So it is with the Bible. You read a command with a promise annexed. You say: "I cannot understand that. I cannot see how, if I do so and so, this shall be the result." While this is your attitude, the truth will not become plain to you. But if you accept the teaching as a revealing of a fragment of God's will for you, and begin doing it, light will break from it. As you do the teaching you will know.—J. R. Miller, D. D., in Sunday school Times.

Let Your Light So Shine.

A Japanese Senator recently got hold of a copy of an exposition of part of the Bible. Reading it attentively, he pronounced christianity a fine thing in theory, but the question was, Would it work practically? Thinking about it, he became dissatisfied with his life, and while in this state took a trip from Okayama to Ozaka. On the same steamer was Miss Barrows, and he heard she was a christian, and so watched her. Her deportment so impressed him that, though not a word passed between them, he was convinced that christianity was right in practice, as well as good in theory, and on returning home he hunted up a missionary and made public profession of faith, and has since been active in persuading others. Miss Barrows did not know she was watched, or that anything special depended on her deportment. Had she behaved as many church members behave, especially when away from home, this Japanese Senator would have been repelled, and would probably have reached the conclusion that, however fair christianity might be in theory, it was a failure in practice. We never know what eyes are upon us. "Let your light shine."—Selected.

Pay Your Debts.

At the beginning of the new year, when it is general pay-day and there is a strain all around, it is more incumbent upon everybody to meet obligations promptly and so ease the situation. There is a good deal of complaint that payments are slow. This ought not to be the case, for the year has been fairly prosperous. A little consideration for what is due to each other would help to make things pleasant all around. One debt paid enables the creditor in his turn to pay another, and so on through a whole line of obligations. Every man or woman engaged in business or in any profession realizes how important it is for everybody to do the best that may be done to pay up for the common good, and every debtor who does so enables some one else to follow suit. Let there be a lively emulation in doing good to each other.—Baltimore Sun.

A Donation and a Danger.

Mr. Rockefeller, a Croesus of the Standard Oil magnates, has given nearly four million dollars, a minor fraction of his huge fortune, to the Chicago University. Mr. Gould hugged his millions even to the end, clinging to them with clammy fingers, fearing a farthing might fall to charity or education. Mr. Rockefeller does not, by will, rob his heirs to endow a college, but depletes his own purse in the interest of a worthy public object. He means well. His deed shows how far he has gone beyond the habits of the hog. Emptying one's self of money, brain force, kind speech for others is progress along the path Jehovah treads. God cannot concern himself a moment save for others. There must be complete self-effacement in Deity. The swine straddle the trough of swill to secure it for self.

The noble philanthropist has the best intentions. There is danger in endowing with millions a seat of learning. Who can guarantee against the germs of scientific sin, subtile, "scholarly," scattered in the food that nourishes the young mind? A microscopic mote floating from an infected "chair" carries the plague into the heart. Would that Mr. Rockefeller could fit in the vestibule of his University a spray of germicide for his faculty. Should that great school become, as elsewhere, a hatchery for cocatrice eggs, better he had never been born or risen to ruin souls.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

The practice of pitting a man's private virtues against his public sins, in obituary estimates, tends to confuse moral distinctions. A man's character is not built like an ocean steamship in water-tight compartments. Each man's life is a unity. There is an underlying principle which explains both his private and public life, and we apprehend that, we do not know a man. We are quite familiar with the type which is all sanctity in public and far from a saint in private. Just now, however, another type is evolving, [illegible] of the man who is all hatred and self-seeking in public [illegible] gal the moment he crosses [illegible] puts on his dressing-gown [illegible] Watterson.

Yes, we need revivals, such as will stir our emotional nature to its deepest depths. Some of the older brethren now living well remember how the preaching of our forerunners took hold of the emotional nature of their hearers. God's people rejoiced because they were happy, and sinners were convicted of sin and converted. There was such a thing then as conviction for sin, such a thing as repentance—godly sorrow for sin, self abhorance and self-condemnation; such a thing as feeling, yes feeling the burden of sin; such a thing as struggling for deliverance from the power and dominion of sin; such a thing as passing from darkness into light.

When meetings were in progress where these exercises were experienced, whoever came within the assembly of God's people, whether saint or sinner, felt the divine influence. The Lord's people felt the drawing, refreshing, uplifting influence. There was something that took hold of the spirit, and something in the spirit that answered back to that influence. That influence was nothing less than the divine Spirit, and that something in the child of God that answered back to that influence was the regenerated soul touched and revived by the Spirit. Depend upon it, "spiritual things are spiritually discerned."

And while the Lord's people, in olden time, were thus exercised, the unregenerate were exercised too. They felt an unusual and peculiar influence. It was depressing to them. They felt that such a place was no place for them. They listened to the preaching with a kind of mysterious awe. It cut to the quick like the piercing of a sword. And the singing was like waves of heavenly zephyr. Taken all together, they felt like such a place was no place for them, and yet despite their resolves to stay away, they would continue to go; and despite their effort to resist and throw off impressions, impressions would come, until they grew into strong conviction for sin, and men were not ashamed to manifest their feeling and seek relief by any means presented. And when relief came they found it out. Men and women were converted in those days, and they gave evidence of a new heart by a new life.

Such is a faint outline of what seems to me a revival of religion superinduced by the Spirit. But how is it now. Well, the evangelist is sent for, the choir is well trained; the workers are all arranged and everything is drilled with as much care and precision as the drill master drills his squad of soldiers with "hep," "hep." Feeling is preached against, very little is said about conviction for sin, humility and repentance, but little emphasis is placed on the work of the Spirit, but much is said about human volition, free-will, how much man can do, and very little about what God must do for us; the people are told that they must believe, and the kind of faith that is preached is that of the natural man. Things sometimes go on in this way for days or nights as the case may be, and no one is moved. The preaching is according to the inch guage rule, very precise, very scientific; the singing is very artistic and entertaining, not a tear is shed, no one is moved. Well, what is the matter? The truth is, if the character of the whole performance is well scrutinized, the preaching, the manipulations, and everything, it will be seen that the Lord has virtually been asked to stand aside, and he has stood aside. The Spirit has not been honored, but grieved, and his power has been withheld. But when nothing else can be done, an onslaught is made on the children, and a parcel of little boys and girls are induced to make some sort of manifestation, and very soon they are put down as converts, received into the church and baptized, and not a grown person in the whole crowd. At one of these meetings a little girl said to her mother, "Ma, I believe I will make a profession of religion." Her ma happened to have been brought up under a different regime, and said: "Daughter, you have never been convicted of sin, and it would be wrong for you to make a profession of religion." Another little girl was talked to by the pastor, who was young and inexperienced, and asked if she did not love Jesus. Well, Jesus Christ was her papa's and mama's Saviour, and she did not know how to say anything else than "yes." "Well," said the pastor, "don't you want to be baptized and be a member of the church?" "No," she said, "I dont want to be baptized." After a while when the little girl had arrived to more maturity, a brother came along and preached who was brought up under the old constitution, and she was convicted and converted, and then she wanted to be baptized without being begged into it, and was baptized.

This is the way things are going on in some of our churches. No wonder some of our more thoughtful brethren go with their heads bowed down as under a heavy burden. Not many years ago I met a brother preacher whose praise is in all the churches, and the first thing he said after the usual salutation, was that he was distressed at so many unconverted people getting into our churches. If any one will attend some of the modern so-called revivals and observe with a tolerable degree of scrutiny, he will get the key to the whole thing. This old scribe has been at some such meetings, and for the life of him could not see where the revival part came in.

Too many of our pastors, especially the younger ones, are too ready to fall into the ways of professional evangelists; and the above remarks are as applicable to them as to the evangelist.

As to the conversion of children, of course I believe they can be converted by the Spirit of God just the same and just as easily as a grown person can, but observation teaches me that in most cases where special appeals are made to them they are moved more by childish sympathy than by the Spirit. Many have made profession under the tender years of childhood, and when arrived at years of maturity gave proof that they had no religion, that my faith is very much shaken in the propriety of making special appeals to them, and I always feel badly when I see a number of them profess conversion and unite with the church, and not one grown person among them. The truth is, as it appears to me, where the Spirit is at work it is just as easy for him to convict and convert grown-up people as children, and that is not all, I believe he does it.

It may be that I am an old fogy; be that as it may, still I am unable to see how there can be a revival of genuine religion without the Spirit's power, and when in a revival meeting I want to feel that power in its softening and subduing influence on my own heart, which at best is too hard. Do not understand me to say or to intimate that we have no such meetings in modern times. We have. I have been present at them, and they did me good. And I have been present at other meetings called revivals that did me no good at all. If there was any spirituality I could not get hold of it. That may have been my own fault or misfortune, but just what I am in this respect I can't help. It has been more than fifty years since I trust the Lord showed me my sinful condition and brought me to repentance and faith and hope, and that same conversion which I experienced then has been with me all these years, and all along through my experience there has been an answering of spirit to religious meetings that I have attended and to preaching that I have heard, and there has been the wanting of such answering of spirit. And, now, understand me again: I am as far from advocating and enjoying noise and confusion as the most fastidious, or the most learned theologian, that may chance to read these lines. If any one wants any such stuff he need not call on this

OLD MAN.

It Helps.

We should humbly thank God for any organization which gives the Bible and the purely-preached gospel to our fellowmen. Among existing missionary agencies, the American Baptist Publication Society holds a unique and prominent place. Very much of the missionary spirit now pervading the Baptist churches of our whole country has been inspired, developed, and stimulated by the work of the Society. Through this agency pastors have received donations of books, feeble Sunday schools have been presented with libraries, colporteurs have been paid to carry and distribute millions of books, tracts, etc., and the Bible has been given to the poor. This, all this, is missionary work pure and simple, and that, too, of the most important, permanent, and productive character. By just so much as any individual, church, or Sunday-school patronizes or contributes to the Society, by so much do they become sharers in all this heaven appointed work.

God mingles the better with the sweet in this life, to set us seeking another life where there shall be sweet alone.—Augustine.

Driving the Brain

at the expense of the Body. While we drive the brain we must build up the body. Exercise, pure air—foods that make healthy flesh—refreshing sleep—such are methods. When loss of flesh, strength and nerve become apparent your physician will doubtless tell you that the quickest builder of all three is

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

The Value of the Nicaragua Canal to Missionary and Mercantile Interests.

In 1815, at the close of the wars of Napoleon, when the allied powers divided out the territory of Europe, England was satisfied with the strong military points of Heligoland, Gibralta, Malta, Corfu and Aden.

In 1879 the Russians had overrun Turkey and were in sight of the walls of Constantinople, the Sultan, in despair, threatened to unfurl the banner of the prophet, but this did not scare the Russian.

At this juncture Disraeli sent a cablegram to the Viceroy of India, who quickly furnished him, via the Suez canal, 10,000 sikhs and Ghoorkas, who were the vanguard of a million more if required. The British did not seize the island of Militene at the north of the Dardanelles, thereby violating treaties, but placed these troops on Malta 1,000 miles west of Port Said, the place they had selected fifty years before. The Russians saw at once that if they did not stop the attack on Constantinople, they would have to fight it out on the shores of the Black Sea, not at the Pass of Khyber. These troops did not fire a gun, but peace was made, and the treaty of Berlin was signed. The word of an Englishman with his strong military points holding the Suez canal had more military weight than the banner of the Prophet. Thousands of lives, and millions of dollars were saved.

Let the United States build the Nicaragua canal, and she holds one of these great strategic points of the world. We have thousands of missionaries all over the East, we have mercantile ventures all around the Pacific, if there should be any disturbance in that part of the world, either by national quarrels or rebellions in any of the half civilized nations, our missionaries and merchants would be in danger. Ten thousand troops and a fleet of ironclads placed in Lake Nicaragua would let the world understand that 65,000,000 of Americans intend that their missionaries shall be respected and their mercantile interests protected.

England expended millions of money and thousands of lives to obtain her military points, and annually pays out more money to maintain these military points than the interest will be on the money it will take to build the Nicaragua canal. The United States can get the canal simply by the use of their credit. It will not cost her one cent of money. The government will get four fifths of the stock for nothing, and we have been dillydallying with the problem for three hundred years. It only needs that any man who cares for his missionaries or his country should raise his voice and urge the politician to attend to it, and attend to it now. Things will not rest; if we do not do it some one else will, and then we will have to fight for it.—Cor. State Chronicle.

Golden Silence.

Long ago wise men perceived the idea that "while we are masters of our unspoken words, our spoken words are masters of us, and that silence may sometimes be more serviceable than speech. He is a wise man who can practice self-restraint at the right time. It may have been regretted, and having to remember hasty words which he would gladly recall and have unsaid. Silence may sometimes be the most effectual reply to unjust reproach; for actions speak louder than words, and will convince the gainsayer more quickly than mere argument. Nor is silence necessarily a sign of cowardice, though there is such a thing as cowardly refusal to speak up where a principle is involved. It may often require the highest sort of moral courage to press the lips tightly together, and keep down the ready retort, at the risk of being misjudged. Many a man regrets for years afterward that he forgot at a critical time to pray, "Set a watch, O Lord before my mouth; keep the door of my lips," "Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soul from troubles."—Moravian.

Useful Suggestions.

Take fresh paint out of wearing apparel by rubbing with gasoline.

Grease spots in cloth may be taken out by applying a solution of salt in alcohol.

Nails may be driven into hard wood without bending double if first dipped in lard or oil.

Lemons will be kept fresh for weeks if covered with water; the water must be changed often.

When baking cakes, set a dish of water in the oven with them, and they will not be in much danger from scorching.—Good Housekeeping.

When we cannot do what we would in religion we must do as we can, and God will accept us.—Henry.

In the morning fix thy good purpose, and at night examine thyself what thou hast done, and how thou hast behaved thyself in word, deed, and thought; for in these perhaps thou hast oftentimes offended both God and thy neighbor.—Thos. A. Kempis.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure, be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Centennial Chapel Cards and Certificates.

For use of Sunday schools the Centennial Chapel Cards and Certificates may be obtained free, in any number required, by sending to Maryland Baptist Mission Rooms, No ten East Fayette Street, Baltimore. A circular to Sunday-schools from the Home and Foreign Boards, and the leaflet "Annie's Bricks," will be sent with each order. Should a larger distribution of the leaflet be desired, it can be purchased at two cents per copy.

Woman's Mission Societies or individuals in North Carolina may obtain the Chapel Cards and Certificates free by applying to the Central Committee, Miss Fannie E. Heck, Raleigh, N. C.

The article, "Prayer In and For the Missionary Meeting," published in the RECORDER of January 4th, was written by Mrs. J. Hartwell Edwards of Goldsboro, one of our most earnest and thoughtful mission workers, and read by her before the Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies, Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 10th, 1892.

How to Make a Mission Band a Success.

[Read by Mrs. J. J. Riddick, Winston, before the Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies, Raleigh, Dec. 12, 1892.]

It has been wisely said "That to the truly developed woman, there always is, there always must be opportunity"—opportunity to be, to do, and to nobly endure; and whether her work be greeted by the applause of thousands or in silence, it cannot be called humble, if it meets the approving gaze of heaven. When all the excitement of our progressive age shall have passed into oblivion, and when those who have made themselves perishable reputations shall have been laid to rest, with the stately marble as their only monument, it may be that some [illegible] neither inherited nor received home training, will utter thoughts that will enlighten the heathen in his darkness, thus proving himself to be a living monument to the little Sunbeam Society where he first learned the grand results of mission work. Much has been said and done along this line, and while many useful programs have been distributed for the purpose of aiding us in our work, it is impossible to successfully follow any one, as the children, who compose our societies, will gradually lose interest, if the exercises are not varied.

They readily take to music, and by using simple songs, they all will unite heartily in singing.

A study of the lives and characters of our noble missionaries, who have been called from their stages of usefulness to take their places in the silent halls of death, is both interesting and instructive, while a history of the countries in which we have missionaries stationed, reveals to them the needs of these countries, if we would have them saved. It is advisable to allow the older and most intelligent members of the class to write an essay on the country which they are studying; while another may get up a geographical sketch of this same country. It also adds to the interest to go fully into the manners and customs of the people, and especially if you will tell them something of the children.

The blackboard analysis also makes lasting impressions on the younger minds, especially when the different colored chalks are used in illustrations.

At times the children seem restless and hard to interest. At such times, a short missionary story read or related will bring immediate relief. At other times, an informal meeting will prove very successful. If you will consult the children on some undertaking you may have in view, it is astonishing how readily they will give advice. How liberal they become, and last, but not least, how enthusiastic they will be in this their work.

Further enlargement on this subject would only prove superfluous, since each society has its own demands. Sisters! if we will all do our duty in our respective societies, with God's blessing, his recording angel, not many years hence, may record many a noble sacrifice and grand achievement.

S. B. C. Work in Italy.

As far back as 1850, the attention of our Foreign Board at Richmond was turned towards Europe. France and Switzerland were thought of as important fields, but it was well nigh twenty years before their thoughts concerning Catholic Europe chrystalized into action. In 1870, Rev. Franklin Wilson, D. D., of Baltimore, who had long been much interested in Italy as an inviting field for Baptists, delivered an address on Italy at the Northern Anniversaries in Philadelphia. Our Foreign Mission Society heard this address, was greatly impressed by it, and shortly afterwards the Board resolved to begin a work so soon as the way should open.

The following statistics, from the report of the Board in 1891, will give a bird's eye view of the work. Main stations 12, out stations 56, workers 24, organized churches 14, members 277, baptized during the year 25, contributions 1,645 francs (about $329)

That Italy is a most difficult field is generally conceded. The "Middle Kingdom" has often been supposed to offer greater obstacles to the kingdom of Christ than any other country; but Dr. Wm. Ashmore, for more than twenty-five years a missionary in that land, declared the field in Italy was harder and less hopeful than that in China. The Italian government, far from persecuting either the Pope or the Catholic church, accords to them larger privileges than either Spain, France, Bavaria, or Austria. In Italy alone of these several countries has the Pope the right to appoint bishops and to issue bulls without the sanction of the government. Leo XIII, no less than Humbert I, is inviolate in his person. The law of the Papal Guarantees contains the following liberal provisions for the maintenance of the Vatican: "An attack directed against the person of the Sovereign Pontiff and any instigation to commit such attack, is punishable by the same penalties as those established in the case of an attack against the person of the King."

The attention of the christian world has been called to the crisis in Japan. The situation in Italy is somewhat similar. Besides the obstacles which confront us in common with other evangelical workers, we, as Baptists, hold views which add to our difficulties. Yet Baptist principles are as valuable to religious life in Italy as they have been in our own country.—George Braxton Taylor.

Chapel Building in Italy.

Chapels will give an air of permanency to the work, and make both friend and foe feel that we have come to stay. In mission work few things are more important than this. The people need to be impressed with the fact that the undertaking is not a mere experiment, likely to be abandoned by any time, but something so [illegible] that it cannot be otherwise than permanent.

"But why do not Italians build their own chapels?" To any who may be disposed to ask this question, I would say in reply, is it not true that even in America, the most prosperous and the most evangelical of all lands, hundreds of congregations are unable to build their own church houses, and are compelled to appeal for outside aid? How many large and prosperous churches owe their prosperity and continued existence largely to timely aid received years ago. It must also be borne in mind that in this country there are no frame buildings, and the stone work required by law, renders impossible the erection of those inexpensive church houses to be found in so many country places in America. Then let me remind you that, at most of our stations, our membership is comparatively small and very poor.—John H. Eager.

What Makes a Preacher.

Our Sunday school lesson this week shows us, among other things, an example of true preaching. The remnant that had returned from Babylon under Joshua, the high priest, and Zerubbabel, the prince, had had their waning courage revived by the appeals of Haggai, but the work of rebuilding the Temple took a new impetus when the young Zechariah stood forth with an account of his visions.

The essential idea of preaching is finely expressed in this narrative. Zechariah conveys to the people the visions God had given him. And that is what preaching is, the message of God to men through a man. A great deal passes for preaching to-day that can not by any stretch of imagination come within the scope of such a definition. We call lectures upon all sorts of historical and religious topics preaching; we call telling people what they already know preaching; we call moral instructions preaching. But the distinctive thing which separates a sermon from every other kind of discourse is that it is a message.

The true preacher is a man of visions. He may not be more learned than many of his hearers. They may easily surpass him in many acquirements, but the thing in which he surpasses them is in the breadth and clearness of his spiritual outlook. He has seen the revelation of God in his own soul, in nature and in the written word, and that revelation has given him a message. Our fathers made much of "a call to the ministry." We always miss it when we ordain a man, no matter what his recommendations, or attainments, or promise of usefulness, whose inner life does not respond to such a call. He may make an excellent lecturer, professor or writer, but he will not be a prophet, he will not bring a message from God to his hearers.

But some one says: "Have not the days of revelation passed, is not the Bible finished?" The Bible, to be sure, is all written, but it is not all interpreted or experienced. From the rock of the most familiar text may gush living water at the word of a prophet. Our newspapers and religious conventions are occupied with much silly talk about the decline of the pulpit. The days of the pulpit essayist are indeed passing, and the sooner they pass completely the better. But as long as human nature, with its longings and strivings and sins, is bound by mystic ties to the Father of Spirits, the days of the preacher with a divine message are in no danger of passing.

And herein is the authority of the preacher. It is not conventional or professional or official, it is the authority of a divine messenger. The more a preacher claims authority, the more men repudiate it. But the more certain he makes it that he brings a divine message, the more spontaneously do his hearers recognize his right to command them. It has often been asked how the Hebrews came to recognize their prophets. The best answer to that question is that they recognized them because they could not help it.

The man who has no vision, no message, may well hesitate to call himself or let others call him a preacher. And we may well extend the most open-minded welcome to the man with a vision from God, whether he be a rude herdsman like Amos or a sagacious and imperial genius like Isaiah. "Follow after love; yet desire earnestly spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy."—Boston Watchman.

"An Excellent Spine."

A Sunday-school teacher once called on one of his scholars to read the third verse of the sixth chapter of Daniel, from which the lesson was taken. The verse reads, "Then this Daniel was preferred before the presidents and princes, because an excellent spirit was in him. And the king sought to set him over the whole realm." The scholar, not being the best reader in the school, gave a slightly revised version of the text, as follows: "Then this Daniel was preferred before the presidents and princes, because an excellent spine was in him."

It is very likely that the revision produced a smile; but it also conveyed a lesson. A man without "an excellent spine" makes a very poor christian, and would never "dare to be a Daniel," or "dare to stand alone." The little boy expressed just what many christians need at the present day. There are some who are willing to sing, "Dare to be a Daniel, dare to stand alone," but they lack Daniel's "excellent spine," and so they will never be Daniels, and will not be likely to stand alone. May God raise up more men like Daniel; men who fear God and work righteousness; men of an excellent spine—men who have backbone.—World's Crisis.

The Advantages of Conversation.

The most agreeable way of getting information is by conversation. If you talk with any intelligent person, who can express clearly his ideas on any subject in which you are interested, you can ask questions, you can have explanations, you can go over the ground until you thoroughly understand it, and searching out in this way, in the mind of another, a thing which you earnestly desire to know, you are more likely to remember it and to profit by it. This is why a competent teacher is better than any text book. Besides, talk inspires both the speaker and the listener—the one becomes more eager to know and the other more eager to communicate.—Ex.

"Stop my Paper."

The Lutheran Observer says: Now a newspaper, in one aspect, is something like a hotel table. It presents to its readers literary viands and views from many different writers and many different subjects, to suit many different persons of many different tastes. There is something for the old and the young; for ministers and laymen, for parents and children, for the poetic and the prosaic, for the practical and devotional; and, in short, for "all sorts and conditions of men"—and women, too. If, now, one of these classes of persons object to articles suited for any of the other classes, and rejects a newspaper on that account, he is just as unreasonable in this as if he refused to take his dinner at a hotel table because he dislikes some article of food which others enjoy.

The Lord's Prayer and the Drink License.

Think of praying, "Hallowed by thy name," and then voting to license the drink traffic, which causes God's name to be continually blasphemed.

"Thy will be done," and then voting that it shall not be done.

"Lead us not into temptation," and then voting to place temptation in every one's path.

"Deliver us from evil," and then voting for the greatest of evils, if so be that a little money may come to the town treasury.

"Give us this day our daily bread," and voting to license that which takes the bread from thousands.—Exchange.

Laughter.

In his "Problems of Health," Dr. Green says that there is not the remotest corner or inlet of the minute blood vessels of the human body that does not feel some wavelet from the convulsions occasioned by good hearty laughter. The life principle of the central man is shaken to the innermost depths, sending new tides of life and strength to the surface, thus materially tending to insure good health to the persons who indulge therein. The blood moves more rapidly and conveys a different impression to all organs of the body, as it visits them on the particular mystic journey when the man is laughing from what it does at other times. For this reason every good hearty laugh in which a person indulges tends to lengthen his life, conveying as it does, new distinct stimulus to the vital forces.

e Foundation Stones in the Character of Children.

Unhappy and undisciplined homes are the Irons of great iniquity. Parents harsh cruel on the one hand, or on the other d loose in their government, are raising a generation of vipers. A home where lding and fretfulness are dominant, is od relation to the gallows and the peni- tiary! Petulance is a serpent that crawls into the family nursery sometimes and shes everything. Why, there are parents o even make religion disgusting to their ldren. They scold them for not loving rist. They have an exasperating way of g their duty. Blessed is the family al at which the children kneel. Blessed is family altar at which the children kneel. ssed is the cradle in which the christian ther rocks the christian child. Blessed he song the little ones sing at nightfall n sleep is closing the eyes and loosen- the hand from the toy on the pillow. ssed is that mother whose every heart- ob is a prayer for her children's welfare. e world grows old, and the stars will se to illuminate it, and the waters to re h it, and the mountains to guard it, and long story of sin and shame and glory triumph will turn to ashes; but influen- that started in the early home roll on up through all eternity—blooming in all joy, waving in all the triumph, exulting all the song, or shrinking back into all darkness. Father, mother, which way you leading your children?—Talmage.

A Good Heart.

A waif of a boy was eating a stale half- on the street corner yesterday, with air of a starveling, says the Detroit Free ss, when a stray dog came along and nched at his feet. The hungry look re- ined in the boy's eyes, but he glanced n at the vagabond dog, and said in a ndly way:

"Wot you want? This ain't no bone. Git!"

The dog moved off a little, and again it nched and looked wistfully at the food.

"Say, do yer want this wuss nor I do?" ed the waif. "Speak, can't yer?"

The dog gave a quick bark, and the boy w him the rest of the loaf.

"Nuff said," he remarked, as he watched eat ravenously. "I ain't the feller to a pard in trouble."

And the boy went off one way and the he had befriended another, but the better the encounter.

On the Wrong Foot.

enator Vest has stepped from his Senato- pedestal to make an attack in our morn- daily upon the Commissioner of Indian airs for bigotry, at the same time alleging the Jesuits have done more for the ad- cement of the Indians toward civiliza- and christianity than all other agen- . He instances the St. Ignatius mission ool as an illustration of what is being e by the Catholics, especially in teaching Indians to work. I must tell you there ot a word of truth in this assertion, as I e found out by studying for years the ecories and Repartimentos of that church oth Americans.

ow, there are in the Senator's meal tub, cats instead of one. The first is the rification of the Catholic methods of ching. The other is a bid for a large propriation. As to the first, I wish you ld see a set of text books used in these sion schools, and compare them with the ks at Carlisle, say. The result of Jesuit ching may be seen in the missions of Cal- nia—it is simply propagandism. The ign of the public school system among ians is to make them independent bread ners, to teach them good English, and to k out for themselves, to inculcate patri- m and love for the flag, to instil the ciples of honor, fidelity, and practical rality, to destroy false notions of the infe- rity of women by co education, to create ve for our public school system, to blend ny tribes together, and to engender a e sympathy and co-operation which will helpful in the future. Now, the contract ool system is in its results a scheme of elytting. Less than $4,000,000 have gone of the treasury during eight years for de- minational schools and of this $3,366,416 s drawn out by Catholics. The Commis- ner is called a bigot for saying it is wrong, standing on the good, old, safe Baptist trine of separation of Church and State, aiming to introduce civil service and blic schools, and the English language o Indian education.—O. M. T., in Ex- miner.

Cost of Building Railroads.

The report of the Railroad Commission, says The North Carolinian, will be one of the most valuable books ever printed in the State, and will contain much interesting information. It gives the number of persons employed on the railroads, and they are employed as follows:

Wilmington & Weldon,	1,224
Carolina Central,	657
Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley,	545
Georgia, Carolina & Northern (few in North Carolina),	835
Western North Carolina,	776
Wilmington, Columbia & Augusta (few in North Carolina)	857

It will also give the average cost of construction, per mile, of the sixty-two railways in the State. The following are the highest:

Western North Carolina,	$54,393
Petersburg,	52,253
North Carolina Midland,	40,000
Oxford & Henderson,	40,649
Statesville & Western,	40,000
Wilmington, Onslow & East Carolina	33,568
Seaboard & Roanoke,	31,378
Yadkin,	30,243
Oxford & Clarksville,	30,975
Cheraw & Salisbury,	30,147
Atlantic & Danville,	40,870

The others are under $30,000. Here are some that may be termed the inexpensive roads:

Hamilton,	$ 588
Cashie & Roanoke,	1,000
Jamesville & Washington,	1,000
Cashie & Chowan,	1,857
Carthage,	4,120
Atlanta & Charlotte Air-Line,	4,282

Growing Roses.

There is a world of pleasure to be derived from a garden full of roses; even a single flower, in a little red pot, will brighten the home and bring good cheer. With the right kind of plants there is no difficulty in the way of everybody having the choicest roses: a little soil, water and sunshine is the only care they require, and they amply repay for the slight trouble and expense. Perhaps the best roses for home culture are those grown by Dingee & Conard Company at West Grove, Pa. For twenty-five years this firm has been propagating roses of every variety on their own roots and sending them by mail to every part of the land. When the plant leaves their hands it is ready to thrive and bloom in pot or garden. This firm publishes the illustrated "Guide To Rose Culture," which contains complete instructions for growing flowers of all kinds, and much other information interesting and valuable to the lover of flowers. They offer to send it free, and enclose a specimen copy of their floral magazine, "Success With Flowers," to all who make application.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Raleigh Affairs.

Gov. Carr has appointed Mr. Samuel F. Telfair as his Private Secretary, and Mr. Charles L. Hinton as Executive Clerk.

The firm of Moore & Watson, Subscription Book publishers, Raleigh, N. C., has been dissolved and the business reorganized under the firm named The Southern Publishing Company.

Gen. James D. Glenn, Adjutant General; Col. A. L. Smith, Inspector General, and Col. E. G. Harrell, Quartermaster General, of the North Carolina State Guard, have tendered their resignations to Gov. Carr, to take effect as soon as it shall be agreeable to him to appoint their successors.

Capt. J. H. Riggan died Jan. 20th, 1893, at his home a few miles east of Raleigh, and was buried last Saturday. He was an elderly citizen, and served the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad a number of years as one of its conductors before the late war. Latterly he devoted himself to farming.

At a special meeting of the Board of Alderman last Friday night, the Board decided by a vote of seven to five to extend the corporate limits of the city one-quarter of a mile in each direction.

Mr. W. W. Vass, Jr., executive clerk to Governor Holt, during the latter part of his administration, has gone to Chapel Hill where he enters upon a thorough course of the law in the University.

The citizens of Raleigh met on the 19th inst., and raised $1,600 for the poor and needy of the city. Committees were appointed, and the amount has been increased to about $2,500. This will greatly relieve the distress occasioned by the protracted snow and bitter cold weather.

On last Wednesday, the 18th inst., Hon. Elias Carr was duly inaugurated Governor of North Carolina. Notwithstanding the severe weather, the ceremonies passed off successfully. Chief Justice Shepherd swore in the Governor and the other newly-elected State officers in Stronach's Auditorium in the presence of the General Assembly and a vast concourse of spectators. After taking the oath of office, Gov. Carr delivered his inaugural. At night the Governor's reception was held at the Mansion, and was well attended considering the inclemency of the weather.

Miss Lina McDonald, a teacher in the Industrial School at Greensboro, was run over and instantly killed by a backing train on a railroad switch in that town last week. The circumstances attending her death are not fully known, but it is supposed that she was walking on the track of the switch and was overtaken by the fatal train. No one saw the young lady when she was killed, and the body lay exposed for some hours before it was discovered. The remains were brought to Raleigh for burial. Miss McDonald was the daughter of Col. John McDonald, and was about twenty-three years of age.

The State Road Congress met in Raleigh on Jan. 19th, 1893. Gov. Carr, as his first official act, opened the Congress. More than 300 delegates were present representing 80 counties. Hon. C. B. Watson, of Winston was elected permanent chairman and Dr. H. B. Battle permanent secretary. After full consultation, the committee made their report, the following being a summary. That the public roads should be maintained both by taxation and by those subject to road duty, also by the convicts from the various counties through the county authorities or the penitentiary—the expense of maintaining them to be borne by the counties or as the legislature may direct. Also that each county or group of counties should employ a competent engineer or expert in road building and own improved road machinery.

The Farmers' Alliance store here, managed by R. J. Powell, has made an assignment. Liabilities said to approximate $5,000; assets not stated.—[Local in RECORDER of Jan. 11th.] On this item the Progressive Farmer of Jan. 17th says: "There is a mistake in the above statement from the BIBLICAL RECORDER. Mr. Powell was the County Alliance Business Agent, but the store was not the Farmers' Alliance store, for the Alliance had no stock in it. It was Mr. Powell's independent enterprise." The Progressive Farmer is edited by Mr. J. L. Ramsey, as is also the Carolina Watchman of Salisbury. We copy from the Watchman of the 19th inst., its statement of Mr. Powell's assignment: "The Farmers' Alliance store at Raleigh, managed by Capt. R. J. Powell, has assigned. Liabilities, $5,000; assets not stated."

The crop of peanuts in this section this season is far short of expectations, a leading dealer estimating that it will not exceed 75,000 bushels, while the crop of last year was fully 125,000 bushels.—Wilmington Star.

Mr. Lonny Hatch, the newly elected treasurer of Chatham county, was found lying dead in the road near his home last Thursday week. The Record says there is no suspicion of foul play, but it is believed that he died of heart disease, as his father before him did.

Lemuel E. Nicely, agent of the Southern Express Company at Winston, mysteriously disappeared on the night of the 8th inst. He is reported to be short about $2,000 in his accounts. A portion of his shortage is accounted to his giving out express packages to various parties without collecting charges.

The Wilmington Lumber Company, says the Manufacturers Record, lately organized by capitalists from Stillwater, Minn., have begun work on their mammoth saw-mill and dry-kiln plant, which when completed will cost over $50,000. It is said that it will be the largest mill in North Carolina, and will have a capacity of 75,000 feet a day.

Bladen county court house at Elizabethtown was destroyed by fire Saturday night last, together with all the records, papers, documents, etc., involving a loss of several thousand dollars and endless litigation. The origin of the fire is unknown, but supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.—Fayetteville Gazette, 18th inst.

The ice formations at the Round Knob fountain are well worth going to see. For nearly a month the spray from the fountain has frozen as it fell, until now the base of the fountain is surrounded by a mountain of ice nearly forty feet in height, with peaks, and precipices and caves all of ice. There are many fantastic figures near the fountain where the frozen spray has converted some stone or shrub in the curious shape of beast or bird.—Morganton Herald.

Says the Boston Watchman: The course of the Pope, in asking the Roman Catholic bishops of the United States to communicate to him any objections that may possibly occur to them in reference to Monsignor Satolli's fourteen propositions on the school question, hardly accords with the dogma of infallibility. The information he gets from these sources is pretty sure to be adulterated with much prejudice and to be vitiated by imperfect observation. If a Pope pronounces an infallible decision conveyed to him by others, he should have infallible informants.

MARRIED.

WALKER—SANDERS—On Jan. 5, 1893, at the residence of the bride's mother, by Rev. N. P. Stallings, Mr. R. W. Walker and Miss Thomas Sanders, all of Currituck county.

ESTRIDGE—MILLER—On Thursday, Jan. 5th, 1893, at the residence of the officiating clergyman, in Mecklenburg county, N. C., by Rev. A. W. Crabtree, Mr. W. B. Estridge and Miss Carrie Miller.

LEE—NICHOLSON—On Jan. 10, 1893, near Macon, Warren county, N. C., at the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. Needham B. Cobb. D. D., Mr. William J. Lee of Wilson, N. C., and Miss Annie Nicholson, daughter of John H. Nicholson.

DIED.

BAGWELL—Died at his home near Raleigh on Jan. 18th, 1893, Green B. Bagwell, in the 74th year of his age. He was buried at Morrisville. For many years the deceased was a prominent merchant in Raleigh and an active member of the First Baptist church. He was a man of warm, tender heart, broad charity, and always took great delight in the work of Christ. During the past several years he has engaged in farming, and his church membership was at Garner, where many of his kindred live. N. B. B.

BUNCH—Bro. Elijah Bunch departed this life on Sunday morning, Jan. 15, 1893, aged near sixty years. Bro. Bunch was a member of Sandy Cross church, and when Warrick Swamp church was organized, he became one of its members, and lived a consistent, humble life until death. His walk before men was correct. He was a lover of the Bible, read it every night, and made it the rule of his life. The night of his departure, the word of God was read as usual before retiring, and he was as well as old people generally are. Alas! while all was quiet, and the dear aged wife was sweetly sleeping by the side of her husband, God called his servant away, and the separation of the aged pair thus takes place. Sister Bunch, he is not dead, but has fallen asleep, that sweet sleep "from which none ever wakes to weep." Tears and sorrows are over with him, but his aged wife, brother, sister and two sons, with friends, are left to mourn their loss. The old chair which he occupied in the corner is vacant. The voice which sounded sweet to the ear of the wife, as he read the word of God for her, is hushed. How dark and lonely is the home that is called upon to give up a good husband or a good wife! But for the sweet hope of meeting in heaven, who could bear it. Then wife, brother, sister and sons, be watchful, be ready for the summons. If it should come at the midnight watch, or [illegible]on, I pray God's blessings upon the bereaved, upon his church, and upon his pastor. JOSIAH ELLIOTT.

The Child and the Year.

Said the child to the youthful year:
"What hast thou in store for me,
O giver of beautiful gifts, what cheer,
What joy dost thou bring with thee?"

"My seasons four shall bring
Their treasures: the winter's snows,
The autumn's store, and the flowers of spring,
And the summer's perfect rose.

"All these and more shall be thine,
Dear child; but the last and best
Thyself must earn by a strife divine,
If thou wouldst be truly blest.

"Wouldst know this last, best gift?
'Tis a conscience clear and bright,
A peace of mind which the soul can lift
To an infinite delight.

"Truth, patience, courage, and love
If thou unto me canst bring,
I will set thee all earth's ills above,
O child, and crown thee a King!"

Why Popcorn Pops.

Why does popcorn pop?

Ask the first twenty learned men you can find and not one of them will be able to tell you. The secret lies in the structure of the grain, which is very wonderful indeed.

In the centre of each grain of popcorn is the "germ" of the future plant. It holds the vital element of the seed. What is it like? Well, it is about the size of a large pin-head. Its outer coat is a membrane of woody matter, inside of which is an oily substance containing nitrogen and phosphorus. Embedded in this oily substance is the "nucleus."

The "nucleus" is the true germ—the essential life principle of the seed. It is chiefly composed of albumen, and is just big enough to be seen with the naked eye. Small as it is it contains a mystery which no man has ever solved or is ever likely to solve—the mighty secret of reproduction. However, there are more things of interest to be noticed in the outer structure of the popcorn grain.

Gathered around the germ are granules of starch, arranged in layers and so regularly placed as to resemble a crystalline structure. In fact, like crystals, though they are not such, the granules possess the peculiar property of "polarizing" light. Seen under the microscope they have very beautiful forms. Between each two layers of them is a woody membrane, and covering the whole is the hard external envelope of the corn grain, composed of a woody matter with a large proportion of mineral substances, such as lime, silex, potash and magnesia.

Think what an amazing quantity of nutritious food is thus packed in a little space for the use of the embryo plant, which first absorbs the nitrogen and phosphorous contained in the socalled "germ" envelope, afterward consuming the starch and so getting ready to sprout.

A popcorn grain has precisely the same substance as grain of ordinary corn. It is simply a variety of the same species of plant. Why, then, will not common corn pop. It will do so, as you can find out for yourself by trying, but it does not pop nearly so well, though now and then a grain will excellently. The reason is that the starch granules in popcorn are packed more tightly and the woody membranes between the layers are thinner and more easily ruptured. Heat causes the water that is in the starch to expand, the external envelope is burst open and the grain turns itself inside out, becoming fifteen times its original size or more and showing the pretty white starch outside.

That is the reason why popcorn pops.—Exchange.

Sitting up Straight.

Grown people and children alike are inclined to fall into the very bad habit of sliding down into a chair, and sitting for hours with the spine bent almost into a half circle. That this is injurious, thousands of people who indulge in it never so much as dream, but that it is the cause of many serious ills those who have investigated the subject are well aware. The continual strain upon one side of the spinal column, with the corresponding compressions on the other, gives rise to nervous difficulties of the brain. Dizziness, nausea and blind spells are not infrequently the result of this practice. While the strictly upright position is undoubtedly the most healthful, it seems rather hard work to persuade the young and indolent to maintain it.

Lazy people, and those who love luxury, have a habit of "slumping," so to speak, into their chairs, and remaining in a semi-recumbent position, with the spine as nearly telescoped as may be. That portion of the anatomy generally known as the back-bone was intended to be worn in an upright position, and the constant pressure of the sections of the vertebra upon each other is productive of various ills.

Children should be taught to sit erect, especially if they are growing rapidly. When tired or in a position for rest, let them lie down, and entirely remove the strain from the muscles of the back. If youngsters who suffer from dizziness and headache are carefully observed, it will frequently be noticed that their position is faulty. The curved form of the spine results in the pulling of the muscles at the back of the neck, and the difficulty is quite certain to be removed by correcting the habit of sitting.—Exchange.

Starting Out Right.

A young girl who occupies a minor position in the clerical department of a large railroad company, declared one day, in a passionate tone: "I'd give anything in the world if I were out of the X Y and Z offices."

"Why?" asked her friend, knowing that the position was fully as good as she could expect to hold.

"Because I've started out wrong and can't get right.

"I thought when I began that I could be on friendly, sociable terms with the men in the office, and have nice, easy times with them as we worked together day by day. But oh, it hasn't turned out as I thought it would at all! They treat me in a familiar, slap on the back kind of way that humiliates me constantly.

"When I come in the morning they say: 'Jennie, what have you got that thing around your neck for?' or they ask if I didn't forget some of my hairpins. And when I try to resent it, they laugh at me. I am fairly degraded in my own eyes, and I can't help it, because I've started out wrong."

There is a lesson here for the vast army of girls and young women who are privileged under our liberal social requirements to go out into the world and earn their own livings.

It is hard for a girl who has lived a free and unconstrained life at home, entertaining her male friends, usually in her mother's presence, and always with her sanction, to realize that the same unstudied atmosphere should not prevail in a public office.

She does not take into account that she has not the accustomed background of home and parents to countenance her innocent gaiety. The proverbial inch is given and the ell taken, and often, when it is too late, she finds that the charmed circle of womanly sanctity, which is every girl's birthright, is trodden down and obliterated.

Her name is bandied from one pair of masculine lips to another; her actions openly commented on, the details of her dress discussed. She finds herself treated as a sort of anomalous creature, not a man, and not commanding the respect and deference due a woman. It is monstrous and humiliating, and once allowed, is nearly irremediable.

Girls, earn your independence, if you must or will; go as a wage earner into the office or the shop, but carry with you that sweet and womanly reserve which is at once your charm and your safeguard. Be sure that you "start out right."—Youth's Companion.

Young Man, You Will Do.

A young man was recently graduated from a scientific school. His home had been a religious one. He was a member of a christian church, had pious parents, brothers and sisters; his family was one in Christ.

On graduating he determined upon a western life among the mines. Full of courage and hope, he started out on his long journey to strike out for himself in a new world.

The home prayers followed him. As he went he fell into company with older men. They liked him for his frank manners and his manly independence. As they journeyed together they stopped for a Sabbath in a border town. On the morning of the Sabbath one of his fellow travellers said to him:

"Come, let us be off for a drive and the sights."

"No," said the young man, "I am going to church. I have been brought up to keep the Sabbath, and I have promised my mother to keep on in that way."

His road acquaintance looked at him for a moment, and then, slapping him on the shoulder, said:

"Right, my boy. I began in that way. I wish I had kept on. Young man, you will do. Stick to your bringing up and your mother's words, and you will win."

The boy went to church; all honor to him in that far away place, and among such men. His companions had their drive, but the boy gained their confidence and won their respect by his manly avowal of sacred obligations. Already success is smiling upon the young man. There is no lack of places for him.—Christian Weekly.

How Sleigh-bells are Made.

"The making of sleigh bells is quite an art," says an iron founder. "The little iron ball is too big to be put in through the holes in the bell, and yet it is inside. How did it get there? The little iron ball is called 'the jinglet.' When you shake the sleigh bell, it jingles. In making the bell, 'the jinglet' is put inside a little ball of mud, just the shape of the inside of the bell. Then a mold is made just the shape of the outside of the bell. This mud bell with the 'jinglet' inside is placed in the mold of the outside, and the metal is poured in, which fills up the space between the ball and the mold. When the mold is taken off you see a sleigh bell, but it will not ring as it is full of dirt. The hot metal that the bell is made of dries the dirt so that it can be shaken out. After the dirt is all shaken out of the holes in the bell, the little iron 'jinglet' will still be in the bell and will ring. It took a good many years to think out how to make a sleigh-bell."—Exchange.

Hasty Judgments.

It is well to suspend judgment in many cases until we have had time to review circumstances and trace motives. Especially where children are concerned should we be very careful not to confuse their sense of right and wrong by acting with injustice, scolding or censuring them for mistakes due to their inexperience, and perhaps inflicting punishment when none was deserved. A little child once ran nearly a mile from her own home to that of a friend carrying an umbrella to her mother, whom she supposed to be there. Great gusts of wind arose, and streams of rain fell and drenched the little one before she arrived at her destination, wet, breathless, and quite unable to explain why she had come when met by curious eyes and amazed questions. The mother had seen the impending storm and gone home, and the result of the proceeding was—for this true story took place in sterner days than ours—that the child was shut up for many hours of the next day to think over the fault of equivocation.

A mother whose temper is impulsive should never trust her first hasty judgment in the management of her little ones.

In the larger affairs of the neighborhood and of society the prudent person refuses to judge hastily. He gives the benefit of the doubt wherever and whenever and to whomsoever he can. People have a right to ask that before they are weighed in the balances and found wanting their cases shall be looked at from all sides and from the most favorable point of view. It is not well to assume that blushes and down-dropped eyes always indicate guilt. Innocence, falsely accused, is often ashamed to look its accuser in the face. Judge not, that ye be not judged, was said by the purest lips that ever spoke on earth.

The man or woman whose habit it is to indulge in snap judgments of any kind is necessarily narrow and undeveloped.—Harper's Bazaar.

Foreign Body in the Eye.

Never rub the eyeball if a speck of dust or cinder gets in it. Let the tears gather and flow—they will usually be sufficient to dislodge the dust particles and wash them out. If, however, they are not dislodged, raise first the upper eyelid and bring it down over and upon the outside of the lower one; if this fail, reverse the operation by lifting the lower out and upon the upper eyelid.

Another good plan is to plunge the face in a deep basin of warmed water, then wink the lids rapidly, and roll the eyeball until all the particles are washed out. But a celebrated oculist in Utrecht recommends that if dirt, lime, or anything gritty, gets into the eye, that the sufferer lie down and have pure olive oil poured in upon the eyeball and sockets until the particles of harmful nature are removed. This remedy is quite painless, and never fails to remove all foreign substances.—Selected.

The University—Gov. Holt's Message.

In Governor Holt's message to the General Assembly, now in session, he says:

"The University, through the bounty of philanthropists, and by wise and prudent financial administration, has added to the wealth of the State year by year, until it now embraces more than a half a million of dollars in property, of which not twenty five thousand dollars came from the State treasury."

In other words, the message affirms that the University owns in real estate, libraries, endowment, &c., or what is equal to endowment, more than five hundred thousand dollars, and more than four hundred and seventy five thousand of this amount came to the University through donations from individuals—not the State.

In another part of the message where the author is pleading for State aid for "the development of the University," it is said:

"This development should be effected by the aid of the State, which cannot always expect philanthropists to do her work."

The argument seems to be about this, viz: In the past century when the University had to struggle, had a limited number of friends, none able to give to it in large amounts, it received almost a half million of dollars from individuals; but now, and for the future, when the University has thousands of friends—many of them succeeding wonderfully well and abundantly able to aid it in its needs—it cannot be expected that they will do so.

If individuals have aided it largely in the past, what is there now in its management, or the ability or disposition of its friends, to lead to the conclusion of the message?

We believe that the future will show much larger donations by individuals to the University and to all of the denominational colleges in the State, than the past. Why the author of the message should suppose that the University will no longer be aided by its friends, we are not told in words.

We notice in this connection, also, one sentence in the State Chronicle, which reads as follows:

"We are glad to know that any antagonism heretofore existing between the University and the denominational colleges has ceased to exist."

We are of the opinion that there never has been a time when the competition, conflict, and antagonism between the University on the one side, and the denominational colleges and many of the academies of the State on the other side, was more real, more general or sharper than at the present time. In proof of this statement, we give an extract from the report of the Board of Trustees of Wake Forest College made to the late Baptist State Convention in Raleigh and adopted by said Convention, viz:

"The number of students for the session 1890–'91 was 233, and the number for 1892–'93 is now 185, and not likely to be more than 200. This decrease may, in part, be accounted for by the short crops, low prices, and consequent financial stress of our people; but, after due consideration, it is believed the decrease is due largely to the sharp competition by the State University.

"The requirements for admission and graduation in the A. B. course are practically the same in both institutions.

"This, with the large number of free scholarships provided, not by taxation, but by donation, extensively offered, and to which we cannot and do not object, but, on the contrary, rejoice in when properly used, makes the competition more serious at present than in former years.

"Since the founding and organization of Wake Forest College in 1834, it has had a continued and successful struggle for enlarged usefulness, and it now behooves its friends, as perhaps never before, to be wide awake and eagle eyed that they may meet most wisely and overcome most successfully all influences which diminish or endanger its patronage, and to project and execute such plans as will build up and enlarge the influence and usefulness of this our beloved Institution."

This whole question is many times larger and deeper than that side issue, "a squabble before the Legislature about an appropriation to the University." Nothing has come before the real friends of education in this State in many years, which reaches deeper into the future history of all our educational plans and work and the well-being of many of our people than this question. It will not down. It is childish to put it aside.

The man who will properly prepare, introduce and urge through the Legislature, a bill that will guard the rights of all and bring into harmonious relations the University and the colleges of this State, will render one of the most important services to the cause of education and to the entire State that it is now possible for any man to render. Let it be done. Genuine wisdom and the highest patriotism would save this antagonism. Harmonious and equitable adjustment here is the first and essential step towards the ultimate success of higher education in North Carolina. Think as we may, there is now in some points an irreconcilable antagonism which will not and cannot, in the very nature of things, grow less, but larger and stronger and deeper; and unless one or both of these systems are modified, this antagonism will continue till the peace and harmony of our people in politics and religion will be involved.

It is not necessary for it to come to this state of things before a remedy is provided.

Talks About Law—No. 11.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Previous to the year 1868 we had no Statute of Limitations in North Carolina; but we had the Statute of Presumptions.

The difference between the two may be illustrated by considering a simple note of hand, upon which no payment has been made for three continuing years next after it falls due.

Now, an old note, executed before the war in such circumstances, would be presumed to be paid; but a note executed since 1865, in a like case, would be of no value, if the statute was set up as a defence, because the statute is a complete bar. The presumption might be rebutted by showing, as a fact, that the maker had not paid the note, or that he had been continuously out of the State, or insolvent. But when the statute of limitations begins to run, no power can stop it. This statute is not favored by the courts, and hence a party cannot avail himself of it, unless he specially plead it.

Before proceeding with the discussion, it may be appropriate to state here, that certain classes of persons are not injured by sleeping on their rights. The lapse of time does not affect them. No lapse of time can bar a married woman; or an infant or an idiot or lunatic or a person in jail or the State's prison.

Such persons are said to labor under disabilities, and no statute of limitations begins to run as to them until the married woman's husband dies, the infant attains his majority, the lunatic regains his mental faculties.

Let us illustrate: In 1850 Sarah Jane Jones, at the age of twenty, marries John Brown. Here we see two disabilities, nonage and coverture. Miss Jones' father dies leaving land, but also leaving many debts. His lands are sold to pay the debts. But Miss Sarah is not made a party to the proceeding. A commissioner of the court sells the land at public outcry to the best bidder. The purchaser gets a deed dated in 1851; and enters into possession of the land. In 1892, the land has become very valuable, gold is found on it or else a town has sprung up near it. In some way Mrs. Brown discovers that the title is not good and sues for her portion of the land. The purchasers, and those in possession, in vain assert that they have a good deed to the land and that they have been in possession of the same near half a century. Mrs. Brown pleads first that she was not a party to the proceeding, that she was an infant when she married, and that Mr. Brown is still alive, and that no time has run against her. The court sustains her plea, and so she recovers the land. The purchaser, no doubt, would be protected to the extent that his money went to pay Mrs. Brown's father's debt; but he loses the land.

If Miss Jones had been of age when her father died and had married, even the day after his death, she could not have recovered the land as we shall presently see; because the statute, having begun to run against her even for one day, continues to run. So if Mr. Brown had died and she had married again, the statute would have begun to run, as to all rights that existed before the second marriage. Of course, the statute would not run against her during this marriage any more than during the first, as to rights accruing after the second marriage.

But let us consider persons who labor under no disabilities.

The shortest time within which one is barred is six months, and this applies to only one class of cases. If a person slander another, the suit must be begun within six months after the words spoken; otherwise the statute bars a recovery. Then follows the one year statute, and this will bar one in the following cases (among others):

Damages sustained by the wrongful death of a person. Application by widow for year's allowance. Rights of action in contracts of insurance. A civil action for damages for assault, battery, or false imprisonment, or for libel.

Then comes the two years statute, shutting out an action for a legacy, or for a penalty for usury. This statute also says that one who purchases land for an heir two years after death of the owner is protected against any creditors of the deceased. So, if a railroad hold a right of way two years, the real owner is barred in many cases.

If a man have an account against a dead man's estate, and cannot prove it in any other way, he may, in certain circumstances, put his book in evidence, and then he will recover the amount of his book account, not exceeding sixty dollars; and for the several articles sold and delivered within the two years next before the commencement of the action. This is called the book-debt oath and is an exception to the rule that a party to a suit cannot testify against a dead man.

The three years statute applies to more cases, perhaps, than any other.

It applies, generally speaking, to all contracts express or implied, verbal or written, unless under seal. An action for trespass on land must be brought within three years. So also, if a man take and convert your horse or cow, you must sue for it in three years. An action against the sureties of a guardian, executor or administrator, or collector on the official bond of their principal within three years after the breach thereof complained of. So, also, if one waits more than three years after he discovers any fraud, however gross, against himself, before suing, he is barred.

While an action on a note is barred in three years, an action on a bond is not in ten years; a bond has a seal and a note has not. But a surety on such bond is protected after three years. If the principal on a bond or note make a payment, the statute is said to be arrested, and the note or bond begins anew even as to the surety; the old time is lost. But if the note or bond be barred when the payment is made, it is not revived by that act against the surety. A promise to pay any debt, which has become barred by the statute, is of no avail, unless such promise is in writing and made to the creditor, but a simple payment will revive the bond as we have just seen.

The six years statute has reference to actions upon the official bonds of any public officer; and against executors, administrators and collectors, after their final accounts have been audited and filed according to law.

A judgment of a justice of the peace may be sued on within seven years after its rendition; and a claim against the executor or administrator of a dead man's estate is absolutely barred after seven years from the qualification of the executor or administrator, provided he has advertised for claims according to law. But if the executor has personal notice served on such creditor to present his claim, and he then fails for one year, he is barred.

The ten years statute is an important one. An action on a bond is barred in ten years. An action on a judgment of the superior court is also. So, if a man mortgages his land and makes no payment on the mortgage for ten years after it falls due, he remaining in possession of the land, the mortgage cannot be collected, if the statute be pleaded.

If the action, sought to be brought, cannot be classified under any of the above heads, then it is barred after ten years.

So much for civil actions.

Now as to criminal actions, the State says that it will not punish a man for a simple misdemeanor, if two years have passed before he is arrested. This applies to assaults and batteries, and other misdemeanors. But as to felonies, e. g., murder, burglary, larceny, &c., there is no statute of limitations, and the offender may be convicted after any length of time.

Sometimes it is very difficult to tell exactly when the statute begins to run. It would be manifestly unjust to allow the statute to begin to run, until the parties were placed in adversary relationship.

Take the case of an attorney and his client. Suppose that an attorney collects a hundred dollars for his client and that the client sues the attorney for the money before demanding it, why he would go out of court with nothing. Until the demand is made, they are not in hostile relationship. So, also, if the attorney were to collect a sum of money and hold it a score of years, and no demand were made on him for it, and, finally, he was sued, and then pleaded the lapse of time, the court would not sustain the plea. The parties have to be at arms' length before the statute starts.

Take the case of mutual accounts. Jones is a merchant. Smith is a school-teacher. Smith has a running account with Jones. Jones' children attend Smith's school, and Smith has an account against Jones which is agreed between them shall be applied to Jones' account. In other words, they have "mutual" accounts. Should they finally "go to law," and should the statute be pleaded, it would begin to run only from the last item of the account. Now were Jones' and Smith's accounts "separate" and not "mutual," the statute would begin to run from the date of each item of the account.

There is one peculiar case which we must note. We have seen that the statute does not begin to run until the parties are at arm's length, as illustrated by the case of attorney and client, or principal and agent. We have also seen that one cannot recover any personal property which has been unlawfully converted, if three years have passed since the conversion. Now the point to be remembered is, that the real owner of the property converted will be barred at the end of three years, even if he had no knowledge of such unlawful conversion. For example, a case arose in Franklin county in which an old clerk of the court sued the new clerk to recover certain fees received by virtue of his office. The statute was pleaded. But our court said that it was the duty of the clerk to hold the funds and not to withhold them. And so the plaintiff recovered. But if the clerk had unlawfully appropriated the money to his own use, the statute would have begun from the time of such conversion.

In our next, we will consider how the lapse of time affects actions to recover real estate.

The Primitive Baptists of America.

The battles for civil and religious liberty having been fought and won, the Baptists of America, relieved of the two-fold burden of self-support and support of the State religions, addressed themselves to the work of organization and enlargement. In spite of the deleterious influences that follow in the wake of revolution, our Baptist people multiplied rapidly. Propagandism seems to have been their motto and watchword. Two examples will suffice to show the rapidity with which Baptist churches sprang up in many parts of the country. In 1786 the Georgia Association had but ten churches. In 1790 she had thirty-four churches. In 1777 the Kehukee Association (North Carolina) had but ten churches. In 1790 she had sixty one churches, with an aggregate membership of 5,017 souls. Indeed, the Kehukee contained in 1790 about five-sevenths of all the Baptists in North Carolina. Along with this rapid growth in membership, there was also growth of the missionary spirit. As early as 1786 we find the Kehukee brethren devising ways and means for carrying on the vast mission work before them.

Martin Ross, feeling the imperative necessity of organized effort in mission work, presented to the Kehukee Association, at the session of 1803, the following query:—

"Is not the Kehukee Association, with all her numerous and respectable friends, called on in providence in some way to step forward in support of that missionary spirit which the great God is so wonderfully reviving amongst the different denominations of good men in various parts of the world?"

As the outcome of the discussion of this query, delegates from several Associations assembled with Cashie Baptist church, Bertie county, N. C., Friday before the third Sabbath in June, 1805. This was probably the first general organization of North Carolina Baptists for the spread of the gospel. Subsequent general meetings of North Carolina Baptists were held in 1811 at Falls of Tar River, 1812 at Raleigh, and so on. Thirty copies of the minutes of the "General Convention of North Carolina Baptists" were received by the Kehukee Association in 1811. The Baptist State Convention at Greenville in 1830 was nothing more than this General Convention more thoroughly organized.

The Kehukee brethren were for many years in correspondence with other Baptist bodies that were emphatically missionary in spirit, and in the year 1815 she received at the hands of Martin Ross thirty one copies of the report of the Foreign Mission Board at Philadelphia.

In 1814 Robt. T. Daniel was employed as missionary by the North Carolina Baptist Missionary Society at a salary of $300 per year.

Several missionary societies sprang up among the Baptists of North Carolina during the first quarter of this century, some of which will be mentioned hereafter.

It must be confessed, however, that the North Carolina Baptists fell far behind the brethren of the old Charleston and Philadelphia Associations in missionary enterprise.

As far back as 1755 the Philadelphia Association sent out as missionaries to North Carolina Benjamin Miller and Peter P. Vanhoon. They also sent out as evangelists to labor in the South, Morgan Edwards in 1771, and John Gano in 1773. Gano had before labored in North Carolina under appointment of the Charleston Association in 1756. A letter from the Kehukee to the Philadelphia Association in 1773 thankfully acknowledges the service rendered, and solicits "the continuance of the correspondence and missions."

At the session of 1800 a missionary plan was set on foot which culminated in the organization of the Philadelphia Baptist Missionary Society, whose first missionaries were Thomas G. Jones, Thomas Smiley, Henry George and Wm. West.

The Charleston Association made arrangements in the year 1802 for employing a missionary to teach and preach in destitute places. John Rooker was sent to the Catawba Indians, among whom he labored with much success. This work was carried on several years with gracious results.

The Massachusetts Baptist Missionary Society was organized in 1802. In 1811 this Society had twenty missionaries in their employment.

The New York Baptists organized a missionary society in 1806, whose operations the first four or five years required the expenditure of over $5,000 and the employment of eight or ten missionaries.

All over the country we find missionary societies springing up from 1800 onwards. Many of these were organized by our Baptist women, as the Boston Female Mite Society, organized in 1800. About same date, or not long after, we read of similar female societies at Providence, Salem, Haverhill, Newton, Attleborough, Rehoboth, Warren, Newport, and numerous other places.

Minutes of the Charleston Association for 1812 show that $122 50 were carried up by Mrs. Eliza A. Adams and Mrs. Hephzibah Townsend, representatives of Wadmalaw and Edisto Female Mite Societies.

In North Carolina, it has been stated, the Hico Female Missionary Society was organized in 1816. Minutes of the North Carolina Baptist State Convention for 1885 report as contributors to the objects of the Convention, three female missionary societies, the Cape Fear in Cumberland, the May's Chapel in Chatham, and the Female Benevolent Society of Chesterfield District, South Carolina. When these were formed I know not.

We have seen that in the early part of this century the spirit of missions and organization was such as had never been witnessed before in this country. It is true that the greater part of these societies were organized for the purpose of sending the gospel to the destitute sections of the country and to the various tribes of Indians inhabiting the land.

The thoughts and hearts of our people, however, were wonderfully turned towards the heathen world by the tidings of the organization of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society at Kettering in 1792, and the subsequent departure of Carey for the foreign field.

What intensified this missionary spirit was the conversion to Baptist views of Judson and Rice, two missionaries sent out by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Here were missionaries that providence had cast upon us, and yet there had never been any organization of a national character among the American Baptists to which could be entrusted so vast a work as the evangelization of the heathen world. Brethren everywhere felt the necessity of such an organization as they had never felt it before.

It was generally agreed upon that a meeting of delegates from all over the country should assemble at Philadelphia in 1814 "to organize a plan for eliciting, combining, and directing the energies of the whole denomination in one sacred effort for sending the glad tidings of salvation to the heathen and to nations destitute of pure gospel light." Accordingly, on the 18th of May, 1814, delegates from eleven States and the District of Columbia met in Philadelphia and organized "The General Missionary Convention of the Baptist denomination in the United States of America for Foreign Missions."

Dr. Richard Furman of South Carolina was the honored President, and Dr. Baldwin of Massachusetts the Secretary of the Convention.

I am proud of the fact that North Carolina Baptists were represented in that Convention by James A. Ranaldson, a man whose name I have heard spoken with deepest affection and tenderness by many of the aged brethren and sisters who remembered his wonderful evangelistic labors in North Carolina.

The Baptists of this State gave annually (two or three years excepted) to Foreign Missions through this Society from 1814 to 1845, the date of the organization of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Gammell's History of American Baptist Missions shows that the Society received from North Carolina Baptists in the year 1817 the creditable sum of $1,382.00.

Finally, the reader will bear in mind that I set out to tell of what the American Baptists did up to about the close of the first quarter of this century. While the half has not been told, yet I think the foregoing facts show conclusively that our fathers wrought well in their day, and that they are genuine, primitive, old-school Baptists, like those of the apostolic age.

May we prove ourselves worthy successors of such noble Baptist men and women by attempting greater things, inasmuch as we have less obstacles to hinder and superior facilities to help us in every department of christian work.

In obedience to the Redeemer's last command, our fathers aimed at nothing less than the world's conversion to Christ. Their work was derided and opposed by hostile public sentiment at home and colonial officers and commercial agents abroad. But with dauntless courage and unfaltering faith they prosecuted their cherished aim until they extorted from their enemies an acknowledgement of the greatness and moral grandeur of the missionary enterprise, until the missionary could prosecute his work unmolested in every land where the British or American flag proclaims the presence of civilized power, and until difficult languages of vast empires and unintelligible jargon of barbarian tribes have been mastered by the herald of the cross and made to convey the word of life to perishing millions.

Let me beg the kind and very indulgent reader, while he is looking backward upon the labors and triumphs of the fathers, to gather inspiration from their example for the great and growing work of the present and future.

DANCING.

As is well known, our Baptist churches are, as a rule, positively opposed to dancing. If a member of a Baptist church persists in dancing, it usually results in his exclusion from the church. At this season of the year, more than at other times, our churches are troubled with cases of discipline resulting from indulgence in this amusement on the part of some of their members. As a matter of fact, but few of our members seem to have a desire to engage in dancing; and hence, cases of discipline resulting from it are not numerous. Still our people have some trouble from this source, and a consideration of this matter may be timely, and possibly helpful to our readers.

We stand with our people in square opposition to this popular amusement; and in this paper we wish to give some reasons why we are opposed to it. Among these we may mention:—

1. That by fair inference, the Scriptures condemn it. Paul says 1 Thess. 5: 22, "Abstain from all appearance of evil;" and in Gal. 5: 19-21, the same apostle gives us a summary of the works of the flesh, and among them we find the word "revellings," which may certainly include dancing. In 1 Cor. 5: 11, and Eph. 5: 11, and 2 Cor. 6: 14, we find words which by fair inference, as those quoted above, condemn dancing. It is not our purpose here to attempt an exhaustive discussion of this subject from a Scripture standpoint; because the arguments drawn from the plain statements of God's word have often been produced, and we suppose our readers are more or less familiar with them. We then pass on to notice:

2. The atmosphere of the ball-room is as a rule quite sensual. Many have dated their fall, or at least their commencement of a vicious life, to the impressions made, and the liberties taken, in the ball-room. The "round-dance" is the culmination of the spirit of the modern dance, and it is impossible for the sexes to occupy the attitude one toward another, found in the round dance, without evil thoughts. Accustom the purest and the best to evil thoughts, and you have gone far toward breaking down the barriers of virtue and opening the floodgates of vice and corruption; for, "As a man thinketh, so he is." It is an undoubted fact that fashion, and the spirit of the world, rule the ball room; and christians who patronize the dance must bow to fashion's ruling, or be considered ill-mannered and low bred. It is an undoubted fact again that many of the most popular fashions have been started by vicious and corrupt "leaders of society;" and sometimes by men and women of abandoned character. The dominant spirit of the ball-room, then, is one of sensuality. It is useless and weak to argue that the presence of christians at the dance will give "tone and character" to it. This is but the dream of those who listen to the voice of the Tempter. "What concord hath Christ with Belial; or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one." When the christian enters the ball-room there is the tacit understanding that the Spirit of Christ shall not rule there; in fact, we think that the majority of those who enter and participate do not desire that his Spirit shall govern them; and they are glad, for the time-being, that they can cast off the restraints of religion (as they regard them) and hobnob for awhile with Satan. They are more willing to stay in the church and try to serve the Lord, as they suppose, if they can only have a delightful hour with Satan now and then. The church that allows this is the church for them.

3. A third reason why we oppose dancing (as now conducted especially) is because it is really silly, and excludes the intellectual from our social gatherings. Men and women seek, or ought to seek, one another's society for the cultivation of mind and heart, and not so much for the cultivation of an art, (if dancing can be called by such a respectable name), that concentrates the attention of a large assembly on certain gyrations of the body, and to the workings of the feet, instead of the brain. Well might Cicero say, "Hardly any man dances when sober, unless perchance he is crazy;" or Thackeray, "When a man confesses himself fond of dancing, I set him down as a [illegible] it is indeed quite a reflection upon [illegible] of a crowd of people when they [illegible] a few hours together without [illegible] vulgar, puerile amusement (!) [illegible] while away the hours." The [illegible] dance generally has but little [illegible] it may not be unlike to remember that those who insist on dancing at the social gathering may be so painfully conscious of their inability to entertain those about them by conversation that dancing becomes a convenient means of hiding their ignorance. There are some "social lights" that may resent the above remark. Well, we are glad at least that they have intelligence enough to see the force of the sentence to which they may object. Conserve your intellectual gifts, friends; you have none to lose; but let us remind you that you will make but scanty additions to your present stock when you have learned all the intricacies of the modern dance.

4. Because the dance is very dear to ungodly people. Any indulgence or amusement that is exceedingly popular with the ungodly should be carefully studied by christian people; and such popularity may often be sufficient ground for their refusal to participate. All classes and conditions of wicked people are fond of the revelry and excitement of the dance. The gambler, the libertine, the swindler, the adulterer, all find the atmosphere of the ball room quite pleasant; and it should never be forgotten that just such characters as these often constitute a large part of those who gather at the dance, and especially to the public ball. We have just made sundry hits at the intelligence of some devotees of the dance, and we desire to add that we doubt seriously the spiritual perception of one who can see no incongruity between her conduct, when in the grasp of the libertine at the public ball, and that of bowing in prayer in the sanctuary of God asking for strength to keep herself "unspotted from the world."

5. Because the christian at least cannot participate in any amusement, or engage in any employment, on which he cannot ask the divine favor to rest. Does the christian ever feel like praying before going to the ball? Can he kneel before God and ask him to bless him while engaged in revelry? If he should, would God hear and answer? Would not such a prayer be an abomination to the Lord? This is quite a simple test, but like other simple remedies it will be found, we think, quite effective. When the christian is tempted then to engage in anything concerning the propriety of which there is doubt, let him pause long enough to ask, "Can I ask the Lord's blessing on this work?" If he cannot, or if he has some doubt about the propriety of doing so, let him refrain from it.

We will close by adding that when we have an occasional case of a young man or woman who wishes to dance, or who may go so far as to indulge, it is often the case that a kind visit from the pastor, or some of the deacons connected with the church, can reclaim such without a public church trial. If they persist in their course, however, then the church has to act.

....Rev. P. F. Maloy (col.) has recently accepted work as missionary to the Sunday-schools in Central North Carolina, as the appointee of the American Baptist Publication Society.

....Rev. N. S. Jones of Salisbury, N. C., has recently received five members into his church by letter, and expects soon to have Bro. D. M. Austin of Charlotte to assist him in a meeting.

....We are in receipt of an invitation to the fifty eighth Anniversary Exercises of the Literary Societies of Wake Forest College. Their invitation card is a specimen of exquisite neatness.

....If in Rev. W. D. Powell's reports there are as many explanations necessary as there are in his Centennial work, the people will never know what is going on in his mission in Mexico.

....Prof. J. C. C. Dunford has a good school at Fairview, N. C. He has now on enrollment for this session more than one hundred students, as we learn from the Waynesville Courier.

....Bro. A. J. Ward of Glliden, N. C., wants to know what is the matter with our preachers in the eastern part of our State that we do not hear from them and their work, in the RECORDER.

....Rev. J. F. Love is in Cumberland holding meetings this week in the Baptist church of that city. We know the brethren will be pleased with his preaching and look for good results.—Baltimore Baptist.

....The members of the Baptist church in Mocksville, says the Davie Times, are making arrangements to build an addition, and otherwise improve their house of worship. The improvements are to cost $1,500.

....Rev. J. C. Hocutt of Burlington, N. C., says in spite of the bad weather he has had some progress in his work He has baptized one and received another for baptism; and expects to receive others soon.

....From the Birmingham notes in the Alabama Baptist, we note the following: "First church—Rev. J. S. Dill preached morning and evening two very fine sermons, which were greatly enjoyed by the congregations."

....Bro. W. J. Ward says: "Wiser, more appropriate and truthful tributes were never paid to any deceased friend than were paid to Dr. William Royall at his funeral. He approached as near to my ideal of christian manhood as any man I ever knew.

....In our personals last week we stated that Rev. T. Bright has accepted the care of Waco church—we took the statement from the "Forest City Ledger." We learn from another brother that he is pastor of that church: and we beg the brother's pardon for the mistake.

....Rev. John E. White of Wilson, N. C., endorses Rev. W. R. Cullom's suggestion to endow a chair of "Bible and Moral Philosophy" in Wake Forest College, as a fitting monument to Dr. William Royall. Bro. Cullom's suggestion is on the third page of the last RECORDER.

....The President of Roanoke College at Salem, Va., says that he has read the letter of Dr. Taylor of Wake Forest College on the relation between the colleges and the University, with so much interest that he sends for a half dozen copies of the paper to send to the college presidents in Virginia.

....Three very eminent politicians have died within the past few days in the persons of Ex President R. B. Hayes, Justice L. Q. C. Lamar of the Supreme Court of the United States, and Hon. James G. Blaine, than whom few, if any, hold a higher place among the statesmen of the United States.

....The Clarion Ledger tells us that the King's Daughters, for sweet charity's sake, were to give a ball at the Deaf and Dumb Institute. Indeed! We hardly supposed that charity ever attends balls, and we are amazed to know that the King's Daughters have gone into such business.—Baptist Record.

....The fact is, Rev. J. Q. Adams is the best preacher in the city of Asheville, N. C. His sermons are devoid of all sensation and overflow with the very marrow of the gospel. Such preaching will tell in any community.—Baptist Record. Our confrere must forget the aphorism about comparisons, especially for the First church's sake.

....Miss Lizzie Lowndes of the Oxford Female Seminary says she fears the old pupils are not reading the RECORDER as they ought, as their funds to the Maggie Nutt monument are coming in so slowly. She requests us to ask them if they saw her appeal. She says she must have the monument, and it must be erected by her Alma Mater.

....An exchange tells us that the Sunday-school Board at Nashville wants Dr. W. D. Powell to succeed Dr. Frost. It seems to us that Dr. Powell is needed too much in Mexico to become a Secretary.—Baltimore Baptist. If Dr. Powell should accept the Secretaryship of the Sunday-school Board it might create the impression that the Mexican mission field was not as important as some of us were accustomed to regard it; as is slightly hinted by his present agency work.

....Dr. F. M. Ellis is out in some of the papers in favor of merging the three Boards—Foreign, Home and Sunday-school—of the Southern Baptist Convention into one Board. The idea is not original with Dr. Ellis. Many of our brethren have gone carefully over the entire field of thought in these matters, and have wisely concluded that the present arrangement of our Boards is the best and wisest possible for our work. We have never been impressed by the practical wisdom of Dr. Ellis like we have by the number of his words, the recklessness of his suggestions, and the impracticableness of his plans of work.

A Layman's Sermon to Preachers.

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions."—Isaiah 58; 1.

As I read this passage of Scripture, there rises in my mind a very vivid picture.

Upon a jutting crag of the mountain top stands grand old Isaiah. As rough and as rugged he was, perhaps, as were the rocky crags around him. In the eyes of the people among whom he lived and moved, he was a poor, homeless itinerant preacher, but God saw in him a mouthpiece for Jehovah.

As Isaiah stands there with downcast eyes, there stretches out beneath him, far below, a beautiful and fertile valley, a fit location it seems to be for the garden of Eden, and it is filled with a throbbing mass of humanity.

Some are toiling, some are sleeping, some are eating, some are dancing, some are suffering, perhaps,—all are extracting every possible pleasure and profit from life, securing all the selfish enjoyment they can from the blessings and mercies so freely bestowed by God, and forgetting almost altogether the giver. Looking upward I see bursting from the sky a beam of light, indescribable in its brilliant beauty, and it rests upon the bowed head of Isaiah, and it bears upon its beams of light the voice of God saying, "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up your voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions."

CRY ALOUD.

There is no uncertain sound in this command as it falls upon the ear of Isaiah. This does not mean soft talk; no indication here of modulated tones tuned to the most pacific and winning notes of which the human voice is capable of being trained; nor does it point to soft platitudes and sweet-scented nothings; but it means that the inspired message which Isaiah was to deliver to his congregation was to be thundered into their ears, that it was to be "cried aloud" until its reverberations should reach every portion and individual of the struggling mass of humanity below him, that when the time of condemnation should come no man might plead ignorance. Isaiah was to "cry aloud."

"SPARE NOT."

Oh, how strangely harsh and unmerciful this command must sound in the ears of many preachers of God's word of to day. How different an interpretation of the spirit of God's message to mankind to what as a rule we have delivered to us now. And yet it emanates from the same God—a God the same yesterday, to day, and to-morrow; a God who entertains no less of abhorrence for sin, nor more of mercy for his people, than did he when he dictated to Isaiah the message he was to deliver to his people.

This message contained no honeyed words of soft entreaty. He was not to approach the high liver or the spendthrift with a timid request that they would from their wastefulness spare just a little to relieve the wants of the poor; nor was he instructed to wink at and ignore the little sins of omission and commission of the rich men of his congregation because they paid so liberally toward the support of the church, and it would be so hard to get along without their contributions. He was not to conciliatingly and caressingly pat the self-willed and the obstinate, the sorehead and the chronic kickers on the back, and say softly to him, "My brother, I wish you would try to make a little sacrifice and harmonize your troubles with brother B.; not that I think you are wrong, but outsiders may think we cannot agree among ourselves, and it will look bad." No, no. This rough old itinerant preacher, standing in the presence of the living God to receive from his lips the message he was to deliver to the people under his watchcare, was to

"LIFT UP HIS VOICE LIKE A TRUMPET."

Why like a trumpet? Because the voice of a trumpet is bold, strong, incisive, unmistakable. It is not mild; it is certain, and its vibrations set in motion air waves that rise above all others. For this reason the trumpet has been used since men began to war one against another as a means of signal and command in battle. Its sound could be heard above the din and commotion of battle, above the clash of arms, above the cries of passion or despair, the shouts of victory, or the shrieks and groans of the wounded and the dying.

So was the voice of Isaiah to be "lifted up like a trumpet." It was to be heard above the sounds of feast and revelry and dissipation. It was to be heard above the commotion and strife and toil of gain, above the cry of the sorrowing and the afflicted, above the pleasures as well as the pains of life. Ah! Isaiah was to lift up his voice like a trumpet, high above the activities of life, as the sound of the trumpet is lifted up above the sounds of battle, that every one should hear the message that he was to deliver as the courier of God.

Now, suppose you were to see some one unconsciously, or even carelessly, walking into an abyss that meant sure death. On the eve of making the last and fatal step, would you courteously attempt to attract his attention and whisper kindly in his ear that he was pursuing a dangerous path? Or would you at the top of your voice cry aloud stop? Or, suppose that at midnight you were walking by a friend's house, in which he and his family were peacefully sleeping, and to your horror you should see the flames bursting from the roof of his dwelling. Would you quietly step through the gate and up the steps, knock timidly at the door or ring the bell, stand there patiently until your friend was aroused and came to the door, and then apologizing for your untimely intrusion, suggest to him the propriety of waking his family and removing them to a more secure abode, as his house was on fire? No, no. But you would, upon discovery of the flames, rush madly in, breaking through the door, and yelling in trumpet tones, "Fire! fire! flee for your lives."

These are not overdrawn illustrations. They have their parallels in our every-day lives. Men and women are walking every day into the fearful abyss of eternal woe, or they are quietly sleeping in dangerous proximity to the fires of the bottomless pit. Then why should we not "cry aloud" to them, and "spare not?" Why should we be fearful of disturbing their equinimity while they are ignorantly walking to eternal death? Or hesitate to awake them from the sleep of indifference or content, when they are threatened with the burning of God's wrath? Why should we not "lift up our voice like a trumpet," and

SHOW THE PEOPLE THEIR TRANSGRESSIONS?

And this brings us to the purpose in this message that Isaiah was to deliver. He was to show the people their transgressions. Not simply to tell over to them the beauties and the joys of God's service; not to tell them caressingly of God's love for and overruling care of them; not merely to invite them to come regularly to God's house to have read over to them the rich promises of his word; it was not to tell them of the little easy duties incumbent upon them as "God's chosen;" nor was it to commend them for the hollow show of service which they most scrupulously observed, as we find by reading the verse following the text; but, my brethren, it was to "show them their trangressions."

We have no reason to believe that Isaiah's people did not know of their transgressions. They were no doubt like we are to-day. We know of our sins, but we lose sight of them, and we continually need that some faithful Isaiah hold them up before our eyes, "show" them to us, and in trumpet tones say to us, as did Nathan to David, "Thou art the man."

J. D. H.

Broad St. Church, Winston, Jan. 20, '93.

Dying in a Good Old Age.

There is something exceedingly beautiful in passing away from the cares of this life in the sunset of a good old age. Since death is the common lot of man, and each must yield to his power it does seem as graceful as it is beautiful to bow at his touch when the years have been many, and we come to the end of the journey; saying, "It is enough let me sleep."

I dread seeing darkness come at noon, but when the day is over we expect the sun to pass below the horizon, and the stars to appear. I never see a child or a youth die without asking, "O, why has death come so early?" But when the aged die it seems fitting that it should be so, as we are strangers and pilgrims here as all our fathers were.

"With long life will I satisfy him," was a covenant promise, and that "one's days might be long in the land," a blessing desired by the worthies of old.

What more impressive scene can be witnessed than that of a godly old man, who has lived a long and useful life and is now awaiting the summons, "Come home." When you leave shore and are starting on an ocean voyage you remember the friends left behind; after sailing many days you think of those past and of those to whom you are going; as you near the other shore your mind is occupied by its pursuits and the faces of those who will there greet you. So these aged ones who linger with us a little while did once speak mostly of their familiar friends and their employments here, but now they are getting nearer the other shore, their thoughts go out to those who are waiting to receive them; and when they close their eyes on earth to see the glories of the celestial city, heaven seems nearer to us, and sometimes we feel we would like to go home with them.

These reflections have come to us as we have thought of the recent departure of Drs. William Royall and J. Lansing Burrows. Two brethren for many years served their day and generation faithfully, impressed the age in which they lived with their own personality, stood for truth and righteousness, and were gathered unto their fathers in a good old age. Dr. Royal I knew but little. I had seen him the few times I have visited Wake Forest College, and will long remember an address he delivered at a church near by when it was celebrating its Centennial. Dr. Royal had served the church in other days as its pastor and the address was a pleasant reminiscence, showing also the wit and pathos of the speaker. Others have told the story of his busy life, and clearly set forth the noble man, the pains-taking scholar, the efficient teacher, the consecrated christian. He rests from his labors and his works follow him.

Dr. Burrows we knew to love. He was one of the first to welcome us in the Southland. He showed us much kindness and proved himself a brother and a friend. It was our privilege to preach for him a few times at the Freemason Street church, Norfolk, and to occupy his room at his home with Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, who delighted so much to afford him happiness. About four years ago we were frequently with him, and saw somewhat of the large heartedness of the dear man whose death has made the world poorer. He was not only one of nature's noblemen but he was God's man. How he delighted to encourage and cheer others! His ready wit, his cheerful countenance, his wise sayings made him a friend to be prized. God be praised for such men. They are his gifts. While they remain they bless the world; and when they depart they leave many a green spot in other lives.

Letter from Chinkiang, China

Dear Recorder:—The letter last week left us standing in the crowded streets of Shing Kieh among the pigs, cows, donkeys, and various other wares of excited, curious Chinamen, who crowd about us still wondering "what sort of men are those foreigners," "what queer clothes they wear," and other thoughts of a similar nature. But as they crowd us unpleasantly, let us move on to some open place where we will have more room. Here we are off the street in a place large enough to accommodate us and our following. One of the native teachers borrows four benches and arranges them so as to form a pen into which we get and sit down to sing a song, "Jesus loves me." Perhaps most of the readers are familiar with the song; if not, I refer you to Sankey's Gospel Hymns, 1, 2, 3 and 4, No. 413. How pleased they seem. Unfortunately some one has commenced to distribute some leaflets on which this song is printed, and now they all are clamorous for them. What can be done? Not give another one for the present, and explain that when the preaching and singing are finished we will then sell them books and give them tracts to read. But now it is no easy matter, for some are very eager to secure a tract, and they are crowding us on all sides, until I am reminded of a scene of the Lake of Galilee, where the people so thronged him that he got into a boat and pushed off a little space from the shore to teach the people. The same kind of eager throng, but not the same teacher; and we feel sad when we think how imperfectly we make the people understand some of those same precious truths which fell from the lips of Jesus. Can it be that he can use such instruments as our poor stammering tongues to save this ignorant, degraded people? Can we get their minds to go beyond the idle thought of wondering what our clothes cost; how they are made; whether we can see out of such pale eyes as ours are; what we eat and drink; whether there are any joints in our legs, and if we once sit or lie down, whether we can get up again. For remember many of these people never saw a foreigner before; and that means they have seen and heard but very little outside of the village or country life, and circumscribed to a few miles radius; and the little they have heard is often times of the most abusive kind; and such ridiculous stories they hear and circulate about the wonderful foreign devil! For instance, I once had a Chinaman to ask what we ate in our country. "For," said he, "of course you have no rice, wheat and such things as grow in this country." "Then," said I, "of course we eat rocks, wood, sand, and such things as we have, especially the green grass and leaves of the trees when the spring comes." "Ah," said he, and paused so long in wonder that I was obliged to explain that what I said was only in jest, and that I replied after the manner of his question. That he was wrong in inferring we did not have such things as they cultivated and ate. From this I drew the similarity of our bodies, habits of life, &c., drawing the conclusion that, as the Scriptures teach, mankind has descended from the same parents, that we are all brethren with one Father, God.

Well, this is another digression, and really we must look about us, for these people are getting restless, and are shoving and pressing each other back and forth upon us in such a way as to give us trouble if we are not careful. Of course it is only the expression of a little fun on the part of some rude, mischievous boys; but riots often start from very insignificant beginnings. But a word of expostulation is sufficient. Now let us sing "There is a happy land." Have you heard it? These people never have, and do not conceive in the most remote way what land we are singing about; but they listen. And now as I stand on this bench and try to speak to them of Jesus and his love, of heaven and its joys, of the possible salvation from all sin and suffering by trusting in Jesus, I see how poorly they take in what I say. It is all quite new to them; and the new to them is often-times the incredible. But an hour and a half of this work, preaching and singing at the top of our voices, is rather fatiguing. Besides, the crowd is getting very restless. Let us refresh ourselves with a Chinese dinner at the inn. Now do not draw back and think you can't. You have the old idea of rats, cats and dogs served up in some heathenish soup, in your head,—I mean the idea is in your head, not the soup,—but let me enlighten you on one point. I have not seen or heard of one of these things having been served up in this part of the country, or elsewhere in China, unless perchance under the stress of starvation, when other people than the Chinese have been guilty of the same barbarous breach of etiquette at the table or elsewhere. One other point, and that is that some of their food is positively good and pleasant to the taste, though care should be exercised to choose the digestible, for much of their food is too rich with a kind of vegetable oil to be easily digested. (This, I think, is due to the effort to make good the loss the system sustains through lack of meat in their diet, because it is too expensive to be eaten save in small quantities.)

Three bowls of rice, besides fish and eggs. How much have you eaten? This is not bad, even for a Chinese table, is it? How eagerly the throng gathered about the door to watch us eat, discussing us as openly, and with the vulgar indifference to our feelings, that a naturalist would show in discussing a bug, treating us very much as Mark Twain's crows did the stranger.

Now for another out of doors preaching exercise, with singing, selling books, giving away tracts, &c. The crowds are more quiet, and listen better than they did before dinner, having become somewhat passive in their curiosity, and willing to listen to the foreign devil talk Chinese. This, they think, is wonderful, some supposing, or professing to suppose, that we have this ability to talk two different languages as a natural gift, needing only an opportunity to exercise the gift, and out the words flow. If they could see the struggles through which we pass with our teachers in getting control of the little of the Chinese we can use, they would soon change their minds as to this particular.

Back again, through a cold wind ten miles to Yangchow, where we arrive cold, hungry and tired. Early to bed, but not early to rise, for we hear the patter of rain on the roof, and know our over land trip back to Chinkiang is out of the question, for it is bitter cold, and we have not sufficient wraps for such exposure. So after breakfast we call another boat, with some difficulty, for it is hard to find a boatman willing to leave in such a cold rain, and we start back for home. A cold ride, and we sing some of Sankey's songs to pass away the time, and keep our minds occupied with pleasant thoughts. Home again, finding all well and happy, and eager to welcome us to the warm fireside with its glow and comfort.

L. N. CHAPPELL.

Chinkiang, Dec. 14, 1892.

From the Seminary.

Dear Recorder:—The months of January and May are very busy ones to the students. This is not meant to imply that they are not kept busy during the other months of the session. I think the universal testimony of the students would be that the student who takes four studies here and does his duty in each of them has not much time to get into mischief. He usually finds that it makes him do about, what he thinks at the time is his best, to carry that number of studies with any credit to himself. But pretty soon he has a strong hint that there is to be an examination in the not distant future; and if he is at all thoughtful, the propriety of being prepared for that trying day, is suggested to him. This means a good deal of reviewing, which must be done in addition, carrying on his regular work. Especially is this true of the intermediate examinations. It frequently happens that while a student is being examined on one subject, his other classes are going on. He has the pleasure of getting up that back recitation while he is resting. And if a lecture is given in one or more of his classes while he is enjoying the sweets of being examined in another, he must copy said lecture from some fellow classmate, if he gets it all. This is the rule here, and anything else, exceptions. So you see that if one has just about as much as he can carry for every day class work and feels he is doing his best, yet when examinations (especially the intermediate) come on, he finds that he must do a little bit better than his best.

It is because of these interesting interviews with my several professors that this letter was not written sooner. I had my last one a day or so ago, and feel quite relieved.

We have had some extremely cold weather, colder than most of us ever felt before. The people who live here say the past week or so was colder than it has been here for a number of years. The Ohio river has been for some time one tremendous field of ice. This of course stops all the boats. But the weather has moderated considerably, and it is hoped that all this snow and ice will soon be gone.

Two or three important changes have taken place among the Baptists of the city since my last. Broadway church has secured the services of Dr. W. S. Pickard to succeed Dr. H. A. Tupper, Jr. Dr. Pickard began his work about the first of the month. He is a young man, a full graduate of the Seminary and seems to have made a fine impression on his people.

Rev. Mr. Hubbard, who has been serving as temporary pastor of the church at Twenty-second and Walnut since the resignation of their former pastor, Rev. J. G. Bow, has accepted a permanent call recently extended. This, it seems to me, is one of the most inviting fields for usefulness, to be found anywhere in the city.

But while one gains, another loses. Rev. Fred. D. Hale gave his congregation an unpleasant surprise a few Sundays ago by tendering his resignation as pastor of McFerran Memorial church. He has done faithful and acceptable service there. It is not settled yet as to where he will go. A late number of the Kentucky Baptist put it among the things "possible and probable" that he will go to Birmingham, Ala., to succeed Dr. Pickard.

The students here from North Carolina and Wake Forest College were glad to have with us at supper one night during the Christmas holidays (Christmas work days for us), two of the former professors of Wake Forest College, Drs. G. W. Manly and A. S. Purinton, who were spending a part of their Christmas holidays in the city. The former is now professor of Latin in Denison University, Granville, Ohio, and the latter, professor of chemistry in the University of Nashville, Tennessee. Neither of them have forgotten their stay in the Old North State.

The Baptists of Kentucky have sustained a great loss in the somewhat recent death of Dr. R. M. Dudley, late president of Georgetown College. He was regarded as one of Kentucky's greatest and most useful men. This calls to mind the great loss our own State and College was called upon to sustain only a few days before that of Kentucky and Georgetown College. I refer to the sudden death on the 3d inst. of our beloved Dr. Wm. Royall. Although in a distant city, the news of his death cast gloom and sadness over the hearts of those of us here, who knew Dr. Royall, and who had the honor to sit at his feet in the class-room. I feel that he needs no praise or eulogy from me. I cannot easily express in words my high regard for this great and good man. Surely a great man has fallen in Israel! I read with touching interest the account in the last RECORDER of his funeral services at Wake Forest. I could but feel how true, so far as I knew, was all that was said on that occasion of the life which had just passed away. I think of him as living, not only as Professor Potent said, "pursuing his studies in the University of God," but as living also in the large number of young men and women, whose lives have been influenced by association with him. The suggestion of Bro. John E. White is, I think, a good one, and I believe no more fitting monument can be erected to the memory of our universally beloved teacher than to endow a "Chair of the Bible" at Wake Forest College in honor of him. I feel that the class of '91 would praise God for the privilege of doing what they could toward this object. Very truly, J. I. K

This, That and the Other, from Georgia.

Anent Dr. Royall, lately deceased, 'twas my privilege to dine in his home once while attending the commencement exercises at Wake Forest College. I was greatly impressed with his gentleness, delicate hospitality, charity toward opponents, and sweet forgiveness of spirit. While with him but a few hours, he left an impression upon his guest that years of labor, trial, joy and sorrow have not effaced. O for more like him.

Judge Winston's "Talks on Law" in the RECORDER have greatly interested and instructed me. None more so than the last one, viz: "Damages." Why do not all our religious papers give their readers more of such practical, informing reading, and less of the difference between "tweedledum and tweedledee?" It appears to me that the RECORDER was never better than now.

Dr. J. G. Gibson, our Mission Secretary, has removed from Crawford and established himself in Atlanta, the headquarters for Baptists and Baptist doings in Georgia. Many an hour hitherto spent at some railroad junction in weary waiting, can now be spent in his office, or at rest in his family. He is succeeding in his work grandly. Just now he is the most commanding figure among Baptists of Georgia.

Sunday last was the day, according to custom, for hearing reports from various standing committees in our Second Baptist church, Atlanta. We are not a people to advertise ourselves or blow aloud our doings, but a brief word of mention may be accounted interesting to your readers. The clerk, Bro. S. P. Richards, showed the present membership to be 1,008. Treasurer G. B. Adair reported for church expenses, monies spent on support and maintenance of the church, $4,512.09. Paid on new elegant church building to be occupied in April next, $70,000. The building completed will cost about $90,000. A. C. Briscoe, superintendent of the Sunday school, reported an average attendance of two hundred, and $440 raised by the school, besides hundreds of packages given to the Baptist Orphans Home. He said, not boastingly, that his school had raised almost as much money as all the balance of the Baptist schools in Atlanta. Last Sunday it gave $50 to State Missions.

The Young Men's Missionary Society, through their chairman, Walker Dunson, reported $2,436.76 received and paid out. A part of this is given to sustain Capitol Avenue Mission, a church of eighty members, and another part to Ira Street Mission, a church of 275 members.

The Young Ladies Missionary Society raised $112.15. The Boys Society made no report. Total reported as raised by the church, through regular channels, $11,501.76. Unreported amounts are estimated at enough to swell the grand total to $15,000. The showing was regarded as very fine. It makes us grateful to God and very proud of Dr. H. McDonald, our worthy pastor.

Dr. G. W. Lasher of Cincinnati, editor of the Journal and Messenger, was present and spoke words of high commendation of the reports.

Other things I must keep till another time.

Decatur, Ga., Jan. 27, 1893.

We have received handsome calendars from the Pope Manufacturing Co., Baltimore, Md., Messrs. A. G. Elliott & Co., Philadelphia, Pa. The Chatham Manufacturing Co., Elkin, N. C., and Messrs. C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The new Gregory Seed Catalogue for 1893 is the most valuable ever issued. It is greatly enlarged and contains new departments, as well as new varieties of seeds and plants. No more reliable catalogue is ever published than this, as every seed sold from it carries the guarantee of a dealer who has always received and merited the confidence of his customers. Mr. Gregory raises the large majority of his seeds on his own farms, and has been very successful in the new varieties he has introduced. A card to J. J. H. Gregory & Son, Marblehead, Mass., will bring a copy of this handsome catalogue free, to any applicant.

Welsh Arbor or Little River Baptist Church.

Dear Recorder:—Since my last, I have helped in a meeting of six days at the above named place. This church is a little east of south from Asheboro, in Randolph county. Bro. M. J. Leach began preaching at this point about five years ago in a little log school-house. The people first built a large arbor, and in the year 1892 they erected a house of worship. It was my privilege to preach the first sermon in the new building at the beginning of the meeting, taking for my text Luke 10: 42—"But one thing is needful."

The house is 28x48, 11 feet high, and is finished all but ceiling or plastering. Up to Dec. 24, 1892, it had cost $322, all paid but $110.81. This house has been built by the earnest labors of Bro. J. G. Parks. He has paid the $110 due on the house, and any brother or sister wishing to help in a good cause can do so by sending it to Bro. J. G. Parks, Strieby, N. C. Dear brethren, help Bro. Parks, by sending him at least one dollar, which will be kindly received by him. Having been at the church, I know that I am right in saying that you will invest your money in a good cause.

The meeting at this church did much good. Several made a profession of faith in Christ and the cause was much advanced. This has been, and is yet, a mission point of the Liberty Association. Brother M. J. Leach and Bro. John A. Summy have been doing the preaching for the people at this place, beside doing other ministerial labor. God has greatly blessed the labor of these two brethren here and at other points.

The State Mission Board would do well not to overlook this section of the State, but help brethren Leach and Summy on in the good work they are doing; also help Bro. Parks to finish the house of worship at the Welsh Arbor.

BLACKWOOD'S CHAPEL.

This church is in Montgomery county near Pekin. It was built in the year 1853 or '54 under the pastoral care of the late Rev. A. D. Blackwood. Since the house was built, several of our best preachers have served this church in the capacity of pastor. The building is one of the best houses in the Montgomery Association, and was put up at the time when the brethren who built it had the money to do it with, and it stands to day as a monument to their memory, and to remind us of their love for Christ and his cause. Some of those brethren are still living, but they have moved away from the church of their first love and are worshiping God at other places, and others (the most of them) have gone up to the church on high to join in the worship of the redeemed in glory.

It has been my pleasure to help Bro. H. M. Ingram in a meeting of a week with this church. We had a good meeting. God blessed the word preached, and the church was spiritually helped and souls were saved. It was demonstrated that the brethren were right who believed that a good meeting could be had in the winter month of December as well as in the warm months of summer. Bro. Ingram, the pastor of this church, is doing a good work for his Master not only here but with other churches. He is called for all his time in 1892, except one Sabbath, and doubtless that will also be called for. But Bro. Ingram has some of the very best brethren and sisters in his different churches who help him in the good cause. Brother Ingram has worked his way up to where he is to day, and though he has trials the world knows nothing of, he is one of the best of christian men, and, considering his opportunities, a good preacher and doing much good. He has a nice family and a happy home. Two of his children, a daughter and son, were saved in the recent meeting. I wish to express my thanks to the brethren and sisters of this church and of other churches who received and treated me so kindly during the meeting.

CAVE HILL.

This is one of the great wonders of our State. I was born and reared in Moore county, adjoining Montgomery county in which this wonderful hill is located, yet I did not know of its existence. It can be found two and a half miles south of Pekin, on the east side of Cheak's creek. It seems as if one half or one third of the hill had let loose and slid off in a westwardly direction, leaving the other part as God had first made it. West and south of the hill is an extended plane, which impresses one with the thought that it was once a body of water. This is, of course, but mere speculation; but on looking at Cave Hill and the plane, you are forced to the conclusion that God is great in creation. The Hill was split open, half being rock and the other half dirt, in a mixed state. It looks as if there was a shove of a part of the Hill to the west. Now when and by whom was this shoving or splitting done? The answer is, God did it, and perhaps at the time when His Son expired on the cross. There is a similar intermixture of rock and dirt in the westerly shoved-off part and the remaining bulk, which fact, to my mind, shows that both were once a solid hill or mountain. The opening between the two is several feet wide. Some of the rocks in the shoved-off part are thirty or forty feet long, and thick in proportion. Also, there are some very large trees in this part; and from their size it would seem that many years have intervened since God displayed his wondrous power in this mighty upheaval of the earth.

In the standing part of the Hill are some things of note. At one place is a cave into which I did not go, but I was told that a person could walk quite a distance into the cave in an upright posture. It would be well to have the door of the cave made larger, and let the cave be explored and what is within made known. At another part there is to be seen what is called the "Cupboard." It resembles an old fashioned cupboard, with shelves within, beside other things belonging to that piece of furniture. The "Eagle's Nest" in the end of one of the great bare rocks, along with other noticeable features, make this Hill a place of no little interest.

I am now through with my travels in the counties of Montgomery, Randolph and Moore. I have helped in meetings at many of the churches and made the acquaintance of many. I thank God for the favor and for his blessing on my labors, and also for the good that has been done.

The Hope of the Country.

At the late Baptist State Convention of Alabama, Dr. Geo. B. Eager, of Anniston, said that the hope of this country was wholesome Baptist literature, and that it should be sown knee deep throughout the land. The American Baptist Publication Society was organized to meet just this demand. It proposes to send colporteures into hedges and by-lanes of city and country alike to take to the destitute families the gospel. "Colportage is preaching the gospel of Jesus to the poor at their own homes."

The Proposed Wm. Royall Chair at Wake Forest College.

Most heartily do I thank Bro. White and Bro. Cullom for their wise suggestions. They have said exactly the right thing. When Bro. White wrote that a monument ought to be erected to the memory of Dr. William Royall, I have no doubt that every reader of the RECORDER said as Bro. Cullom did, "Amen." And when the latter suggested that the monument should be "The William Royall Chair of the Bible and Moral Philosophy," there were thousands, I doubt not, who, in their hearts, seconded the idea. Nothing more appropriate could well be imagined. One who has the right to speak with full knowledge has said that if Dr. Royall could himself express his wishes in the matter, he would prefer such a monument as has been proposed to any other. I happen to know that, with some others of the faculty, he has long desired that the Bible should be taught in the regular College course. Now let us go to work—all of us—and build the monument.

The amount mentioned by Bro. Cullom will, I fear, hardly be sufficient. If the rate of interest should remain permanently at 8 per cent., $20,000 would be enough. But this cannot be expected and probably ought not to be desired. $25,000 will be needed. Can it be raised? I think so, if we all lay hold together. Nay, I know that it can.

In order that no time may be lost, and that we have something definite before us, I venture to suggest the following plan:

1. That Bro. Briggs, the College Treasurer, open a special account with the "William Royall Chair," and credit it with all money sent to him and designated for said Chair, separate and distinct from all other funds of the College.

2. That if, on January 1, 1894, the sum of $25,000 shall have been placed in his hands in money, land, or good securities, it shall forever be known as the "Endowment of the William Royall Chair," and the income therefrom shall forever be used to pay the salary of a Professor of the Bible and Moral Philosophy.

3. That if, on January 1, '94, it be found that the sum of $25,000 as aforesaid has not been secured, then the Treasurer may return any funds designated as aforesaid to the donors, provided that application be made to him not later than May 1, '94.

4. That a committee of one from each class which has graduated from the College since Dr. Royall's connection with it (to be appointed hereafter) shall, with such aid as can be given by the President of the College, have the general direction of the canvass, and shall seek to secure the aid of their class mates and other contemporaries in College, and of the friends of Wake Forest in and out of North Carolina.

5. That as many of the old students as possible be asked to obligate themselves to give or secure from others gifts of one hundred dollars each before Jan. 1, '94, and to announce to the President of the College their willingness to do so as soon as they can, with the understanding that sight-drafts for the amounts thus subscribed will be placed in bank Dec. 15, 1893, if not paid before that time.

6. That all subscriptions be announced by the President, and all payments by the Treasurer, weekly, in the RECORDER.

7. That no amount designated for said Chair shall suffer any diminution for expenses of collection or in any other way.

8. That in the event of the endowment of the "William Royall Chair," the Trustees of the College be asked to create twenty five scholarships for the use of the sons of such ministers of all evangelical denominations as may not otherwise be able to educate their sons in College.

I shall be very glad to receive suggestions for the improvement of this plan at any point. Of course, it is tentative and provisional. But let us go right to work on this line. Why should not the RECORDER of two weeks hence announce that $5,000 or $10,000 has been pledged?

I venture to suggest that the following gentlemen serve on the Committee, representing the several classes, with J. H. White of '90 as chairman: J. D. Hufham, '60; T. F. Toon, '61; J. K. Howell, '62; F. H. Ivey, '66; G. W. Sanderlin, '67; S. E. Overby, '68; R. P. Thomas, '69; S. W. Brewer, '76; H. A. Brown, '71; J. S. Mitchell, '72; W. H. O. McDowell, '73; G. W. Purefoy, '74; Thomas Carrick, '75; J. T. Bland, '76; C. W. Scarboro, '77; W. E. Daniel, '78; N. Y. Gulley, '79; J. N. Holding, '80; N. R. Pittman, '81; J. W. Fleetwood, '82; E. E. Jenkins, '83; W. V. Savage, '84; J. A. Beam, '85; Jacob Stewart, '86; T. E. Cheek, '87; M. E. Keeler, '88; H. A. Foushee, '89; Wayland Mitchell, '91; W. R. Cullom, '92; I. T. Newton, '93.

Everything moves on smoothly at the College. Several of the Professors are carrying extra work since Dr. Royall's death, and will continue to do so till Commencement, when the Trustees will elect a new Professor. A number of applications have already been received—three of them from Baptist "Fellows in English" of Johns Hopkins University. Despite the intensely cold weather, the health of the students and of the community is as good as I have ever known it to be.

I am trying to complete a file of The Wake Forest Student for the College. Who will send me copies for April, July, September and October, 1889, and for March and November, 1888? I would be very grateful for them.

Some Scattered Thoughts.

BY SCATTERHEAD.

"Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

"He made himself of no reputation."

"He humbled himself."

Dyspeptics say they have an "all gone feeling," and I think this is a true description of the feelings of every unsaved sinner. He is restless and wretched, blind, hungry and naked, with an aching void that Satan's dainties cannot satisfy, and he is all the time wanting, but hardly knows what, until he takes the place of a lost and helpless, burdened and condemned sinner at the foot of the cross, and is enabled by grace divine to trust the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation, and in the blessed Saviour he finds his wants supplied, his desires satisfied, and the aching, empty void filled. When "Christ is formed in the soul the hope of glory," self is a horrible and repulsive object. Yes, when Christ enters the heart, Satan and pride scamper away, self is entirely forgotten, and the soul is absorbed in Christ and rejoices in his love. A man absorbed in self is very apt to forget his God. Lots of people make self their god.

Our Saviour said that some of the very religious fellows then upon the earth were more anxious for the praise of men than for the praise of God. We are all very free to abuse the old hypocritical Pharisee who would toot his horn very loud when he would give a little money to the poor, but he would rarely notice the poor beggars unless he had his horn with him so that he could publish his benevolent deeds abroad and thereby attract the attention of the people so that he might get their praise, the food his old maw craved. The old hypocrite was not only anxious to have the praise of men for his deeds of charity, but he was very anxious for people to see him standing around on the corners of the streets making his long-winded prayers to his god, "old self," and he was pretty sure the people would call him a very good saint, when his heart was so rotten Satan was almost ashamed to be caught in his company. The blessed Master said they all got the reward they were seeking after, namely, the praise of "worms," and very sorry food at best. Spiritual pride was the great sin among the Pharisees, and this great evil seems to be clinging to many individuals as well as churches at the present day. Pride is one of the biggest evils that bothers us, and seems like it is a very long time dying, and does some powerful struggling before it "winks out."

There is nothing that God hates more than pride, because it gives to man the portion which belongs to our God. God will destroy the name of the proud, and there is a day coming when the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of man laid low." The christian cannot afford for pride to dwell at his home; if he does, he certainly is knocked out of communion with the Lord Jesus, for he don't spend his time in talking to a "puffed up" fellow.

This seems to be a time when a great many want to parade their religious performances through the newspapers, and every other way, just so they can catch all the applause possible. A big lot of people are very hungry for "taffy." Many persons are led to give big sums to churches and benevolent objects, that their splendid gifts may be heralded abroad, and they can receive much praise from man for their generous offerings. Some men will resort to all kinds of means in order to get a little pride food. Pride food don't have any nutritive qualities about it, but it has the elements of swelling, and is composed of about the same stuff that puffs out a balloon. Some churches seem to take great pains to let the world know about their large contributions and their mighty growth in numbers. Pride is at the bottom of a great deal of such work. Pride is a mighty poison to our spiritual nature, and it would be best for us all to take a large dose of humility to counteract the deadly poison. The more we feed on Christ, the more of his Holy Spirit and genuine humility we will possess, and less of pride. The more of Christ we have in us, the less room there will be for pride. Christ emptied himself, and then humbled himself, and took upon him the form of a servant—all as an example to us to kill out our pride. We should endeavor to let the same mind of humility be in us that our blessed Lord and Master possessed. May Christ be our all, and every thing we attempt, let it be for him alone. He only is worthy of all our praise. We hope soon to mingle our voices with the redeemed around the throne, and sing the song spoken of in Revelation 5, and let us all do our best to bring our souls into harmony with that song here.

"Be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." 1 Pet. 5: 5, 6.

Common Schools in the South.

George W. Cables has his say in The Cosmopolitan about the education of the poor whites and blacks in the South. He tells us first that the idea of the South throughout is that that country should be governed by gentlemen. "A citizenship of and a government by gentlemen only is the perfect formula of social order and fortune" to the southerner. This is a beautiful idea indeed, if only a country does its utmost in its power to make all its citizens gentlemen.

The first preparation for this ideal State is the education of the common people, and in this respect Mr. Cables believes the southern States to be lacking. He finds that in the South generally there is ample State provision for the education of white young men whose fathers are able to pay for their sons' schooling. There are costly select schools, colleges and universities everywhere for the few, while the children of the many are growing to manhood in blank ignorance.

The State outlay for the University of South Carolina is $184 per student. The State outlay per pupil for the children in the public schools is $1 84. The total value of all the public school buildings in South Carolina is less than one-quarter the value of the university and military institute—the two higher schools maintained by the State.

A like condition prevails in the other States. Mr. Cables quotes the statement of the commissioner of immigration for Alabama that the lack of public schools is what prevents people from settling in Alabama. —Exchange.

What You Gain.

In patronizing the Sunday school literature of the American Baptist Publication Society, our Sunday schools gain great advantages.

1. Most of its Helps are cheaper than any others.

2. Their mechanical make-up is as perfect as human skill can make them.

3. The Society has so many other things that Sunday schools need, such as libraries, Bibles, Testaments, class-books, song books; and all these can be had at the lowest prices.

4. Every dollar spent for its literature adds strength to the Society to enable it to assist poor and needy schools.

5. How pleasant to know that the profits on our literature go to help schools not able to supply themselves with needed Helps. All who rally to the American Baptist Publication Society, will help it to help others.

To Kill Ants.

We have always been troubled with ants. Last winter my kitchen floor wore through beside the stove. There were more ants than dirt under the floor, as one of my family expressed it. Had read in the Rural about poisoning ants, so I placed among them under the floor lard, syrup and arsenic thoroughly mixed; result, the pest of ants, which had grown worse every previous year, has been unknown this summer. Here in my office, sixty yards from the house, I keep a dish of the same "ant mixture."—Pacific Rural Press.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

The Missionary Call.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Your editorial in the RECORDER of January 18th entitled "The Missionary Call," was excellent. If it does not succeed in its purpose of calling forth expressions from our missionaries, it will surely not fail to command the attention of the ministry at home. It must not only arouse an ordinary interest as a matter worthy of discussion, but it calls every conscientious preacher before the bar of self to answer its question. Some of us have been anxious about the very question raised. In fact, it is to be doubted whether any preacher of the gospel entirely escapes from twinges of conscience when the great and terrible need of the heathen is brought home to him, or is entirely free from impressions, coming now and again, that he himself ought to become a missionary. To all, therefore, the discussion of the missionary call in the columns of the RECORDER will be of anxious interest.

That discussion can but be productive of good. It certainly will not have the effect of binding any closer the hood of traditional superstition, the venerable and hoary relic of priestcraft, which has been thrown around this matter of a call to the ministry. God be praised if it tear it off altogether from the minds of our people.

We no longer subscribe to the doctrine of "apostolic succession." Why? Because it is neither scriptural nor reasonable. Besides it tends to religious oligarchy. And the sooner we rid ourselves of the other and companion error of a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry, with its attendant theatricals of seasons, visions and visitations of angels, nearer will we accord with truth, Scripture and common sense, and the sooner will the Master be commended to all hearts. As Baptists we should have learned by this time, having had to contend with Romanism at every step of our progress, that the more divine authority you ascribe to men, human men, the more you becloud Christ to the minds and hearts of the masses, the more bigotry and religious slavery there will be, and completer will be the shifting of the burden of an individual responsibility to God.

The divinity that doth hedge a preacher, though almost a visible halo according to the popular mind, proves upon close inspection to be a very flimsy fabric, chiefly made of conceit. No one knows this better than the preacher himself. He is only a man. His religion is of no finer quality than that of any other christian, and comes to him in no miraculous manner. He, too, must "work out" his salvation "with fear and trembling." Let us be done with "favoritism" in religion.

If we have not altogether mistaken the spirit and teaching of Christ himself, every christian is a preacher of Christ. "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God." Luke 9: 57-62. Have we any reason to believe that the man, the two men, thus commanded were different in any way from the others who believed on the same occasion? Christ could not have meant to single them out and "call" them to preach. If any one suggests that Paul provided another way, we would reply that we are followers of Christ.

The position taken, therefore, is this: That every truly regenerated man is from the very nature of the case called to tell "the old, old story;" to proclaim glad tidings of salvation; to preach the gospel. Something has come to him, has taken hold of his nature, and given it a new bent, has thrilled his life. It is good; it is wonderful. It is glorious. He simply must, if he be true to his feelings, proclaim the fountain and source of his great joy to his friends and his fellowmen. What else are we but teachers of this same truth?

The call to preach, dates from the hour of conversion. Our entrance into what is called the active ministry is simply the process of sanctification developed up to that point in us at which we feel conscience bound to give all our efforts to the one effort of saving men. And it is firmly believed that if the process of growing in grace were uninterrupted and persisted in, every christian would reach that point of self consecration. When he has reached that point, how he shall preach or teach Christ is determined entirely by his own judgment of his fitness and talent. The Spirit guides him to that decision, but it does not force or push him to it. Shall he illustrate the beauty of Christ's religion by showing what a life may become under its influence? Behold the saints who do this every day. Preachers, all of them. Shall he acquire property and preach the while Christ's merciful and benevolent gospel by giving? Behold some of our brethren who are doing this. Is he gifted with his pen? Behold the editors of our religious papers. Some of them much more effective in teaching Christ in their work than in the pulpit. Is he a student, an investigator? Behold our professors. Pray, if they are not preaching the gospel, how do they reconcile their present work with the "Rev." before their name? Is he fluent of speech? Behold that saintly host, around whom the false glamour of pretended interpositions has been thrown, breaking the news of salvation with gesture and tongue. We have said that his judgment must decide. It must. He is not consecrated. He consecrates himself. When we hear a man say that God took him up against his will and perforce put him into the ministry, we cannot think that he has taken much pains to canvass and examine the steps which led him into the ministry, and that he is dealing more or less in hypocrisy. He may not be conscious of it. On the other hand, he may be. God does not force men into the ministry. He makes no man a preacher unless he wants to be a preacher. Dr. Broadus said at Wake Forest in 1891, "It is not a question of 'Oh Lord, have I got to preach the gospel?' but a question of 'O Lord, may I preach it?'"

Now this brings us directly to the point raised by the RECORDER, "Does the missionary have a separate call to be a missionary?" The missionary himself, we suppose, is best fitted to give an answer. But with the view already expressed of the nature of the gospel call, we cannot see how there is any separate call for missionary work. The threshhold of every ministerial career is the entire surrender of one's service to Christ. Whether he serve in China or Wake county, his relation to Christ is not altered one particle. He is still simply Christ's servant. All these distinctions such as "foreign field" and "home field" are made by men. We do not think Christ would have liked that word "foreign" any way. With him there was but one country, and that "the world." Every minister before commencing work stands for a short time before the vineyard. If he is not informed upon the state of religion in other lands, he does not see that part of the vineyard at all. So he commences work at home. If he be informed, he surveys the whole field, and either wisely or unwisely selects a place to begin work. If his opportunities for acquiring missionary information have been good, unless some circumstance or condition be in the way, he becomes impressed with the awful condition of the destitute portions of the vineyard, and after careful study of the whole question, he decides to be a missionary. After he has offered himself to Christ for service, the selection of a place to work we believe to be simply a matter of mental decision and resolution. Full surely the Spirit of God is with him and in him, guiding his judgment, but not controlling it. If God controlled the judgment of men there would be no mistakes. The preachers call is simply to work for the Master. The Holy Spirit influences, but never commands authoritatively to go to such and such a place. The missionary in reaching his decision has the Spirit's help in the same way. He is influenced by God only in the same manner and degree that a preacher in North Carolina is influenced to accept a call to Virginia. He wavers and hesitates in just the same way, fearful that his judgment may not decide for him the right thing. We do not say that Bro. Wright had a separate and distinct call to Richmond, or that Dr. Pritchard had a "new call" to Charlotte. The missionary becomes a missionary because his mind and his heart convince him that he can do more for his Master in a foreign country where the laborers are few and the need great, than he can here where the gospel is preached everywhere. He is not able in peace, since he is anxious to serve Christ, to disregard these voices. For after all they are God's voices; and this is God's manner of speaking to men. The process is a mental one.

Men are led to give impressions of this kind lodgment in their minds, because in their reading or hearing missionary information comes in their way. The number of our missionaries has increased in exactly the same proportion as our means of spreading mission facts and appeals have grown. The increase has been a direct result of our increased means of learning more of the condition of the heathen. And as these varied sources of information are multiplied every day, we may expect more and more, especially of the younger portion of the ministry, to remove their work to the remote corners of the Lord's vineyard. Not that any more will feel themselves miraculously called and set apart for special places, but that heart burdened by the cries of destitution that come to their ears, many anxious to make as much as possible of their lives in Christ's service will cheerfully, even gladly, accept the invitation to serve another field, just over the water, among new brethren. With Christ, the Pacific is no wider than the Mississippi. Nor is labor among the people of China holier than our work among the people here. JNO. E. WHITE.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. From the Little River Association Border.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Perhaps our brethren would like to hear from us down here in the extreme border of the Little River Association.

Nine years ago, when I moved here, the nearest Missionary Baptist church was ten or fifteen miles away. I was a Baptist here alone, except my wife. The people here did not know much about Baptist doctrine.

A few years later, the Benson Baptist church (as is now) was organized with a very few members, of which I was the only male member for one year and a half. I had reason to rejoice when the Lord began to add to this church. Now the people are becoming better acquainted with the Baptists.

We have a little church some two or three miles below Benson. And still we hear the people saying we want Baptist preaching here. This reveals the fact that we are marching on to greater results under the guidance of the Lord of hosts, thanks be unto his holy name.

Now, a word for the RECORDER. If the people would take the RECORDER and read it, they would know more about the Baptists, and the good work would spread over our country the faster. I cannot afford to be without it. It is a welcome visitor to my home. May God bless it and the editor, and may he live many years to encourage us on our pilgrim journey.

Yours in Christ,

N. H. GIBBS.

Woman's Missionary Department.

President Woman's Central Committee of North Carolina, MISS FANNIE E. HECK, Raleigh, N. C.; Secretary, MRS. J. A. BRIGGS, Raleigh, N. C.

Subject for January:—Italy.

"The people which sat in darkness saw great light and, to them which sat in the region of the shadow of death, light is sprung up." Missionaries, 3; native assistants, 27; stations, 59; churches, 16; membership, 293; baptisms, 40. Contributions, $500.

STUDY TOPICS.—Past of Baptist history in Italy, a period of seed-sowing. Present results of a substantial character. Great need of chapels. Growing favor of Bible christianity with government and people. Corruption of Romish church coming to light. An open Bible and free gospel destined in due time to deliver Italy. Yet four months till close of Centennial harvest.

Centennial Chapel Cards and Certificates.

For use of Sunday-schools the Centennial Chapel Cards and Certificates may be obtained free, in any number required, by sending to Maryland Baptist Mission Rooms, No ten East Fayette Street, Baltimore. A circular to Sunday-schools from the Home and Foreign Boards, and the leaflet "Annie's Bricks," will be sent with each order. Should a larger distribution of the leaflet be desired, it can be purchased at two cents per copy.

Woman's Mission Societies or individuals in North Carolina may obtain the Chapel Cards and Certificates free by applying to the Central Committee, Miss Fannie E. Heck, Raleigh, N. C.

From the State Centennial Committee.

In a plain statement from the State Centennial Committee, Dr. T. H. Pritchard, Chairman of the Committee, says in their behalf:

"This large sum of money has been apportioned to the different States, not by the Centennial Committee, but by the Convention; and while Kentucky is asked to raise $30,000; Maryland, with only 12,000 Baptists, $25,000; little South Carolina, $17,000; North Carolina's part is put down at $15,000.

"All the Associations have been assigned to different members of the Committee; each Association is committed to the care of three or four men to visit themselves, or see that every church of that body is visited in the interest of this work. The Central Committee of the Woman's Mission Societies have promised us their hearty co operation, and hope to bring every Woman's Mission Society in the State, and all, or almost all, the Sunday-schools into the work, and by the use of Chapel Cards and the diffusion of missionary literature to awaken much interest and raise a considerable part of this Permanent Fund; indeed, a very respectable sum has already been realized from this source.

"Let it be understood that money raised by the Chapel Card plan is not specially to be devoted to the building of churches, but may be used for any of the objects of missions. And perhaps, it should be said that money already raised, or that which may be raised by the Women's Societies, or the Sunday-schools, will be credited to the churches with which they are connected.

"Miss Fannie E. Heck is the President, and Mrs. James A. Briggs is Treasurer of this Executive Committee, and both reside in Raleigh. From them you can get Chapel Cards, and all the literature you may need, or any member of this Committee will be glad to supply you."

With the approval and under the direction of this Committee, the Woman's Central Committee of Missions, has prepared a great Centennial Fund Record Book, to be kept as a perpetual memorial with the records of the State Mission Board. In this the names of all women and children contributing to the Centennial Fund will be entered. Churches in which every woman contributes will be entered on a Roll of Honor. Those in which every woman of the church and every child of the Sunday-school contributes, will be entered on a list of Most Honorable Mention.

While no limit is put on the amount given, each woman is asked to contribute at least thirty cents, and each child, ten.

To facilitate this work, subscription lists headed "Subscriptions to the Centennial Chapel Fund by the Women and Children of the —— Baptist Church of the —— Association," plainly stating these facts, have been prepared. These will be placed in the hands of well known mission workers, or of those recommended by the ministers as "earnest and energetic."

Shall not your church receive Most Honorable Mention in this book of memorial? The Centennial Year draws near its close. With it the "Centennial Record Book" will close; with it a great and never returning opportunity to forward the coming of God's kingdom will pass.

What shall be your part in this work?

FANNIE E. HECK,
Pres. Wom. Cen. Com. of Missions.

Carolinians and Virginians Pleased by Rev. A. C. Dixon at New Brunswick, N. J.

Dear Recorder:—The day of prayer for colleges was observed here as usual last Thursday at Rutgers College. Rev. A. C. Dixon was the preacher of the occasion, and he had in his audience four Carolinians and quite a host of Virginians, most of whom live in this classic city. The sermon was remarkable for comprehensiveness of treatment, keenness of analysis, beauty of imagery and forcefulness of statement. The two hundred and fifty college students, and a large number of students from the Theological Seminary who were present with professors and tutors of the college and seminary, and pastors of all the evangelical churches of the city, were kept awake as never before on the day of prayer by the bright thoughts and striking anecdotes of the Brooklyn divine. Some of those in the audience representing the very conservative element of this Dutch Reform and Presbyterian stronghold, scarcely knew what to think or say of the many amusing anecdotes related by the preacher. They were not accustomed to alternate smiling and weeping induced by the sermon on this occasion. They see and know little of the popular style of preaching. The Dutch Reform and Presbyterian preachers of this section seldom intentionally provoke a smile during their sermons. I am not sure but that they consider it a mistake to do so. This may be why they do not reach the crowds that are drawn by the wide awake preaching of men like A. C. Dixon. I have heard the sermons preached in the college here on the day of prayer for colleges every year for six years, and I think Bro. Dixon's sermon suited the boys for whose benefit these sermons are preached better than any of the others that I have heard. His popular style of preaching, together with his rich spiritual thought and intense earnestness, insure success in the work recently inaugurated by him in Brooklyn for the benefit of the non-church goers of the city. Several men have tried and failed in the same hall in which he now conducts Sunday afternoon services with gratifying prospects of good success.

"Tom" is still holding forth in New York against the corrupt officials of that city. He has an inexhaustible theme, and seems equal to the work undertaken. He has passed through fiery trials since the beginning of his crusade, and is now enduring hardness, but he is undaunted by opposition, and his gifted tongue seems, from all accounts, to grow more and more eloquent with the passing months of his energetic life. He does not appear to melt with heat or freeze with cold, but remains ever the same.

The Lone Star. The History of the Telugu Mission. By David Downie, D. D. 12mo, 232 pp. Price, $1 00. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society, 1420 Chestnut Street.

No mission in existence has had a more romantic interest attaching to it than has our Baptist mission among the Telugus. Its unpromising beginning, its struggle for continuance, its awful famine, its wonderful ingathering, its "Lone Star," its magic name of Clough, have all combined to give it a place in the hearts of American Baptists unsurpassed by that of any other.

ROBERT I. ROGERS & Co,,

From Rev. W. F. Watson at Roxboro.

Dear Recorder:—We have been here just one month and are beginning to fall in with our environments. To correspond with one's environments simply means to live, so say the scientists, and that is what we are doing up here in cold, hilly Roxboro, possibly no colder than the sea shore, for it really seems to some of us that the north pole has been making a protracted visit to all this "sunny Southland." Nature is beginning, however, to present a more genial and lovely aspect at this time, and from present indications the venal season will soon be upon us.

Thoughtful friends had moved our furniture from the depot, and provided the pantry with the substantials of life previous to our arrival, so that we found but little to do save to enter upon our career of housekeeping, as though we had been living here for a number of years.

Bro. Lamberth remarked to me at the recent session of our Convention in Raleigh, that if I accepted this work, I would enter upon one of the best fields in the State; and from my limited experience, I am prepared to believe his statement. He is held in loving remembrance by all our people for his work's sake. The church here reluctantly parted with him, but acquiesced in his desire, because he thought it best to leave. May the blessing of God follow him and crown his labors, in his new field, with more abundant success even than he experienced here, is the earnest desire and prayer of our people as well as his successor in office.

Our work here in Roxboro is very hopeful. The church services are largely attended, rendering our seating capacity at times inadequate for the congregations that assemble to worship with us, and making a more commodious and commodious church edifice, [illegible] desirable and necessary, but one of the most desirable achievements of Roxboro in the near future.

The Sunday-school, under the admirable management of Supt. T. H. Street, is a great source of inspiration to the pastor as he peeps in Sunday after Sunday, and watches with intense interest the enthusiasm with which teacher imparts, and pupil receives, instruction from the sacred page.

The weekly prayer-meetings are no less inspiring—the house well filled at almost every Thursday evening service with anxious hearers, and I trust doers, of the word. I know no other place in the State where the church members manifest so lively an interest in the prayer-meeting.

Our singing is good. Under the skilful leadership of Prof. R. H. Dowdy who taught vocal music in Virginia for a number of years, and the untiring and efficient efforts of Sister E. J. Johnson who has presided at our organ for quite a while, our singing is not surpassed by any church of the same size in the State, or out of it, for aught I know.

With such auxiliary forces as these at the pastor's command, he turns his face and heart most hopefully to the future, and feels confident, with the Lord's blessing, great good will be accomplished during the year of grace '93.

May the Lord's blessing be upon you, my brother, in the publication of your invaluable paper, and make it a greater power for good than it has ever been.

Fraternally, W. F. WATSON.

A correspondent of the Smithfield Herald, writing from Rome, Johnston county, states that on the night of January 19th, 1893, Wiley Peacock, his wife and infant, his brother and also a cousin, were burned to death in their house. The parties were colored. It is supposed that the fire was of accidental origin. Wiley Peacock, it is said, was a tenant of Jeremiah Lee.

At China Grove, Rowan county, last Thursday, J. W. Bolin shot and mortally wounded J. W. Sechler. After being shot Sechler stated that it was the deliberate and premeditated act of Bolin, but the latter claims that the shooting was accidental. Sechler died at 12 o'clock Thursday night. Immediately after the shooting Bolin was arrested, and released on a bond of $200.

The New Year.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have lived to see thirty-three new-year days come and go since I began to preach the gospel. I feel grateful to God for his marked goodness to me all the way during the past years of my ministerial life. I want to congratulate my brother preachers who have been permitted to live to see the first day of the year 1893. I also express my best wishes and earnest prayers for your success as ministers of the gospel of Christ for the year upon which you have entered. God help you, my dear brethren, to bring in the precious golden sheaves. To you, Bro. Bailey, let me say, I thank God for sparing your precious life to see this another new year. Your earnest work and faithful labor as editor of the RECORDER has been greatly blessed of the Lord during the time of your editorial life. May your life be spared during the year, and may you have God's help to enable you to make a still better paper for your readers.

To the different Boards—the State Mission, the Education, the Foreign Mission, the Sunday-school, and the Home Mission Boards, with all the rest—I say to all of you a happy new-year greeting. Now, as the work of the year is before you and the field is ripe for the harvest, God help you to do, and to have done, said work. May you be directed in your deliberations, so as to advance the cause in all the departments of which you are representatives. May you be enabled to do more this year than has been done in any year in the past history of your several departments.

To the churches and members—after exhorting to you a brother christian's love and a happy new year's greeting, I wish to express my desire for your temporal and spiritual welfare during the present year's labor. May the blessing of God be with you during the year and help you to take care of your pastors; also may you be enabled to give more and do more for the general work of missions this year than in any year gone by.

May God's blessings rest on the dear old North State and her happy people during the date 1893. W. A. BARRETT.

A Protest.

Dear Recorder:—I want to protest against the new freak of the Centennial Committee. Bro. J. Hartwell Edwards, in the article "The Centennial of Missions," says:

"There will be a Roll of Honor and a Roll of Most Honorable Mention for those persons who give up to, or beyond, certain amounts that will be indicated."

I am as good a friend to the Centennial movement as any member of the Committee, and expect my church to give according to her ability for the "Centennial Fund." But I must, as a Baptist, protest at any such distinctions as the above extract indicates. The motive and principle of such an appeal are unworthy of the Centennial movement, and contrary to scriptural teaching. The Lord Jesus said the two mites of the widow was more than the large amounts of the rich. He laid down our ability as the measure of our duty, and why should the Centennial Committee press the people to a certain amount for a place on a "Roll of Honor" or for a place on the "Roll of Most Honorable Mention" if they go beyond it? There are poor women in the South who will give their mites which will receive the commendation of our Master, but no such commendation from the Centennial Committee, because they did not give to or beyond certain limits. This feature of the Centennial work belittles it, and I sincerely hope the Committee will strike it out. I am of the opinion that in this movement men and methods have been too much magnified. It is time to rest and think a little about the tremendous motives and principles given by the Saviour. Other denominations have their "Right Rev." and "Very Right Rev." for the ministry, and now in this great Centennial year we are going to give it to the women and children. Brethren, I for one am opposed to it.

CHAS. A. G. THOMAS.

Greensboro, Jan. 26, 1893.

From Rev. J. R. Maynard.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Accept my thanks for your editorial in the RECORDER of Jan. 25th. Of late I have been made to wonder how it was that men and boys could decide to preach so soon after they came out on the Lord's side. I can remember when men were not so hasty about this important matter. The office of the ministry is a high position, provided it is in obedience to God's call; but if not, I think it sinful to him who only assumes it. Hence, how careful men should be in rushing into the ministry!

I often think of my own case, how I prayed and wept for several years about preaching. Oh! how little I felt when I was pressed with the duty of preaching the Lord's gospel. I shrank from the work; but the impression to enter it deepened as time passed by. Time and again I caught myself in the act of preaching while engaged in meditation. I would become greatly enthused in these exercises. Yet I kept all this hid, or at least I tried to do so, from my brethren. I felt that if the brethren were to know that I had such a thought, they would be tempted to exclude me from the church. They did find it out in some way, but never dealt with me. When I promised the Lord that I would take up the work and do what I could, I shall never forget that time. It was one night about one o'clock. My wife and children were asleep, but there was no sleep for me. I was never more deeply convicted of sin about my soul's salvation than I was then of the sin of omission of duty in regard to preaching. I got up, lit the lamp, got the Bible and found the Scripture where Moses excused himself because he had an impediment in speech. God asked him who made his mouth. It seemed that God was putting the same question to me. Since then I have been preaching the best I could; but my impediments have made it hard with me in this fast age. The world seems to be crazy on style and fashion. I want to get where the people are hungry for the gospel. Our colleges are supplying everything in reach of railroads with boys, and such a preacher as myself will perish in this country.

But if I do get off in the back country, don't forget to send me the good old RECORDER. It does me so much good to read it; I can get from under the juniper tree. I was "down in the mouth" when the last RECORDER arrived; but after reading the editorial and "Revival No. 2," I felt better. A good brother, not of our denomination, said to me last evening that we Baptists ought to pay our editor extra for the RECORDER: he said Judge Winston's "Talks on Law" were worth $3 00. That helped me. I like to be encouraged.

Yours in Christ,

J. R. MAYNARD.

From Lincolnton.

We have just closed a meeting of great spiritual power in the Baptist church in Lincolnton, N. C. The weather was much against us, and yet we did not miss a service. There were several conversions, and among them was Leslie, my first born.

Bro. O. L. Stringfield did the preaching. He is a "left handed" preacher, and such preachers always hit exactly in the place where you don't expect them. We believe in Stringfield in this neck of the woods, Methodists and all.

I will baptize on Sunday night after a sermon from Bro. D. W. Herring.

Wrong Motives Appealed To.

Dear Recorder:—In an article from Bro. Edwards of Goldsboro in this week's RECORDER, I see the following paragraph:

"There will be a Roll of Honor and a Roll of Most Honorable Mention for those persons who give up to, or beyond, certain amounts that will be indicated."

Now it appears to a plain business man—but one who wishes to see the name of Christ magnified above every other name—that such motives should not be appealed to to give to the Lord's cause. The human heart is full of pride, ambition and selfishness, and I believe it is wrong to encourage or cultivate such a spirit. I do not think that gifts should be measured by the amounts given every time, but by the spirit and sacrifice with which they are donated. There are many who out of their poverty contribute small amounts in dollars and cents, but are by far larger gifts in the sight of God than are the gifts of those who out of their abundance give larger amounts that are put on record and heralded by newspapers. When the Master was on earth standing in the temple beholding the many and costly gifts brought by the Pharisees, he also beheld a poor widow as she came with her two mites, and he said she had given more than they all. His words have since been a standing memorial of her liberality, and will so continue to stand as long as time shall last. Every dollar that is given should be for Christ's sake, because we love the souls of men, with a burning desire to have them saved, and not for our own glory.

Are we not tending upward, too,
As fast as time can move?
Nor would we wish the hours more slow,
To keep us from our love.

W. J. H.

WEAVER—Mrs. Ann Weaver, the wife of Mr. Thomas Weaver, living near Chapel Hill, died Jan. 1st, 1893, in the seventy-third year of her age. She leaves a husband, children, grandchildren, and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss.

Sister Weaver had been a member of the Baptist church about forty years, and her life was in keeping with her profession as a christian. Having known her intimately the last five years I am prepared to say that I never knew any one who possessed greater decision of character and at the same time a kinder heart. In common with others, I have lost one of my best friends. May the Lord, "who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities," comfort the bereaved hearts.

Burlington, N. C., Jan. 24, 1893.

Tributes of Respect.

We, the superintendent, teachers and scholars of Mt. Hermon Sunday-school, desire to pay a suitable tribute of respect to the memory of Minnie Rhew, one of our members, who departed this life Dec. 29th, 1892, at the early age of seventeen years.

Minnie was a regular attendant at our school, always pleasant and attentive. Being from infancy an invalid, she had the sympathy of the whole school. She loved her pastor, her superintendent and teacher. Not only in school did her virtue shine forth, but also in church. In the fall of 1891 she gave her heart to Jesus, and was baptized by her pastor, Rev. J. F. McDuffie, and united with the Baptist church at Mount Hermon—the church of her devoted mother and grandmother. She lived a peaceful and godly life, and died a hopeful death. Although afflicted she murmured not, but what her hand found to do she did it with her might. Being deprived of the use of her left arm, with the right she could sew and knit, and made herself useful in all the vocations of housekeeping. But little Minnie is gone; her work is done; no more shall we see her face on earth. As the year 1892 expired, so did her life on earth terminate, ready to begin the new year in heaven with her dear Saviour whom she learned to love on earth. Therefore be it

Resolved, That while we, as a Sunday-school, bow with resignation to the will of our Heavenly Parent, we will ever cherish the memory of Minnie Rhew, and ever pray for grace in all God's providential dealings in this world, and to be able to say from the heart, "Thy will be done."

Resolved further, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, and also to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication; that the secretary of the Sunday-school and church clerk be requested to copy the same on the minute book of the Sunday-school, and also on the church record.

The Hiwahian monarchy has been overthrown and a provisional government established in the interests of the whole people of the island. The revolution occurred on January 14th and was caused by an attempt of the Queen to abrogate the constitution and promulgate a new one. The Queen was dethroned and S. B. Dale was placed at the head of the provisional government. The revolution was accomplished without loss of life, and the island is said to be in a state of tranquility. Commissioners from the new government are now on their way to Washington to ask that Hiwaii be annexed to the United States.

B. GRIFFITH [illegible]

The Home Circle.

Kneeling at the Threshold.

I'm kneeling at the threshold, weary, faint and sore,
Waiting for the dawning, for the opening of the door;
Waiting till the Master shall bid me rise and come
To the glory of his presence, to the gladness of his Home.

A weary path I've travelled, 'mid darkness, storm and strife,
Bearing many a burden, struggling for my life;
But now the morn is breaking, my toil will soon be o'er,
I'm kneeling at the threshold, my hand is on the door.

Methinks I hear the voices of the blessed as they stand
Singing in the sunshine of the far-off, sinless land;
Oh, would that I were with them, amid the shining throng,
Mingling in their worship, joining in their song.

The friends that started with me have entered long ago;
One by one they left me struggling with the foe;
Their pilgrimage was shorter, their triumph sooner won—
How lovingly they'll hail me when all my toil is done.

With them the blessed angels, that know no grief nor sin;
I see them by the portals, prepared to let me in;
O Lord, I wait thy pleasure, thy time and way are best;
But I'm wasted, worn, and weary—O Father, bid me rest.

—W. L. Alexander, in "The Christian at Work."

A Love Letter.

He hurried up to the office as soon as he entered the hotel, says the Detroit Free Press, and, without waiting to register, inquired eagerly:

"Any letter for me?"

The clerk sorted out the package with the negligent attention that comes of practice, then flipped one—a very small one—on the counter.

The travelling man took it with a curious smile, that twisted his pleasant-looking face into a mask of expectancy.

He smiled more as he read it.—Then, oblivious to other travellers, who jostled him, he laid it gently against his lips, and actually kissed it.

A loud guffaw startled him.

"Now, look here, old fellow," said a loud voice, "that won't do, you know. Too spoony for anything. Confess now; your wife didn't write that letter!"

"No, she didn't," said the travelling man, with an amazed look, as if he would like to change the subject. "That letter is from my best girl."

The admission was so unexpected that the trio of friends who had caught him said no more until they had eaten a good dinner and were seated together in a chum's room.

Then they began to badger him.

"It's no use; you've got to read it to us, Dick," said one of them; "we want to know all about your best girl."

"So you shall," said Dick, with great coolness; "I will give you the letter, and you can read it yourselves. There it is;" and he laid it on the table.

"I guess not," said one, who had been the loudest in demanding it; "we like to chaff a little, but we hope we are gentlemen. The young lady would hardly care to have the letter read by this crowd;" and he looked reproachfully at his friend.

"But I insist upon it," was the answer. "There is nothing to be ashamed of—except the spelling; that's a little shaky, I'll admit; but she won't care in the least. Read it, Hardy, and judge for yourself."

Thus urged, Hardy took up the letter, shame-facedly enough, and read it. There were only a few words. First he laughed, then swallowed suspiciously, and as he finished it, threw it upon the table again, and rubbed the back of his hand across his eyes, as if troubled with dimness of vision.

"Pshaw!" he said; "if I had a love letter like that"—and then was silent.

"Fair play!" cried one of the others, with an uneasy laugh.

"I'll read it to you, boys," said their friend, seeing they had made no move to take it, "and I think you'll agree with me that it is a model love letter."

And this was what he read.

For a moment or two the company remained silent, while the little letter was passed from hand to hand, and you would have said that each and every one had had hay fever, by the snuffing that was heard. Then Hardy jumped to his feet:

"Three cheers for Dolly, and three for Dick's best girl!"

They were given with a will.

Long Life.

Birds are, ordinarily, exceedingly long-lived. The swan, it is asserted by means of unquestionable records, has been known to exist two hundred years. A sea eagle, captured in 1715, then already several years of age, died a hundred and four years afterwards, in 1819, and a white-headed vulture, captured in 1706 died in one of the aviaries of Schoenbrunn Castle, near Vienna, having passed a hundred and eighteen years in captivity. Numerous ravens and paroquets have been known to live a hundred years and over. As with most birds, magpies live many years in a state of freedom, but do not reach over twenty or twenty-five in captivity. Caged canary-birds live from twelve to fifteen years; but those flying at liberty, in their native land, reach a far more advanced age.—Our Dumb Animals.

How Webster Earned a Holiday.

Here is a good story of the boyhood of Daniel Webster:

He was a good student, and a favorite with his instructor, but his love for sport, particularly fishing, sometimes drew him away from his studies and brought upon him a reprimand. On one occasion Daniel had been fishing without leave, and as a punishment one hundred lines of Virgil were given him to translate.

Daniel resolved to surprise his instructor; he did not go to bed, but sat up all night poring over his Virgil. The next day, when the hour for recitation came, he recited his hundred lines with fluency and correctness.

"Very well," said Doctor Wood, preparing to close the book.

"But, doctor, I have a few more lines that I can recite."

"Go on, then," said the teacher, supposing that the lad might have read twenty-five or thirty lines more. But the boy kept on till he had completed a second hundred.

"Really, Dan, I compliment you on your industry."

"But," said Dan, "I have studied further."

"Very remarkable," said the minister in surprise; "well, let us have them."

Dan rolled off another hundred lines, which he appeared to know quite as well as the previous two hundred.

"You are a smart boy!" said the doctor, approvingly, and not without a feeling of relief, for it is rather tedious to listen critically to the translation of three hundred lines.

"But," said Dan, "I am not through yet."

"Pray how much have you read?" asked Doctor Wood, in amazement.

"I can recite five hundred more if you like," said Dan, his eyes twinkling with enjoyment at the doctor's surprise.

"I think that will do for to day," said Doctor Wood. "I don't think I shall have time to hear them now. You may have the rest of the day for pigeon-shooting."

And Daniel, rejoicing at the permission, went off to the enjoyment of his sport.

Future Preparation

Is an instinctive law of nature—how necessary it is to be prepared for that night-fiend to children and horror to parents, croup. Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein is the panacea for coughs, colds and consumption.

Work for Rainy Days.

Farmers should so arrange their business that during showers or rainy days there will be work indoors for themselves and men. There are plenty of odd jobs that should receive attention, such as putting in new floors in place of those badly worn in the stables, or perhaps the mangers and feet boxes need to be repaired, enlarged or changed. The hay rack may need some new pieces, or the wagons may need a coat of paint. Some of the farm implements may require repairing or overhauling, or new bolts in certain places. New castings may be added where needed.

On reapers and mowers, the sections and guards should be always kept in good order. The oiling places should be well and thoroughly cleaned from gum and dirt, and if they are not provided with a cap a wooden plug can easily be fitted in, and we will then be quite certain that in applying oil it will lubricate the part intended. To do all this, a few common tools will be needed, and a work-bench on which to do a great deal of the work. A large window should be located near the bench, preferably, directly in front of where the vice is placed, as a vast amount of the most difficult work is held by that tool.

Every farmer should have laid away under shelter a supply of well seasoned timber suitable for whiffletrees, and other parts of implements liable to break or wear out, for it does not pay to run to the shop to get a new whiffletree made every time one is broken. The bill at the shop, in one year would enable one to purchase all the tools necessary to do the work at home besides it will save many hours and perhaps days of valuable time. The feeling of independence and the discipline the working with tools will give you is a very important consideration. If you have sons let them work with the tools, show them how to use and properly care for them, thus making farm life pleasant and useful.—American Agriculturist.

The Origin of Two Old Sayings.

Harper's Young People gives this account of the origin of two familiar expressions:

"Robbing Peter to pay Paul" was first used when Westminster Abbey was called St. Peter's Cathedral. Money being needed to settle the accounts of St. Paul's Cathedral, it was taken by those in authority from St. Peter's, quite to the dissatisfaction of the people, who asked: "Why rob St. Peter to pay St. Paul?" Over two hundred years afterward the saying was again used in regard to the same churches at the death of the Earl of Chatham, the city of London declaring that so great a statesman should be buried in St. Paul's, while Parliament insisted that one so noble in every way would be more properly placed amid the dust of kings in Westminster Abbey, and that not to bury him there would be for the second time "robbing St. Peter to pay St. Paul." The Abbey very justly carried the day.

"There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip" is a very old saying, and was first uttered to the King of Samos, an island in the Grecian Archipelago. This king, Ancæus by name, planted a vineyard and treated the slaves who cultivated it so badly that one of them told him he would never live to taste the wine made from it. When the wine was ready, and a cup of it poured out for the King, he sent for the slave who had prophesied his death, and asked him what he thought of his prophecy now. The slave replied: "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip"—and just as he had spoken the words Ancæus received warning that a wild boar had broken into his vineyard and was ruining it. Putting down the wine untasted, he rushed out to attack the boar and was killed.

Sheep Shearings.

To keep sheep healthy they require a frequent change of food.

Especially when on dry feed sheep need a good supply of water.

Care should be taken to clean out the mangers of feed racks regularly.

Look over the flock and sell the sheep that show the least improvement.

Inferior sheep are often a drug on the market when good sheep sell at good prices.

Never allow sheep to be frightened or run by a dog or in any case be disturbed.

If any of the ewes have poor teeth it will always pay to feed them ground feed.

A sheep kept thrifty will shear a heavier and better fleece than one poorly kept.

In commencing to feed grain to sheep, feed a small quantity at first and gradually increase.

The farmer that is too careless to give sheep good care will do better with some other kind of stock.

The days are for feeding and the nights for repose, and with no stock is this more the case than with sheep.

Sheep of different ages and conditions should be sorted into different lots and the weaker ones have a little better feed.

With comfortable surroundings, which implies dry, warm shelter and regular feeding, a small amount of grain can be made to count.

Wide sliding doors are best for the sheep sheds as it lessons the risks of slamming on them or of their injuring themselves by crowding in.—Live Stock Indicator.

Odd Origin of Some Words.

There are numerous instances of common nouns derived from proper names, the history of many of which is quite interesting. That very delicious tea cake, Sally Lunn, has conferred an immortality of fame upon its illustrious author, Sarah Lunn. This renowned lady was an humble personage living at Bath, England, near the close of the last century. She peddled her buns cakes through the streets morning and evening, carrying them in a basket. Her cakes soon made her popular, and a musical baker, with an eye to speculation, wrote and set to music a song in her praise, and then bought out her trade and her recipe. The song proved an excellent advertisement, and the enterprising baker sent barrow loads of "Sally Lunns" through the streets night and morning. The result was that in a few years he retired on a fortune.

The Earl of Sandwich, for whom the Sandwich Islands were named, a noblemen in the last century, the boon companion of John Wilkes, and the person against whom Erskine thundered in his famous maiden speech, was the inventor of the well known luncheon staple called the sandwich. In this connection it may also be said that the tailless coat called the spencer was the contrivance of another English Earl, Lord Spencer. Spencer and Sandwich were coupled together in some once familiar verses, two lines of which were:

The one invented half a coat,
The other half a dinner.

Blankets were named after their first makers, three brothers in Bristol, England, named Edmund, Edward and Thomas Blanket, who established a large trade in this article of woolen goods, and were the first manufacturers of it in the fourteenth century.—Grand Rapids (Mich.) Journal.

Talks About Law—No. 12.

BY JUDGE R. W. WINSTON.

THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AS APPLICABLE TO LAND.

"Possession is eleven points in law," wisely spoke Colley Cibber. At least so it often proves in many an action to recover real estate.

What is its meaning? Why simply that the man in possession of land is entitled to hold and possess it until the plaintiff show a good title not only against him, but also against the whole world.

The theory of our law is that the State owns all that land; and so, ordinarily, when an action is brought to recover land the party bringing the action must show that the State has parted with its title.

In passing, we may remark, that this is the reason that authorizes the State through its sovereign representatives, the General Assembly, to grant the power to certain agencies to condemn private lands even against the will of the owner. This is called the State's right of Eminent Domain. In other words, when the State grants any of its land, and all lands in this State are held under a grant actually made, or presumed to have been made, by the State, it is with the reservation that at any time the State may resume its ownership, if necessary for the public good, by making just compensation.

When a railroad is chartered it is given the right to condemn land for its right of way. That is to say, the State delegates its right of eminent domain, and the company exercises this right of sovereignty.

Time plays a very important part in building up and upholding titles to land. Some one has sagely said that time, which is constantly destroying and removing evidence in all other cases, is silently strengthening the chain of his title, who is in possession.

We will not stop to consider the ways of showing title out of the State, as it is of little general interest; suffice it to say, however, that time will deprive even the State of its title. For example, if one be in the possession of land under known and visible boundaries, for thirty years, having no deed at all, not when the State can dispossess him, and if he have a deed for the same land, and hold the land openly, continuously, hostilely and exclusively for twenty-one years the State is barred.

The courts do not look with disfavor upon the plea of the statute of limitations as applicable to land; and so it does not like the same plea when applied to other cases. For, by the word "limitations," in this connection, is meant, "simply the time which is prescribed by the authority of law during which a title may be acquired to property by virtue of a simple adverse possession and enjoyment."

In this State, when a person in possession of real estate, shall have been possessed of the same under known and visible lines and boundaries exclusively and adversely, and under colorable title for seven years, he has acquired such a title to the land as to perpetually bar the claim of all persons, unless they labor under the disabilities of which we spoke in our last talk.

This is a most useful provision of our law, and cures the defects in many a deed. Let us consider the language of the statute. In the first place, will observe that the person must be in the actual occupancy of the land; of course the occupancy of a tenant or an agent would serve equally well. Next, that he must occupy the land under a deed or paper which is "color of title." Now, what is this "color of title?" The Supreme Court of the United States say, "The courts have concurred, it is believed, without an exception, in defining 'color of title' to be that which in appearance is title, but which in validity is no title." For example, a deed, not registered, is not a valid deed, still it constitutes color of title, and is sufficient for the man in adverse possession of land to build his title upon. So also a deed not under seal is imperfect as a deed, but it is color of title. So the deed of an infant is 'color of title,' or the deed of an insane man is 'color of title.' Even the deed of administrator is 'color of title.' But the possession must not only be under color of title, it must also be under known and visible lines and bounds. We all understand what this means.

It is not necessary that the metes and bounds shall be actually set out in the paper, for if the paper, relied on as color of title, refer to the land as such and such a tract called, for example, Mount Vernon, and if the metes and bounds of such tract be known this is sufficient. Again, the person in possession must claim the land as his own; that is to say, he must put the real owner, if there be one, on guard, and by acts and conduct must notify him that his title is called into question. Or, as the books have it, he must "keep his flag flying." His possession, hence, must be open, hostile, and continuous. Our courts have said that building a shed, quarrying a rock and cutting wood to burn lime on the premises, uninterrupted for seven years, made the holding adverse. But to feed hogs occasionally on the land did not. Nor did the occasional cutting of timber and quarrying stone. We will, at once, see that, if a tenant is in possession of our land, no matter how long he stays, his holding is not adverse. The statute says that even if the tenant get a deed to the land from some other person, it is not colorable title, and will not avail him unless he stay in possession twenty years after his rental expires.

So if two are tenants in common of a tract of land, the one being in the actual possession and the other not, and the one in possession collect and appropriate all the rents and manage the whole land as his own and claims it as his land, still his holding is not adverse to his co-tenant; certainly not until twenty years have passed.

Finally the period of such possession must be the seven continuous years preceding the action. But if the combined possession of several successive owners make out the seven continuous years under color it will suffice.

Such possession as we have just described will not only bar another of his right to recover the land against us, but it will also actually build up a title, not otherwise good, in us.

Indeed, such title is available for the plaintiff in an action. He cannot be in possession when he sues, but he might build up such title by previous adverse possession. We have many defective titles in our State at the present, and it behooves us all to look carefully to our title deeds, which are our muniments of title, otherwise the number will increase.

Certain rules in purchasing land ought to be strictly adhered to:

1. The title ought to be searched and examined by a competent attorney and abstracts made to accompany the deed.

2. The deed itself should have apt words of conveyance, and should be in proper form.

3. If purchasing land from a married woman, do not fail to pay the purchase money to her in person, and to have her privy examination properly taken. In dealing with a married woman, unless she be a "mighty" good woman, be on your guard, for the law permits her to divide with you like the white man did with the Indian, when they came to set apart to each his share of the game, consisting of a turkey and a turkey buzzard.

4. And mainly, no deed to a town lot should pass without inserting its dimensions in feet and inches and erecting natural objects to mark the corners; nor to a farm until a survey is made and the lines are marked and the corners well established.

In Germany I have read that all deeds to land are made directly by the government. When a man wishes to sell his land he yields up his title deeds to the government, and the government executes a new deed to the proposed purchaser. They rarely have a defective title in Germany. We cannot do this, and should not, but we can at least learn a lesson therefrom.

A Precious Habit.

My mother's habit was every day, immediately after breakfast, to withdraw for an hour to her own room, and to spend that hour in reading the Bible, in meditation and prayer. From that hour, as from a pure fountain, she drew the strength and sweetness which enabled her to fulfill all her duties and to remain unruffled by all the worries and pettishnesses which are so often the intolerable trial of narrow neighborhoods. As I think of her life, and of all it had to bear, I see the absolute triumph of christian grace in the lovely ideal of a christian lady. I never saw her temper disturbed; I never heard her speak one word of anger, or calumny, or of idle gossip; I never observed in her any sign of a single sentiment unbecoming to a soul which had drunk of the river of the water of life, and which had fed upon manna in the barren wilderness. The world is the better for the passage of such souls across its surface. They may seem to be as much forgotten as the drops of rain which fall into the barren sea, but each drop adds to the volume of refreshful and purifying waters. "The healing of the world is in its nameless saints. A single star seems nothing, but a thousand scattered stars break up the night, and make it beautiful."—Archdeacon Farrar.

Serve God by doing common actions in a heavenly spirit.—Spurgeon.

An Appeal to the Venders of Intoxicating Liquors.

That honorable and high-minded men are engaged in the liquor traffic, cannot be denied. And furthermore, that many engaged in this calling see and feel the evils of it, cannot be denied. They cannot be blind to the evil effects of ardent spirits upon many of their customers. They must see that their calling tends to promote intemperance, the worst of evils. They must also be aware that the more readily spirits are obtained, the more they are drunk. Increased facilities for promoting an evil make the danger greater. To shield a man from temptation, you must remove the tempter. Our population during the late war were exceedingly temperate. Liquor was not to be had. Again, if the vender of ardent spirits be a professor of religion, his example gives a sanction to intemperance. The rum-drinker presumes that the rum-selling professor regards his business as consistent with his profession, otherwise he would abandon it. He reasons thus: If it is right for him to sell strong drink, it is right for me to buy it. If he sells it as a beverage, I can buy it as such. If it is right to sell a pint for such a purpose, it is right to sell a gallon, and therefore I may purchase any quantity.

The rumseller exposes himself to temptation. Daily handling the article, is he not in danger? The writer knew a tavern-keeper who conducted business for twenty years apparently as a sober man, but at last he became a sot. Then there is his society. What benefit can he derive from profanity, the obscene jests and the blasphemy of the drunken and the profligate who visit his store? Again, he is exposed to the temptation of wishing his sales of liquor to increase, since it is to his pecuniary profit. Can that calling be right which induces one to promote the injury, and not the welfare, of his neighbor?

The liquor seller exposes others to temptation. It may be the youth whom he employs to deal out the article. It is idle to say he does not compel him. He employs him for that purpose. If one hires another to commit murder, is he less guilty than the other who imbrues his hand in a fellowman's blood?

Again, his own children and his neighbor's children are exposed to temptation. It may be said he can keep his children home, but will he do it? and that his neighbors can do the same, but will they?

Will not the son of some drunken father, just staggering home from his counter, be sent hither with the bottle to be filled? But is not the effort on the part of the liquor-seller to keep his own children home an admission that there is something wrong about the traffic?

The rum seller cannot be ignorant of the evil he is doing, and therefore cannot be innocent. Though well dressed and respectable young men, who patronize his bar, may not leave intoxicated, but then the liquor-seller perceives in them an increasing fondness for spirituous liquors and that they are no longer moderate drinkers. He is well aware that there is a strong probability that some, if not all, of these men will sadly abuse the use of ardent spirits. He does not know but that the drunken husband and father, when he reaches home, may most brutally beat his wife and children or kill his neighbor. He is fully aware that his traffic makes the widow's and the orphan's tears to flow, the wife's and the mother's heart to beat with sad forebodings. He sees perhaps the squalid poverty, wretchedness and misery that result from his calling. He knows that he pursues his occupation for gain. He but illustrates and proves that the love of money is the root of all evil.

The rum seller cannot be an advocate of temperance. His lips are closed. Why sell it if he declaims against the evil? How can he persuade his customers not to drink since he keeps it for their accommodation? His influence is all on the side of intemperance. It is to his interest to sell all the liquor he can, for the more he sells the greater are his profits. Prompted by self-interest, the danger is that he may become a foe of temperance and antagonize all efforts to promote it in his community. He may boast that he keeps an orderly house and complies with the law, but still the very respectability and attractiveness of his place of business makes it but a greater snare to the genteel and respectable people in his vicinity.

The rum-seller, however, has some apologies to make in justification or in palliation of his course. Let us see what the most important of them are:

(1) He pleads that his calling is a lawful one, for he has license from the State to engage in his traffic. His code of morals does not rise higher than human law. Idolatry was legalized in the days of the Apostle Paul, but in exhorting the Rome church to be law-abiding, he did not command its members to be idolators. Public brothels in France are licensed by the government; and gambling houses and lotteries in some countries; but no christian should have anything to do with them. It is not to be presumed that legislators would prohibit the traffic in ardent spirits.

The rum-seller may plead that if he does not sell liquor, others will, and so the evil will not be discontinued. Now this is flimsy, and the argument amounts to this: that because others chose to do wrong, I may as well do it. If others lie and steal, it is no reason I should. Our motto should be: Let others do as they may, as for ourselves, we will do right. "I would rather be right than President," said a great American orator and statesman. We should pursue such a course with regard to any given evil, as if pursued by all would lead to its extinction.

It is sometimes said by the seller of liquor, "I do not sell liquor except in connection with other merchandise, and in order to make it more salable." What is the difference between the bar-keeper who sells one thousand dollars worth of ardent spirits and the merchant who sells the same amount in connection with ten thousand dollars worth of other goods? The evil is of the same magnitude in both cases. Besides, may not the liquors kept by the latter for sale, when too freely imbibed, induce his customers to make purchases which they otherwise would not and which a sober and cool judgment would condemn?

The rum seller often pleads in justification of his avocation that he has a family to support. So have others—so have the men whose families are injured by his traffic. Almost any practice may be justified upon this plea, which is, that we may do evil that good may come, or that the end justifies the means. Then theft and robbery may be legitimate business, since many who engage in them might plead they had families to support, and were therefore bound to do what they did. The keeper of a public brothel might present the same plea.

In the days of persecution when spies were employed by governments to ferret out and arrest christians that they might be tried and punished, those engaged in such business might have pleaded in justification that they had families to support. But does not such a plea betray a distrust of God's providence?

Is it not a reflection upon his wisdom and goodness that he has placed us in a position where we are driven to employ unlawful or questionable means to support our families? He who feeds the fowls of the air and clothes the lilies of the field has promised to feed and clothe us though we be of little faith. David said, "I have never seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." And again, "They that wait upon the Lord shall not want any good thing." What would be thought of a christian martyr when brought to the stake, and the alternative of worshiping idols or of losing his life should be presented to him, if he should choose the former on the ground that he had a family to support?

But all who are engaged in the liquor traffic cannot make this flimsy excuse in justification of a business which their consciences often condemn, for they have no families. Stalwart young men with none but themselves to support are often seen behind the bar dealing out the fiery liquid. These men have the same legitimate and honorable means of securing a livelihood that their fellows have. The mechanic arts, agriculture, mercantile pursuits, commerce and the professions are open to them as to others. Shall we make our living out of the tears, groans and blood of our fellow-beings?

Finally, it is urged that good and honorable men have been engaged in the liquor traffic. Let this be granted, yet it is equally true that they were ignorant of the evil they were doing. Abraham, Jacob and others were good men, yet they were polygamists. Luther, Calvin, Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer and Cotton Matther were good men, and yet they were persecutors. The time was when good men were engaged in the opium and the slave trade. Yet such practices cannot be tolerated nor adopted by good men at this day. The time was when ministers of the gospel drank freely and some to excess, and yet were tolerated and respected, but such is not the case now.

In pursuing a different course, the clergy of to-day pass no censure upon their predecessors, but merely live up to the light they have. Moreover, good and honorable men engaged in the traffic of ardent spirits, when convinced of the evil, abandoned it. Go ye and do likewise.

The Centennial Fund for Permanent Work.

Editor Biblical Recorder:—At the session of the Southern Baptist Convention in Atlanta last May it was unanimously decided to raise a special fund of $250,000 to be equally divided between the Home and Foreign Boards, to be used for permanent work, such as chapel building, Bible translation, etc., as distinguished from the regular work of supporting missionaries. It was also unanimously voted "that the securing of this fund be pushed with all possible vigor." Not a dissenting voice was raised.

A committee was appointed to apportion this amount among the States, as follow: Joseph Shackleford, A. B. Miller, S. M. Yeatman, N. A. Bailey, J. G. Gibson, W. S. Ryland, Joshua Levering, J. W. Bozeman, W. R. Rothwell, N. B. Broughton, J. A. Speight, J. L. Vass, C. H. Jones, B. H. Carroll and A. E. Owen. Every State and the District of Columbia had representation on this committee, which did its work, and its report was unanimously adopted by the Convention. Moreover, all the State bodies, so far as the Centennial Committee know, have endorsed the action of the Convention. Not an objection was offered, and not a dissenting opinion expressed. It is difficult to see how Southern Baptists could be more thoroughly committed to anything than they are committed to the raising of this fund.

It was never contemplated that raising this special fund should hinder the enlargement of the regular work. The Convention decided to try to "send a hundred new missionaries to the foreign field and to correspondingly enlarge all other departments of our missionary work." This, however, is permanent enlargement. It was never designed to make a special effort to raise enough money to send out these missionaries and then fail to sustain them. What is given to send them out must be repeated year after year, of course, and while this is an important part of the Centennial movement, which our Committee have ever kept in mind and ever sought to forward, they have sought to obey the positive instructions of the Convention which ordered us to push "with all positive vigor" the raising of this $250,000, "leaving to the several Boards to press the enlargement of the regular contributions." See S. B. C. Minutes for 1892, pp. 15 and 42.

Brethren who know better than the Convention how this matter ought to be managed, should have given the Convention the benefit of their wisdom in Atlanta. Having kept silent then, when they should have spoken, they should "forever after hold their peace."

It is very important that the Centennial Committee and the Boards act with the utmost harmony, and it is gratifying to know that such has been the case. The President of the Foreign Board and the Corresponding Secretary of the Home Board are members of the Committee; and no one need fear there will be the slightest friction. Indeed, those churches which have given most to this special fund, have also greatly increased their subscriptions for the regular work. Several of them have singly assumed, in whole or in part, the support of a new missionary. And it must be borne in mind that the raising of this special fund for permanent work will considerably enlarge the regular work. There are single fields where our Boards pay enough for rent to support another missionary. This fund will provide permanent quarters for these missions, and the large amount of rent thus saved can be used to support new missionaries.

It goes without saying that a special fund must be raised by a special effort. It is equally obvious that while a special effort is being made in a given church for one object, other objects cannot be correspondingly urged. It is plain also that the special object should be provided for as quickly as practicable in order to get it out of the way of the regular work.

Dr. W. D. Powell has been greatly blessed so far in the work of raising this special fund. He has also secured the sending of several new missionaries to the foreign field. If the time allowed him to visit all the churches the amount would be easily secured; but the shortness of the time and the greatness of the field render it imperative that the friends of the Centennial movement stir themselves. So far four States have taken their place in line as having provided for securing their respective apportionments, viz., Maryland, Kentucky, Alabama and South Carolina. What these States have done, the others can as easily do. To succeed in this special effort, to which the denomination is so thoroughly committed, will be a grand achievement, stimulating our interests of every sort and giving the world a new respect for Southern Baptists. To fail would be mortifying, humiliating and discouraging, and would effectually prevent the undertaking of any great and noble enterprise for many years to come. If ever we are to do our best, is not this Centennial year the time? What sort of an occasion will ever arouse us, if we are careless now?

The admirable addresses of the Centennial meeting in Louisville have been issued, by direction of the committee, in a neat pamphlet. It is worthy of a wide circulation and it will do good wherever it goes. All the profits of sales go directly to the Centennial Fund for Permanent Work. The price per copy is twenty-five cents postage paid, with the usual discount to the trade. They can be had through the State chairman or through the undersigned.

A Pure Home.

There is nothing on earth for which one ought to be more thankful than for having been brought up in the atmosphere of a pure home. It may be deficient in material comforts, and utterly lacking in graceful amenities that lend a charm to human life; but it has in it the forces on which great characters are nurtured. One of our best friends—a man as sturdy as a forest oak—once said to me:

"I was the son of poor parents, and from my youth up was inured to self-denial and hardship; but I do not remember ever to have heard a word from the lips of either my father or my mother that was not as chaste as the driven snow."

Better such a recollection as that, than an inheritance of millions of money.—Central Presbyterian.

TENDENCIES THAT NEED CURING.

We assume so often the role of adviser for our younger brethren that we are prompted here to say that this is done because we love them and feel a lively interest in their future success as preachers of God's word. In this paper we wish to put them on their guard against certain tendencies that prevail more or less among them, and that evidently need watching and curbing. These remarks will apply especially to those who have enjoyed the advantages of college and seminary training. Among the tendencies referred to we may mention the following:

1. The disposition to depreciate the gifts and worth of those who have not enjoyed their advantages, in the way of college or seminary training. Literary and theological training is usually of great help to a minister; but we must remember that there have been some "mighty men of valor" among us that have rubbed but little or not at all against college walls. It is often the case that some of our younger and more talented ministers occupy pastorates that have been established under God, through the prayers, the tears, and the toils of older and less gifted brethren. Some of these, after they have almost retired from active service, spend the evening of their days with churches presided over by younger and more active brethren. When such is the case, it should be a pleasure to the younger minister and his congregation to show by delicate courtesies and brotherly attention that they appreciate his presence and delight to do him honor. We have seen old, and even gifted ministers however, rather shabbily treated by younger pastors and by their congregations. The younger pastors will not only be brought in intimate contact with this class of ministers under the circumstances mentioned, but in many other, and often when they are in active service and are their fellow pastors in the communities where their lot is cast. Don't forget, brethren, to honor, respect and encourage these older pastors, and remember that they are often better pastors at fifty or sixty years of age than you are with all your early training, for they have learned many things that you will not know until you have learned more at the school of experience.

2. Another tendency of the kind mentioned, is to contract hasty and injudicious marriages. Some one has said it is "hard to mix love and books;" and it is a fact that our students, while pursuing their studies, often form ardent attachments, become engaged, and frequently cut short their course of study in order to marry. It is to be expected that young men would form "ardent attachments," enter engagements, &c. It does not follow, however, that these are wise things to do; and especially is it unwise to cut short their courses to marry. If our young student friends, then, are not already entangled in love's net, we advise them to keep clear of such during their courses of study. But if they are already caught, and especially if they are engaged, let them be true to their promises. In this latter case, the young lady in question can be very helpful by standing firm to her engagement and carefully avoiding "lovers' quarrels." We are aware of the fact that this is quite a delicate subject on which to give advice, and we fear we will receive scant thanks from the parties for whom it is intended; but it is for the good of our dear young brethren and sisters that we give it, and the time is coming when they will thank us for it.

In choosing a wife some of our young ministers show a great want of prudence, foresight, and we may add, sometimes of common sense. The usefulness of some ministers has been seriously crippled by marrying ungodly women; others by marrying daughters of luxury who can never adapt themselves to their husbands' circumstances; others by marrying women of other faiths, who not only fail to unite with their husband's church, but use constant effort to proselyte them to their own faith. We heard of a talented young Baptist preacher lately who married a lady belonging to a church noted for its proselyting tendencies, and in this case the husband proved to be the "weaker vessel," and now preaches the [illegible] he holds it.

[illegible] afford to be misunderstood [illegible] and some noble pastors' wives were [illegible] other faiths; but the trouble [illegible] come [illegible] such all their [illegible] to make it unpleasant [illegible] by so doing. And for it be understood, now, that we are writing about ministers and their wives, and not about our laymen. Many of these will make raids into other faiths for helpmeets, and they often make congenial companions; especially when they join the churches with which their husbands are connected; and that is easy to do without surrendering any conscientious principles. We cannot say as much for Baptist ladies who marry men of other faiths. A true Baptist can never be anything but a Baptist, and men of other creeds who marry Baptist wives ought to respect them more for being true to their convictions; and if they will carefully and prayerfully examine the faith of their wives they are apt to accept it. These words are written in kindness for all concerned, praying that God may lead those that are in trouble into the light of liberty and peace.

3. And again, there is danger that our young ministers so speak or write of the pastorates, which in the providence of God they receive early in their ministry, as to discourage other young brethren equally as worthy and talented who have been less fortunate in becoming located, or else if not located, more fastidious and ambitious in accepting work that may be offered to them. For instance, we recently read in a first-class seminary magazine a rather glowing and self-congratulatory letter from a young minister happily located in a pleasant little town in the bluegrass region of Kentucky. His description of the country where he lives, which he thinks is the garden spot of the State, is accompanied by a sentence or so in which he informs us that it is also noted for good whiskey, fast horses and pretty women. He is thoughtful enough to add that he can testify for the fast horses and pretty women, but refers his readers to men of the world as to the whiskey. The letter not only abounds in passages of questionable taste, but is calculated to cause other young ministers who have an eye to bodily comforts, light work, luxurious living, &c., and those on hard fields as they are called, to suppose that their lot, compared to his, is unfortunate; and hence, they become dissatisfied, and seek other pastorates. Young ministers not located, after reading such letters, may so long for a pastorate in just such a country as to refuse to accept one in a country which they imagine is less highly favored.

Our ministers must remember that they are Christ's soldiers, and that they must go where the Great Captain directs, and that they are to seek the souls of the people where they find them, rather than fair lands or highly favored countries. Letters like the one referred to are a poor means of developing that sturdiness of character and contented spirit that should characterize preachers of the gospel. Christ's embassadors cannot afford to cultivate the spirit of novices, nor can they belong to the order of the Dilettanti.

The honest legislator who desires to conserve the interests of his constituents, deserves the sympathy of all good people. On the one hand there is the pressure of the tax payers enjoining him against extravagant appropriations, and on the other hand are the ardent and enthusiastic advocates of each separate measure setting forth the imperative needs of his project. But there are some things that every member of the Legislature ought to keep constantly before his eyes, one of which is that many of these earnest pleaders have no interest in the measures except for the pay they get for their pleadings.

When these paid agents of rich corporations come with their siren songs they ought to pass by the ear as quickly as the breezes. And when some heavy salaried officers of such corporations come with their pathetic and intensely patriotic addresses, there ought to rise up alongside of them the thousands of poor tax payers who have not one cent to spare from the direst necessaries of life, many of whom are deprived of sleep on account of their very homes and means of living being under mortgage, while they are unable to redeem them. Another view in the scene ought not to be left out—that a few of these rich and richly paid employees, getting from $5,000 to $10,000 annually, could much more easily pay for these patriotic measures than the poor struggling property owners, the vast majority of whom have to deny themselves of the common comforts of life.

There are some existing institutions that require appropriations to sustain them; while these ought to be kept up, any increase for them ought to be carefully guarded, and any and every instance in which the managers of institutions have presumed to go beyond the appropriations and instructions, and have come up with a debt, it ought to be repudiated as a rebuke to all such presumption. Indeed this is the only remedy against such unwarrantable proceedings. There is a crisis upon the body of our tax producers, and the wise and prudent legislator should shut his eyes to all sentimentalism and refuse to vote one dollar to anything that is unnecessary. We insist upon it that this is no time to make unnecessary appropriations.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

ROCKY MOUNT.

This town has grown very much in the last year. The tobacco trade is considerable, and has done much to change the complexion of the town. Also, the bringing of the shops by the W. & W. Railroad to the place has had a decided influence in favor of the business of the town.

Bro. G. L. Parker, who is one of the leading brethren here in his church, is full of hope for the future of the town, not only from a business stand-point, but thinks our denominational interest has the best outlook we have ever had. Bro. Love did a fine work here, and the brethren remember him with great pleasure. His faithful ministry and the training which he gave the church will tend greatly to lighten the burdens of his successor. A few days preceding my visit, the church had called Bro. Cooper of Indiana for all of his time.

The snow was getting off, and the feelings of the brethren were more cheerful in the hope of nicer weather and better business.

I spent a night with Bro. W. E. Daniel in Weldon. It is pleasant to spend some time with him and his interesting household under any circumstances, but to be exempt at the same time from the bumping and blowing of freight trains, which makes night so hideous near the depot, makes the privilege a gracious one indeed.

The church at Weldon has for some time been without a pastor, but they now think they have one, and if they should succeed in securing the brother whom they have in mind, both the church and the Tar River Association are to be congratulated. This church, although without a pastor, have kept up their regular contributions. This speaks well for the zeal of the members as well as for the good influence left by their former pastor.

At half past five o'clock Friday morning, with eyes partly open, I start for the Warren Union, which met in the town of Warrenton. Bro. Gardner very kindly met me at Warren Plains, and at half past eight o'clock I had taken my seat in front of a breakfast, which—judging from the quantity of things present—was prepared for Dr. C. Durham, Bro. J. H. Mills and myself; but as these brethren were not present, there remained much to be taken up.

Bro. N. L. Shaw was elected Moderator of the Union. The bad weather kept away many who would have been present under other conditions; but the Union was a success from the beginning. A Moderator like Bro. Shaw, full of life and zest, does much to help along a meeting. Another thing in our favor was that we had an excellent program. It is really astonishing what silly, impracticable subjects we sometimes see proposed for discussion at our Union Meetings. At this Union, there is this to be said: the program was probably better adapted to the occasion than some of the speakers were to the subjects. For instance, woman's work was assigned to Dr. Mitchell and Bro. Morton. Bro. Cobb was added later, and was thoroughly at home on this subject.

The brethren used Bro. VanDeventer freely. He always makes good preparation, and speaks with force and earnestness.

Prof. Hobgood of Oxford Female Seminary treated the audience to an elaborate and ornate address on education. The address was prepared with great care, and the brethren were liberal in their expressions of its merit.

The Orphanage was discussed by brethren Fleming and T. M. Allen, and after the discussion was over, a cash collection of twenty dollars was received from the audience. The Orphanage has no better friends anywhere than can be found in the Warrenton church. The Sunday school contributes five dollars to this work every month.

Bro. Mitchell's talk about Palestine was one of the most interesting features of the Union. He will not allow any one to call it a lecture; nevertheless, the style and matter of the address were very interesting and instructive.

The Warrenton brethren did everything possible to make the Union a success, and every one was delighted with the kind and hospitable entertainment of the delegates present.

Rev. L. L. Read of Hackensack, N. J., has, says the New York World of Feb. 5th, 1893, after a great deal of research, decided that Heaven is located in the star Alcyone, the brightest in the constellation Pleiades. This star is now to be seen at about 8:30 o'clock almost directly overhead. We refer this discovery to Rev. M. V. McDuffie of New Brunswick, N. J.

....Rev. O. C. Horton has just returned from a visit to his old home in Elizabeth City, N. C.

....Rev. I. T. Newton of Wake Forest College is called to the pastorate of the church in Apex, N. C.

....Prof. J. F. Lanneau and Mrs. Lanneau of Wake Forest paid a pleasant visit to our office last Saturday.

....Rev. Dr. Hall received ten persons into the fellowship of the Tabernacle church, Raleigh, on Sunday last.

....Dr. J. W. Carter, of the First church, Raleigh, gave the hand of fellowship to four new members last Sunday.

....Bro. W. F. Marshall, editor of the Gastonia Gazette, was in the city last week, and paid us a pleasant call.

....Rev. T. E. Jasper, of Manning, S. C., writes us that he could be induced to accept pastoral work in North Carolina.

....We learn from the Lumberton Robesonian that Bro. E. D. Johnson is very ill, and thought to be beyond recovery.

....Bro. Henry C. Dockery of Rockingham, N. C., was in the city last week on legislative business, and paid us a call.

....Rev. J. L. White of Asheville, N. C., is progressing well in his church work. Bro. White is an excellent pastor, as well as a fine preacher.

....Dr. J. J. Taylor, pastor of St. Francis Street Baptist church, Mobile, Ala., says among other good things: "You are making a good paper."

....Mrs. Dr. Pritchard leaves this morning for Oxford to visit her children who are at school there, and who are sick.—Charlotte Observer, Feb, 1.

....Cards are out for the marriage of Rev. N. Sidney Jones of Salisbury, N. C., and Miss Mamie Taliaferro of Evergreen, Ala., on February 7th, 1893.

....Dr. Tiberius Gracchus Jones has tendered his resignation as pastor of the First Baptist church of Norfolk, Va., to take effect the last Sunday in April.

....The receipts of the Foreign Mission Board at Richmond, Va., up to Feb. 1st, 1893, were $20,799 31 more than they were up to the same date of last year.

....Dr. John William Jones, Assistant Secretary of our Home Mission Board, is prominently mentioned as Dr. Frost's successor.—Baptist (Miss.) Record.

....Rev. J. N. Boothe of Edgefield C. H., S. C., was in the city last Friday, and called to see us. He was called back to North Carolina on the sad errand of the death of his mother.

....Dr. R. D. Fleming of Warrenton was in the city last Thursday, on his return from the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville, and called to see us.

....Rev. W. A. Pool says he and his family all reached Mansfield, Texas, safe and well. He says the winter there has been very mild. On February 2d they had a little ice for the second time.

...."The first thing the Holy Spirit did to chaos was to bring out of it Cosmos." The foregoing quotation is from a learned theological professor. We hope, since the emanation of such a scintillation, he will continue to maintain his equilibrium.

....Dr. Rufus C. Burleson, President of Baylor University, says: "When I came to Texas forty-five years ago there were in Texas 10,000 Methodists and 1,900 Baptists. Now Texas has 233,500 Baptists and 178,000 Methodists."—N. R. Pittman, in Central Baptist.

....The Baptist church at this place is to be congratulated upon securing Rev. N. B. Cobb as their pastor for the ensuing year. He will preach here once a month, beginning next Sunday. He is not only one of the best preachers in the State, but is a most agreeable gentleman.—Pittsboro Record.

....John C. Squier, a deacon of the Gastonia Baptist church, committed suicide on Sunday the 29th ult, by shooting himself. It is said to have been done in a fit of melancholia. He had the confidence and esteem of his church and of the entire business community. He left a letter to his wife, in which he said he was no longer fit to do business, that his mind was unsettled.

....The Second Baptist church of Petersburg, Va., expect to begin the erection of their new house of worship in a few weeks. The location is on Sycamore street, the main thoroughfare of the city, a most eligible lot. The wise and very efficient pastor, Rev. A. J. Fristoe, is rendering noble service. The two sister churches (First and West End) give upwards of $3,000 to the building fund.

....Dr. E. G. Robinson closes an article in the National Baptist on Bishop Brooks with the following paragraph: "Few more imposing spectacles or sublimer instances of respect for the dead have been witnessed among men than those seen in Boston on the day of the burial of Bishop Brooks, when, after the completion of services in Trinity church, the body was borne to the outer porch and ten thousand people in Copley Square bowed their heads and in unison repeated the Lord's Prayer, then taking up and singing in mighty chorus the grand old hymn, 'O God, our help in ages past.'"

....Everything comes to de man dat waits, deah breddern, but de sensible man is de one dat runs half way to meet his opportunities, while de foolish one sets down an' waits an' wonders wy eberything is so long in comin'.—Rev. Plink Plunk in N. Y. Herald. It used to be the fashion of the brethren to wait, but now those who would get calls to churches run out a long way to meet them.

....We, the Baptists of Roanoke Union, do solemnly resolve: First, that we protest against being taxed for the support of the State University so long as it is in hurtful competition with the denominational colleges. Second, we protest against being taxed for the education of ministers or the sons of ministers. Third, we protest against being taxed for the support of an orphanage so long as it is controlled by any secret society or any religious denomination.

....Both the Governor of Texas, the Hon. James S. Hogg, and the Lieut. Governor, the Hon. M. M. Crane, are Baptists. All the Baptist Governors of States, so far as we have been able to learn, have filled their positions honorably and well. The country will, some day, learn that Baptists make good Presidents as well as good Governors.—Western Recorder. From present indications, it will be a long time before North Carolina will have a Baptist Governor. Whenever one begins to be prominent for the place, they deliberately go to work to ruin him.

...."At least five millions of the negroes in the United States are unbaptized. Shall we escape on the Day of Judgment if this multitude perish as heathen at our very door and we do nothing to bring about their conversion?"—Christian Statesman. The Statesman evidently thinks that an unbaptized person is a heathen, and that being baptized and being converted are the same thing. It is sadly surprising how sacramentarianism permeates even evangelical Pedobaptist denominations. We have personally known intelligent Presbyterians and Methodists to manifest the greatest concern to have sick infants "christened" lest they should die without this rite and perish for lack of it. They believed in their hearts that a few drops of water, put by a preacher on the dying child's head, would save the child's soul.—Western Recorder.

....We hope and believe the Christian Register, Unitarian, is a true prophet when it says: "We are at the beginning of a movement in religion more extensive than any recorded in history. Compared with it, the Protestant Reformation is a small episode." The Register sees this good time in the breaking up of creeds through a "rush of great religious feeling." We rejoice that there is such a "rush" in increased study of the Bible, in an augmented missionary spirit in the churches, in more earnest prayer and offerings of money for Christ's cause with a liberality without precedent. The Reformation is "a small episode" compared to the grand missionary movement of our times. "The morning light is breaking," and the twentieth century will see much of the radiance of the day when Christ shall have universal dominion. Multitudes may not accept the stereotyped creeds of the past, but they will unite in giving glory "Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood."—Inquirer.

Robeson Union.

I have been a member of the Robeson Union for nearly two years, and have attended the meetings of this body regularly, and have enjoyed every meeting; but I am sure that the last was the very best meeting that I ever attended.

The meeting was held at Zion's Tabernacle on Dec. 28th and 29th, 1892.

The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. W. A. Humphrey, after which the Union was called to order, and the subjects of Home Missions and Church Discipline were considered.

Bro. E. K. Proctor, Jr., read the report on Home Missions, and brethren Proctor, Fulford, Humphrey and Martin spoke on the subject. The speeches were to the point and seemed to reach the hearts of the people.

The report on Church Discipline was then read by Rev. M. A. Stephens and was discussed by brethren Stephens, Proctor and Moore.

The meeting then adjourned with prayer by the pastor, Rev. R. A. Moore, to meet on Sunday morning at ten o'clock, for a Sunday-school mass meeting, which was conducted by brethren W. W. Nye and D. C. Britt.

At eleven o'clock the missionary sermon was preached by the writer. At the close of the sermon, a cash collection was taken for Home Missions, which amounted to twenty dollars.

We then adjourned to meet with the church at Red Springs in April.

I am delighted to see the spirit with which our people are taking hold of the mission work, and I do pray God that those of us who are fully in sympathy with the work, may continue to labor until the last cent of the $250,000, which we are trying to secure during the Centennial year, shall be raised, besides supporting the missionaries now in the field. Oh, that we could catch, just at this time, some of the fire which burned in the soul of William Carey and like him be constrained to greater efforts along this line of our Master's work! If we had more of the spirit of Christ, the Lord's treasury would soon be full and the hundred new missionaries located on the foreign fields, preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ to those who are now in darkness. I think, my brethren, that this is the time for more earnest prayer to God for the great work of missions. Let us remember at all times that he has said, "It is not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

With best wishes for the Recorder, I am,

Yours truly, F. H. Martin.

Lumberton, Jan. 30, 1893.

An Important Correction.

In answer to Bro. C. A. G. Thomas, I wish to say that what he is pleased to characterize as "a new freak of the Centennial Committee," is something for which said Committee is in no wise responsible. The writer in setting forth a plan by which the Central Committee of Woman's Mission Societies purposed aiding us in the raising of the Centennial Fund, unintentionally misstated their proposition in this matter. The exact wording of the paragraph that refers to the "Roll of Honor" and the list of "Most Honorable Mention" is as follows:

"Churches in which every woman in the church makes a subscription will be placed on the Roll of Honor. Those in which every woman in the church and every child in the Sunday-school subscribes, will be placed on the list of Most Honorable Mention."

It will be observed that churches and not individuals are to be distinguished, and the distinction is to be not as to the amount given, but in the fact of every woman and child making some contribution, however small. Thus some little, struggling country church, whose aggregate of contributions might be but small, can as easily claim a place in the list of Most Honorable Mention as the wealthiest city church.

This correction entirely removes the objection raised by Bro. Thomas, and, I doubt not, will prove entirely satisfactory to him and to all the brethren in the State.

There is, however, one other thing in the plan suggested by the ladies of the Central Committee, which is liable to the objection raised by Bro. Thomas. It is the following paragraph:

"The names of those subscribing five dollars and obtaining one Centennial certificate will be written in silver. The names of those subscribing ten dollars or more and obtaining two certificates, one for Home and one for Foreign Missions, will be written in gold."

The objection is in large measure obviated, when we remember that the poorest woman and the poorest child can fill one or two Brick Cards, if they are only zealous enough in getting people to buy their bricks. So the small meed of having their names written in silver or gold, would be determined, after all, more by their zeal than by their financial ability.

I have not consulted with the Central Committee, but knowing as I do their unswerving devotion to the Master's cause, their self-sacrificing labors, and their anxiety to do always that which will commend itself to the best judgment of the brethren, I doubt not they would strike out the last mentioned paragraph if judicious brethren insist upon the wisdom of their so doing. I am anxious that the conception of the Central Committee, which is a grand and far-reaching one, should not be obscured, namely that every woman in our churches and every child in our Sunday-schools shall be asked this year to make at least one contribution to the mission cause of our blessed Master. Shall we not, as pastors of the State, bid our sisters God speed in this noble effort, and help them by every means in our power?

One more word: speaking, not for the Committee, but for myself as a member of it, I must say that it is a very painful thing to feel that any movement of the Committee is to be discredited as likely to reveal some "new freak."

With my whole soul I desire the accomplishment of the purpose which, I take it, the Convention had in appointing the Centennial Committee. That purpose is the reaching of the masses of our people, through their pastors, in commemorating the Centennial year of modern missions, and thus awakening a wide-spread missionary enthusiasm.

We invite the sympathetic co-operation of our brethren throughout the State. We desire to provoke no discussion. If we make mistakes, write to us privately, and we shall be only too glad to act on the advice and suggestions of our brethren thus given.

What we have to dread more than criticism or anything else, is an apathy which would inevitably down the Centennial movement to failure. I do not for a moment doubt the deep interest of Bro. Thomas in the Centennial effort. We shall look to him and to all others who have a like interest, to help us in arousing a hearty enthusiasm for the Centennial throughout our State.

J. HARTWELL EDWARDS.

Goldsboro, Feb. 4, 1893.

Letter from Bro. C. W. Matthews.

What a lovely day this is! For thirty-five days we had snow and bitter cold weather. For two nights the thermometer stood four degrees below zero. The result is that among the country churches very little has been done.

Throughout the cold spell the people of my Lake Drummond church showed us much kindness, for which we bow our heads in humility and loving gratitude.

I took charge of Roper church, Chowan Association, the first of January. We have at this place a new, substantial and commodious house of worship. The church numbers about thirty-six communicants, who are ready, so far as in them lieth, for every good word and work. It is situated in a nice little town, whose name it bears, of about four hundred inhabitants. The town is noted for the manufacturing interest which prevails there. I believe it is a very important place for the Baptists. The little church was hoping to obtain some financial aid from the State Mission Board, but the Board knew best, and we submit with a determination to succeed if possible. Oh, that our people may, this Centennial year, give such an amount for the evangelization of our own State that every worthy place will be helped!

The larger the gifts the greater the number who will be enabled to hear the gospel as we believe it. Brethren, the cry of the many destitute sections is, "Help, help." Shall we help to give them the glorious gospel of Christ, and thus supply the destitution? or shall we sit still until the night cometh, and then go in the presence of the Omnipotent Judge empty handed?

"Lord, haste to help ere we are lost!
Send forth evangelists, in spirit strong,
Armed with thy Word, a dauntless host,
Bold to attack the rule of ancient wrong,
And let them all the earth for thee reclaim,
To be thy kingdom, and to know thy name."

Organization of the Second Baptist Church, Goldsboro, N. C.

Pursuant to an application of thirty-two members, letters of dismission were granted and a Council appointed, consisting of the pastor and deacons of the Goldsboro church, together with Rev. C. J. Nelson, Rev. G. L. Finch and Bro. Prince, a deacon of Mt. Calvary church, to organize a new church in the Baptist chapel in southeastern Goldsboro.

On the fifth Sunday night in January, in spite of a considerable rain, the new church was constituted in the presence of a congregation that filled the house.

After a short sermon by Rev. J. H. Edwards, the Council was organized by electing J. H. Edwards, Moderator, and Maj. H. L. Grant, Clerk.

The letter of dismission was then read, after which the Confession of Faith and Church Covenant were read, and were ratified by a rising vote of the new membership.

Brethren W. A. Denmark and B. C. Fields were chosen deacons. The former has long been an honored deacon of the Goldsboro church. Bro. Fields was ordained to the deaconate, Rev. G. L. Finch leading in the ordination prayer.

Rev. G. L. Finch was then unanimously called to the pastorate and accepted in a few earnest and fitting words.

A finance committee was chosen, consisting of brethren D. A. Johnson, W. H. Sugg, R. Daughtry, R. S. Tudor, and J. B. Hollingsworth.

Bro. J. B. Crawford was chosen clerk.

In the absence of Rev. C. J. Nelson, who had been chosen for that duty, but was kept away by the inclement weather, Bro. H. L. Grant was called upon and delivered an admirable charge to the new church.

The right hand of fellowship was then extended by the Council to the assembled membership of the new organization, and it was recognized as the Second Baptist church of Goldsboro.

Bro. D. J. Rivenbark, a deacon of the church at Faison's, was present, and on invitation acted with the Council.

The new church has entered upon its course with enthusiasm, the membership has already increased to forty-two, and the prospects for the future are unusually bright under the leadership of the consecrated young pastor, Rev. G. L. Finch.

The mother church will look with loving interest upon the progress of the young organization.

May the ties of mutual interest and affection, which now bind them together, only grow stronger with the lapse of years.

The William Royall Monument.

Dear Recorder:—When Bro. John E. White proposed a monument to the memory of Dr. Royall, I wrote a letter suggesting a plan for building the monument by endowing a Chair at Wake Forest College in his memory. But Bro. Cullom's letter appearing before mine was mailed, it was put in the waste basket.

I am in the heartiest sympathy with the suggestion and Dr. Taylor's plan for carrying it to success. In the death of Dr. Royall I feel bereft of one my dearest and most venerated friends. Perhaps no one has done more in shaping my life and character than has Dr. Royall. He was my ideal of a christian gentleman, friend, and teacher. So I should consider it a misfortune, if I could not take some part, however humble, in erecting this monument to the memory of this great and good man.

But will Dr. Taylor pardon me, if I modestly suggest that the time given for completing this work is rather short? It ought not to be considered too short, but the stringency of money matters must be considered too. I would suggest June 1st, 1894, as the time for completing the work. This would cause the completion of the enterprise to come very prominently before the friends of the College at commencement,—a most favorable time for creating a new enthusiasm in the College. But whatever the time and whatever the plan for doing this work, it has my hearty endorsement.

Monument of Maggie Nutt Herring.

By reference to the minutes of the Ladies' Missionary Society of the Mount Airy Baptist church, Sept. 5, 1892, I find this resolution: "That we pay $25.00 toward erecting a monument to the memory of Mrs. Maggie Nutt Herring, and that we solicit contributions from other missionary societies in the State."

While there has been some correspondence since then in regard to plans, etc., still nothing seemed to take definite shape until the appeal of Miss Lowndes came out in a recent number of the RECORDER.

We were glad to see a move in this direction, as we regard it a duty, as well as a great privilege, to aid in perpetuating the memory of one of our own sainted missionaries, whom to know was to love. Her noble life was one of self-sacrifice, and her character was spotless and pure.

I hope that every one interested in this movement will respond promptly.

The Elevation of the State University Would Solve the Question of Rivalries.

A MATTER FEASIBLE AND PRACTICABLE.

One of the Presidents of one of our State colleges writes as follows to the Charlotte Observer:—

The views expressed in your timely editorial of the 24th of January were the exact views of the college presidents as expressed in the conference in Raleigh on the same date. The elevation of the University above the colleges would not only solve the question of rivalries with the State in purely under-graduate education and secure to the University the loyal and hearty support of all the educational and religious sentiment of the State, but would supply North Carolina's greatest need in education, in giving a post graduate, professional, technical, special and finishing school to be developed with those types, grades and standards best suited to the genius of our people.

It is due to the president of the University to say that he does not agree with them either as to the desirability or the practicability of the proposed arrangement. The conference greatly confirmed the college presidents in their views. They feel, however, that but little can be accomplished without the hearty co-operation of the University, and that even with such co-operation it might not be possible soon to persuade the people of North Carolina that their needs are so pressing as to justify such expenditure of money as would be needed in the end to realize the proper University for the State.

Many of the best friends of education in the State feel that the time has come for a forward movement. If the University cannot make it, it will be attempted by private enterprise; and so long as the University occupies its present position of competition for under graduate patronage the colleges will find it necessary to maintain a fair and honorable rivalry with her, though it must needs be at great waste of force and energy which were better expended in a unified system. In this the colleges are all agreed.

Anti-Chinese Legislation.

CONFERENCE ON REPEAL THEREOF.

American statesmen, christians, philanthropists and patriots are earnestly requested to co-operate in securing the repeal of the obnoxious features of the Act of Congress, approved May 5th, 1892, entitled "An Act to Prohibit the Coming of Chinese Persons into the United States," with the attendant "Regulations" of the Secretary of the Treasury, of July 7th, 1892.

The act of 1888 (known as the Scott law) was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States (May, 1889) to be "in contravention of the express stipulations of the treaty of 1868 and of the supplemental treaty of 1880." This act of 1892, embodying the provisions of that act and going much beyond it, is a more flagrant violation of our treaty with China, which stipulates that "Chinese subjects residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities and exemptions in regard to travel or residence as there may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation."

By the act of 1892, every Chinese laborer in the United States must procure a certificate of residence before May 6th, 1893, under penalty of arrest, imprisonment at hard labor for a period not exceeding one year and deportation to China. "Any United States customs official, collector of internal revenue or his deputies, United States marshal or his deputies," may make arrests. The trial must be before a United States judge from whose decision there is no appeal. Right of trial by jury is denied. It is made mandatory on the judge to order that the convicted person "be deported from the United States" as provided in the act. If any one for unavoidable cause is unable to procure his certificate before May 6th, 1893, then, in order to escape the penalty, he must "clearly establish" the fact of his inability "to the satisfaction of the judge," and also satisfy the court "by at least one credible white witness that he was a resident of the United States" on or before May 6th, 1892. In many cases this is impossible. An unfriendly judge may declare that he is not "satisfied." Then follows the penalty. If one loses his certificate he may procure another only from the officer who granted the original, the costs of this and of his arrest and trial being at the discretion of the court.

So much for the Act itself. Now for the "Regulations."

The applicant must appear in person before the collector or his deputy and swear to the exact year, month and day, with other facts concerning his arrival in this country, together with certain particulars about himself. He must bring three unmounted photographs as prescribed, one for the form of application and one each for the original and the duplicate certificate of residence. It must be "a true photograph." "If the collector or his deputies have any doubt in regard to the correctness of the photograph presented they will refuse to receive the application and require a correct one." How easy to question the "correctness" of a photograph. He must also bring with him "two credible witnesses of good character" to make the prescribed affidavits. The collector or his deputy is sole judge as to their "credibility" and "good character." Often, because of the migratory habits of the Chinese, it is impossible to get these two witnesses; or if obtained at all, at great expense; who must swear that they are "well acquainted" with the applicant, that "we know of our own knowledge that on the 5th day of May, 1892, he was within the limits of the United States, residing at . . . . . ", and other facts about his arrival, residence, occupation, etc. If unable to furnish these witnesses "satisfactory to the collector or his deputy, his application will be rejected," unless by some other proof he can convince the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that a certificate should be given. In case of loss of the certificate "a duplicate may be issued under the same conditions that governed the original issue;" with this new obstacle, viz., the man must "establish to the satisfaction of the collector of the district in which the certificate was issued that such loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the applicant." Suppose the original was procured in San Francisco and six months later lost in New York, how is he to "establish" this, even after the expense of a journey across the continent for the duplicate certificate?

Merchants who are owners or part owners of a bona fide merchantile establishment are exempt from the operations of this law, though for self-protection, they also may procure certificates of residence.

This important act was rushed through the House, the "previous question" being ordered, with but fifteen minutes' discussion on either side. The vote was as follows: In the House; yeas, 186; nays, 27; not voting, 115. In the Senate; yeas 30; nays 15; not voting 43.

The grave objections to this legislation are, that it is a new departure for this country to require certificates of residence; "it tags a man like a dog" on the "Ticket-of-leave" system of Botany Bay; it puts the burden of proof on a man that he is not violating the law, thus reversing all principles of justice; it requires no affidavit or indictment charging guilt; it subjects a man to any time, or anywhere, to arrest at the discretion of a horde of officers; in many cases it makes exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, requirements concerning witnesses; it gives enormous discretion to collectors and to deputies concerning the rejection of witnesses and applicants, with no appeal and penalty if they abuse their power; it imposes heavy expense and much trouble to many in procuring the requisite evidence; it is barbarous in its penalties upon the innocent who may be unable to comply with its requirements; it presents the lamentable spectacle of a christian nation breaking its treaty with a people whom we are endeavoring to win to the acceptance of the gospel.

The act, with its attendant regulations, is a dishonor to the United States; a breach of faith with China; a hardship and wrong to the Chinese here; a provocation to retaliation by China; a hindrance and menace to christian missions in China of great proportions and promise; and, therefore, should be obliterated.

In view of these things and in accordance with the expressed desire of officials of twelve great organizations, engaged in missions to the Chinese in this country and in China, a special conference on the subject was held at the Bible House, New York City, January 26th, 1893. Representatives were present from the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal church, The American Baptist Home Mission Society, The American Baptist Missionary Union, The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, The American Missionary Association, The Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church of America, The Seventh Day Baptist Missionary Society, The American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, the Evangelical Alliance of the United States, The Young Men's Christian Association, while representatives (unavoidably detained) of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, and of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Southern Baptist Convention, concur in the action of the body.

The conference appointed a committee of seven to endeavor to secure the repeal of the obnoxious features of the act of 1892; and appointed the undersigned a committee on its behalf to make this statement to the American people and to request the immediate and strenuous co-operation of editors, ministers of the gospel and others for the accomplishment of the desired result. What is done must be done quickly, as this Congress expires March 4th, and the prescribed penalties take effect May 6th. Wherefore, this conference, fairly representing the sentiments of at least thirty-five millions of the people of this land, does hereby most respectfully and earnestly petition our representatives in Congress for the repeal or essential modification of the hasty legislation of May 5th, 1892.

By order and on behalf of the conference.

The Royall Chair.

The plan of the movement to raise a fund of $25,000 by June 1, 1894, to endow "The William Royall Chair at Wake Forest College, has been placed before the 300,000 Baptists of North Carolina.

Now is the time for the Baptist denomination to rally around its College as never before.

Reasons not necessary to mention, its usefulness, its position, its future, make necessary the demand for a larger, more earnest and more active fealty to its interests than at any time in its history. Let us pull altogether for the work now before us. Let there be no hesitating, dragging or flagging.

I pledge for myself $25.00 and to raise by January 1, 1894, $100.00.

ACTION OF MINISTERS' CONFERENCE.

TO THE BIBLICAL RECORDER, Raleigh, N. C.

Dear Editor:—Inasmuch as the Baptist ministers are continually receiving communications from Baptists of other States, inquiring into the character and record of the evangelist W. W. Smith, the Ministers' Conference, this morning, unanimously requested their Secretary to send to you for publication the resolutions passed by that body Nov. 7th, 1892.

Resolved 1. That we, the Baptist ministers of Richmond, Va., having heard and seen much of the evangelist, W. W. Smith, desire to say to the public that he is not a Baptist minister, and advise our churches to guard against him, as he has brought trouble into every church in which he has preached in our city.

2. That we request the Religious Herald and the secular papers of Richmond to publish this paper.

Signed by order of the Conference.

State Convention Minutes.

A copy of the Minutes of our last State Convention is before me. The work of the Secretaries seems to have been well done. The publishers did their part well, and the result is a neat pamphlet of seventy three pages full of just that kind of information that every Baptist in the State needs to enable him to clearly understand the nature of our various enterprises, the progress we are making in them, and the reasons why all should engage in pushing them.

I do not mean to write a criticism on the minutes—certainly not in the sense of fault-finding. But I may be pardoned for calling attention to a few things.

The arrangement is good, and the record of the work done at the various sessions of the Convention is accurate and sufficiently full. The reports of the various Boards and Committees are, for the most part, able papers, and deserve to be carefully studied.

The tables copied from the minutes of the Southern Baptist Convention make an interesting and instructive exhibit of denominational statistics, and educational property and State work for the year of 1891. The table giving statistics of Associations in North Carolina is very valuable. Of course it is not perfect, and will not be until the Clerks of the Associations and churches heartily co-operate with the Clerks of our Convention. It would be interesting to know how many Associational Clerks faithfully did all they could to prevent brethren Broughton and Cobb from giving us complete statistics of the Associations in North Carolina.

There is a change in the arrangement of the list of ministers. The old way of giving them alphabetically had its advantages. The new way of giving them by Associations also has its advantages. Now if we can combine the two we will have a list giving just about what we want to know about the location of the preachers. This can be done in this way:

W. S. Adderton,	Denton,	Liberty.
J. P. Boyd,	Polkton,	Anson.
J. W. Carter,	Raleigh,	Central.

On page fifty-four I find the following: "On motion the Clerks were instructed to have printed and distributed 1,500 copies of the Minutes, and that they receive the usual compensation (which is $12.50 each.")

When I read the above it fairly stunned me. I could stand that part of it that required the Clerks to publish and distribute 1,500 copies of the minutes; for we all must have minutes. Why even anti mission churches will spend money on Minutes. Yes, I could stand that part of very well. But when I saw that parenthetic clause, and came to a knowledge of the tremendous fact that the great Baptist denomination in Convention assembled solemnly agreed, without discussion, and without a dissenting vote, to pay each of the Clerks aforesaid the munificent sum of Twelve Dollars and Fifty Cents! I was just overcome by the enormousness of the thing. Charles Montgomery. By Mary A. Denison. 12mo, 184 pp. Price 90 cents. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society, 1420 Chestnut Street.

This book is a fresh telling of an old story. It is that of the efficacy and power of an earnest christian life and example. Aunty Baker by her fidelity when the whole Eastville church had backslidden, Hannah Wilson amid unfavorable surroundings and in the face of parental opposition, and Charles Montgomery sacrificing personal advancement and gain rather than principle, all illustrate this efficacy and power.

Our Centennial Committee has gotten up a pamphlet containing eighty-six pages, styled "Centennial Celebration of Modern Missions" held at Walnut St. Baptist church, Louisville, Ky., Oct. 2-4, 1892. Price twenty-five cents, and it can be had from the publishers, The Baptist Book Concern, Louisville, Ky., or from the Centennial Committee. It contains a number of well prepared addresses and some valuable facts and figures. All the proceeds go to the Centennial fund.

"Picturesque Chicago and Guide to the World's Fair" is a neat volume, and will be greatly serviceable to any one going to the World's Fair. It is published by Woodward & Co., Baltimore, Md. $1.50.

A Few Thoughts.

BY SCATTERHEAD.

"For there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." 1 Sam. 14: 6.

The above words were uttered by Jonathan when he slipped away from his old daddy and the rest of the fellows to fight the Philistines. The Philistines by their splendid chariots, their numerous horsemen, and their vast numbers, awhile before Jonathan's dodge, very much scared the wits out of the biggest part of Saul's army, and they took to their heels and fled to the caves, rocks, thickets, high places, and pits. Lots of the soldiers bruised themselves up worse running than they would fighting. Get some fellows badly frightened, the first thing they think about is knocking "old mother earth" with their pedestrals, and they don't seem to wear mighty much in such work; for it appears to be a very suitable performance. A guilty conscience will make a man a powerful big coward. A fellow who has done a heap of mean acts is mighty apt to run when nobody is about. The word of the Lord says: "The wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion." It may be the Israelites had been doing some pretty bad things, and had about forgotten to rely upon Jehovah to fight their battles. Jonathan was a brave and good man. He was a man who loved the Lord his God and depended upon his almighty power instead of his own merit and strength. Jonathan had a strong, unwavering faith in God, and the great victory he achieved was brought about by his relying upon the arm of omnipotence.

Faith in the Lord's power inspired Jonathan to begin and accomplish the great act recorded, but the result was of God. History does not record any feat to equal Jonathan's. One man, aided by the Lord, accomplished more than Saul and the balance of his army. Jonathan believed with God on his side that he could put the whole army of Philistines to flight, and hence he uttered the words, "There is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." Paul realized the same truth when he wrote, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." One christian relying upon God's Spirit will accomplish a greater work for God than ten thousand christians who depend upon their great numbers for strength, and rely upon their excellent devised machinery for success.

I reckon Jonathan would have been called a deserter if he could have been seen stealing away from his father's organized band, in order to do the work the Lord had moved him to do, fight the Philistines. He, of course, acted contrary to all military rules; as no soldier is allowed to undertake any enterprise without consulting an officer at headquarters; so Jonathan's act was not in the regular order, and some people are disposed to call it rash and out of place. Some of our missionaries have chosen not to work in the regular way, and let us not be too ready to abuse, and too free to criticise their views; for it may be they have great faith in God, which he intends to honor, and a few, though there be, that are thus trusting him, may accomplish more good than all the others combined. Time will tell. Let every one be free to work as the Lord may direct.

The Israelites were free to say that Jonathan wrought a great salvation among them. The work he accomplished was not easy or pleasant to the flesh, as he had to climb up the rough steeps on his hands and feet in order to reach his enemies. We have lots of enemies to fight, and before we can reach them and run them, we must stoop mighty low. When the Israelites who had crawled into holes and other hiding places, saw and heard how the Philistines were running, came out of their dens, and done some powerful hard running after their enemies. It is mighty pleasant sometimes to return a compliment. A man feels powerful brave when his enemy is running from him. The word of the Lord says something about one man chasing a thousand and two putting ten thousand to flight. A "big gun" writing in the November Baptist Teacher voices my sentiments. He thinks good machinery is all right in the churches, if the people do not depend too much upon that and money to run it. He thinks there must needs be machinery, but there should be plenty of fire between the wheels. He states that there is danger of getting too much machinery in our churches, as the old fashioned hand to hand work is going out of use, and the big machinery of church societies taking its place. There seems to be no end to the societies being organized among the churches. Well some of us are delighted to see and to use good machinery, and suppose it takes a great deal more to run the world and the church than it used to. The change of times demands it. There was very little machinery in the church in Paul's day, and what little they had was very simple.

The foreign missionary enterprise was set on foot at Antioch, and nothing is said about Bishop Paul or Elder Barnabas presiding and dictating to the balance of the assembly, but something is said about the Holy Spirit being the great ruler on that occasion, and he said, "Separate me Paul and Barnabas for the work whereunto I have called them." The christian in that day depended upon the guidance of the Spirit, and they were led into all truth, and hence men who were full of faith and the Holy Ghost were chosen to do the work for which they were qualified, and they were conscious that they could do all things through Christ's strength.

"Old Man's" articles are seasonable, and show us the great necessity of depending upon the power of the Holy Spirit for success in the Lord's work. Let us depend more upon God's all powerful Spirit, and less in human machinery and the thousands of dollars we strive to raise. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord

A Lame Argument.

In that excellent editorial of last week's RECORDER, the following occurs:

"4. Again, notice Paul's words, Gal. 1: 9, 'If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.' He seems here to have shown a strange oversight by sticking so persistently to the masculine gender."

1. Paul did not stick to the masculine gender. It is true, the words "man" and "him" are in our translation, but Paul did not write English. Did he use words in the original exclusively masculine? Take the word "man." He used no word for it at all, as is shown by it being in italics in our translation. Instead of sticking to the masculine, he used the indefinite pronoun, tis, which means "anyone," and has the same form for masculine and feminine both. The neuter gender has a separate form, ti, but the word Paul used is everywhere as much feminine as masculine.

Take next the word "him." For the whole expression, "let him be accursed," Paul used but two words, a verb without a subject, and an adjective that is neuter. "Him" could come from neither of these, and there is nothing left in the entire verse from which to supply it, except tis, "anyone," that is feminine as well as masculine. In other words, Gal. 1: 9 has no words exclusively masculine in the original to authorize "man" and "him" in our translation. The word Paul used is feminine and masculine, and "man" and "him" being supplied from it, must be taken to include women and men. But grant the RECORDER'S conclusion, then—

2. The argument proves too much. For if "man" and "him" in Gal. 1: 9, when there is nothing in the original to make them masculine only, mean men exclusively, how much more do they mean men only when backed in the original by words exclusively masculine. From hundreds of texts take four. "If ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you." Matt. 6: 14. "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof." Matt. 12: 36. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him." Rom. 12: 20 "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life." Rev. 2: 7.

The word men in the first two texts is backed in the original by the masculine gender, as will be seen in the use of the article in particular. The word him in the last two texts has its equivalent in the original in a pronoun strictly masculine. In Gal. 1: 9 the RECORDER makes "man" and "him" exclude females, notwithstanding Paul used a word in the original that was feminine and masculine. How much more then do these words in the above texts, when the masculine alone is used in the original, how much more, I say, do men and him exclude females. But who is prepared to receive such a conclusion? If Gal. 1: 9 excludes women from preaching, then much more do the above texts exclude them from forgiveness of trespasses, from answering for idle words, from being fed when enemies, and from entering heaven.

If God teaches that woman should not preach, it is certainly not by such lame arguments as Gal. 1: 9.

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. "Paradise" for Sale.

This desirable place is in sight of the ocean and enjoys the delightful sea breeze; five miles from Morehead City, N. C.; bounded on the South by Bogue Sound, on the North by Newport river, both navigable streams; and lawful fences. The Atlantic and North Carolina railroad runs through the centre of the farm and in full view of the residence, with a station near by. The water pure and healthy. The farm contains several different kinds of soil and is adapted to any kind of crops grown in the State. Game, fish, clams, oysters, escallops, etc., are abundant. This place is adapted to trucking, fishing, stock raising, or any other occupation one can follow in the country. "Paradise" contains about five hundred acres, and can be bought for three thousand dollars. This is a rare chance to get a place with so many advantages and no disadvantages, and at so low a price. Who will be the lucky one? Call on or address,

Health of School Girls.

SOCIAL PLEASURES BREAK DOWN MORE THAN STUDY.

A teacher of high reputation and superintendent of public schools is quoted as saying: "It is not hard study that breaks down the health of girls, but the circumstances under which they study, the demands of society and its numerous social follies with all their excitements. The ability of girls to master the several branches is fully equal to that of the boys, and when an amount of study is reached that is injurious to girls we have gone as far as is profitable for boys. Boys also break down from the evils of society." Dr. Mahan, who was president of Oberlin fifteen years, says that during his connection with that college the proportion of young men to young women who entered upon the course and failed to complete it on account of failure of health under the strain of study and thought was at least two to one.

William M. Thayer of Boston quotes from a letter of an educated German woman now living in New York, Mrs. Ogden N. Rood, to show the way the German girls are trained in regard to social life during the period while they are studying:

"The young German girl, while at school, makes study her whole business. She goes to no parties, visits no balls. She does not waste her hours of sleep or leisure in putting numberless ruffles on her garments, so as to surpass her mother in elegance, nor does she promenade up and down the avenues and flirt with young gentlemen. Her amusements are of the simplest. A walk, or an hour spent in a public garden in her mother's company; occasionally a concert or an opera, which never lasts later than 9 or 9:30; some holiday afternoon, a little gathering of young school friends, to which gentlemen are not admitted. A German mother does not bedeck her little daughter of four or eight years with flounces or sashes half as heavy as herself, and then show her off in a parlor of admiring friends; nor send her to a children's ball, where, with a young prodigy of the other sex, she imitates her elders in flirtation. Instead of coaxing the willful darling into obedience by the promise of candy, utterly disregardful of future dyspepsia, she brings her to reason by more efficient, if less agreeable expedients."

Surely it is neither wise nor just, says Mr. Thayer, to ascribe to study the physical decay that is the direct result of unwholesome food, insufficient apparel, tight lacing, thin shoes, late hours, exciting amusements, unventilated school-rooms and other irregularities. He quotes a remark of Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney: "Health is the holiness of the body, and every girl should have a high standard of perfect health set before her, and be made to feel that she has no more right to trifle with and disobey the hygienic laws than those of morality or civil society. She should be as much ashamed of illness brought on by her own folly as of being whipped at school for disobedience to her teacher."

A Helper in Time of Need.

At the time when the people of the South were without help because of our poverty, the American Baptist Publication Society came to our relief, and during the last twenty-five years has made grants to our churches and Sunday schools to the amount of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. As our population in the State increases, larger grants of Bibles and Testaments are needed and thousands of poor schools are to be helped. No other organization owned by the Baptists can supply these. The means of these grants will be increased or diminished, according as the schools that are able to buy do or do not patronize the publications of the Society.

Mr. Spurgeon's Chats with his Students: or Jottings from an Old Note-Book.

The Bible is to make us know our ignorance as well as to give us light.

Faith can only read the first chapter of Genesis aright. We were not at the beginning, and we have not had the experience of world-making.

Beauty and order will not satisfy God without fruitfulness.

We must have the revelation in the heart and the revelation in the book.

Don't give headaches instead of heartaches.

To be a shining light we must have a heart burning.

There is no higher title than "sent from God."

If we leave the wolves alone we cease to be shepherds.

We are to burn, not amuse.

Baptist ministers don't like dancing, for the very fact that one of their number lost his head through it.

Our hearers must see that we firmly believe in what we preach. The most damning thing is for a preacher to preach the gospel as an actor.

If you can be silent keep silent.

Some sermons seemed to be no good until the provision merchant wrapped them round his butter.

Make your sermons red hot; never mind what the people say; we are not to go in for snowballing on Sundays.

Imitate the Salvation Army and go in with a smash—let us take some of their earnestness.

If we are not earnest, it is all twaddle about getting the people to be earnest.

We must not be stuck-up fellows, when we will be everybody—God soon makes us nobody.

'Tis an awful sight to see a proud minister—far worse to see a proud student. They forget the dung-hills where they grew, and think themselves the Lord knows who.

Fight unbelief with belief, and untruth with truth.

Preach experience from experience. Hearts and souls are necessary to touch hearts and souls.

The truths which have broken the preacher's heart will break the hearts of his hearers.

'Tis a grand thing when a man has the faculty for precipitating decision.

There are two styles of preaching: the first no one can understand but the preacher, the second no one, not even the preacher.—London Baptist.

Rev. Martin Bibb.

HIS RULES—STATEMENT OF LIFE WORK.

This useful and laborious minister of the gospel died at Gatewood, West Virginia, on Jan. 11, 1893, in his sixty-ninth year. We take from a sketch of his life appearing in the Journal and Messenger, the rules observed by Bro. Bibb, and a statement of his life labors:

Shortly before his death, he wrote as follows: "It has been my purpose to observe the following rules:

1. The Golden Rule as given in Matthew.
2. To do good to all men as I had opportunity.
3. To speak evil of no one, except to do good.
4. To live peaceably with all men.
5. To speak the truth, even in a horse trade.
6. To meet promptly all my promises.
7. Pay cash down for everything, and never go in debt, except for real estate.
8. Read the Scriptures and pray every day.
9. Never to waste precious time.
10. Try to do some good every day.
11. Give one-tenth of my income to the Lord's cause.
12. Fear God and keep all his commandments."

"By the grace of God I am what I am," was a favorite passage to him.

In a ministry of thirty-eight years, he preached 5,614 sermons; baptized 1,093 persons; married 380 couples, for which he received $792.33. The greatest number of sermons in any one year was 237; greatest number baptized in one year 88. He dreaded paralysis and insanity, and yet the great goodness of God preserved him from these. How sweet must be the rest of heaven to one who has so little rest here. He still felt a deep interest in the Lord's work, and rejoiced in its increasing success. In his last letter to the writer, he said: "Now I am waiting—only waiting for the summons, 'Child, your Father calls, come home.'"

Breakfast for the Soul.

Some christians die of starvation. They surfeit the inner man with secular stimulants of all sorts—with spiced books of fiction, with "light reading" that is mere sillabub. Many swallow little else than their daily newspaper. The moral faculties become debilitated on this flimsy diet. Now, all the athletic christians—all those who can carry heavy loads, do thorough work, and stand a long pull—are hungry feeders on God's book. Nothing will impart sinew and muscle to your piety like the thorough study and digestion of your Bible. A good sermon must be digested, or it will be of little use to you, and your daily bread of the Bible must go through the same process in order that it may be assimilated and taken into your spiritual fiber. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them, and they were the joy of mine heart," said the old-time saint. One strong Bible text lodged in the memory, and turned over and over and well digested, will be a breakfast for your soul, and in the strength of it you may go through the whole day. A soldier is never in so good a trim for battle as after a sound sleep and a square morning meal; it is not easy to fight or to march on an empty stomach. In like manner every servant of Jesus Christ must recruit his or her spiritual strength by reading Christ's words and thinking about them by meditation, by prayer and soul converse with God. I have always observed that the light readers and light thinkers make light christians, and those who neglect their Bibles and their assets soon dwindle into dwarfs. Having no depth of root, their religion withers away. —Selected.

Centennial Motto.

Jesus stamped the work he committed to his disciples thus, when he said "Go ye into all the world." The church in Jerusalem said the gospel for "Jews only." Jesus said the gospel for the whole world.

The disciples from the foreign field (Cyprus and Cyrene) gave the church at Jerusalem the idea of enlargement. Under the impulse of this movement every christian became a missionary, and during that century the gospel spread from Judea to the Tigress on the East, to the Adriatic Sea on the West, and from the Black Sea on the North to the Lybian desert on the South.

Carey wrote enlargement over the work of the churches a century ago. The influence of his work has gathered strength with the years, until there are now more than seven thousand missionaries, whose efforts are being supplemented by forty thousand native helpers, and this work is receiving the substantial help of $11,000,000 from the home churches to tell the story of enlargement.

With the close of the first century of modern missions we look with pleasure upon enlargement at home.

In America we have about 94,000 preachers of the gospel, 140,000 churches, with a membership of thirteen and a half millions, and possessing the magnificent sum of thirteen billions of dollars.

From these churches, and from this army of preachers, will come missionaries to occupy the field as the Lord shall enlarge the work.

From this full treasury will come money to meet the demands for the enlargement.

How can this be done? Co operation and organization is the answer.

Let each one give what he can, constrained by the love of our Lord Jesus, to the work.

WORK FOR THE WOMEN.

God has owned and signally blessed their efforts. Their self-denial, consecration and devotion to this and every good work have contributed much in bringing the Centennial work so prominently before the churches.

Let some active women in each church second the efforts being made to get a contribution from each sister, which will entitle each church in which every woman makes a subscription to the Centennial work a place on the Roll of Honor in the Centennial Fund Record Book. There is great necessity which should bestir every christian woman.

WORK FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

It is a great evangelizing agency. One hundred thousand young people come into the churches each year, and most of them through the Sunday-school. Why may we not use this arm of the church for the furtherance of the Centennial work?

No person can do more toward getting the Sunday-school in line for work than the superintendent. An earnest effort on his part will put many names on the Centennial Fund Record Book, in silver or gold, and many dollars in the treasury, which will result under the blessing of God in the salvation of many souls.

Dear church member, the success of this work is with you. Will you not improve this opportunity of a life time.

"We are not divided, all one body," &c.

Need for Bible Education.

Education among the lower and even middle classes in Italy is much neglected. Especially are they ignorant of Bible knowledge as translations are not given freely to the people.

The priests do not encourage its use. "If you can picture what we, as individuals and as a people, would be without the Bible, you may form some idea of the need of Italy. Colporteur work is done by many of our evangelists in Italy. The venerable Ferraris (Pinerolo) loves to scatter the word of God, with which his own mind is so remarkably stored, among the people. Shall we not give the "Bread of Life to Italy?"—Geo. Braxton Taylor.

BABIES ON FIRE

Babies burning up, babies in agony from itching and burning eczemas and other torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly and blotchy skin and scalp diseases. None but mothers realize how these little ones suffer when their tender skins are literally on fire. To know that a single application of the CUTICURA REMEDIES will in the great majority of cases afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a permanent and economical (because most speedy) cure, and not to use them is to fail in your duty. Think of the years of suffering entailed by such neglect, years not only of physical but of mental suffering by reason of personal disfigurement. Why delay a moment longer the use of these great skin cures, blood purifiers, and humor remedies? Cures made in infancy and childhood are speedy, economical, and almost invariably permanent.

Sold everywhere. Price: CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c; RESOLVENT, $1.00.

Worrying.

Webster says that this word comes from the Anglo-Saxon "worowen," which means to strangle. When you strangle a man you take his breath away. You make him faint. He still lives, but lives only to suffer. Alas! how many people let petty cares and anxieties strangle them. They are half dead all the time with worrying thoughts about what is going to happen, when they need all their strength for the duties of the hour. Worrying is one of the deadliest of sins. It strangles faith; it ignores the presence, the power and the love of God. It is practical atheism. What right have we to be fretful in the present or anxious about the future while God reigns? He doeth all things well. He has been just and good in all his dealings with us thus far, and he will be to the end of time.

There is no way in which Satan can more effectually destroy a man's happiness and usefulness than by tempting him to worry. The fussy, fretful, anxious man is like my horse Fleta. She is so timid and nervous that she starts at every shadow and at every sound. She goes along the road with ears erect, on the qui vive for something startling. She finds, of course, what she is looking for, and she shies, or rears, or runs, instead of going straight forward. Thus she tires herself before her journey is half over. She worries her driver, and all the horses that are in the team with her. Such a horse, no matter how good in other respects, is a nuisance. And so is such a man. If he professes to be a christian, no one can take knowledge of him "that he has been with Jesus" and learned of him. Jesus did not worry. He was the most patient and hopeful man that ever lived. He knew that his Father loved him and would take care of him in spite of the malice of men and demons.

The only effectual remedy for worrying is faith. When we trust in God with all our hearts there is an end of anxiety. We commit all our interests to him. We cast all our care upon him, and are at peace. But faith is not a negative grace. When genuine, it will be manifested by works. He who really believes in God will want to serve God. And in the activity and fidelity which result from faith, all our thoughts and affections are so engrossed that worrying is impossible. When a man is busy with the duty of the hour, he has no time to think of the possibilities of to morrow or next week. He is like a man who goes out at night with a torch. It lights his way as he advances. But he must give his attention to so much of the path as that torch illuminates. He will not, if he is a wise traveler, stop to wonder or worry in regard to the shadows before him which the torch-light has not yet dispelled. He will walk in the light and rejoice in the light. He will go on believing that as he takes the light with him it will progressively illumine his path until the day dawns.

Brethren in Christ, our Lord tells us that we are "children of the light." It is unfilial, therefore, for us to walk in darkness. We know where we are going, and who is our guide and helper in the journey thither. Hence it should be true of each of us that our path is "as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." That light is the faith that works by love, and purifies the heart and overcomes the world.—Exchange.

Literature for the Young.

One of the burning questions of the present time is as to the kind of literature which shall be placed in the hands of our youth. A distinguished statesman is reported to have said that if he could be allowed to make the songs of a nation he would care very little as to who should make the laws. Perhaps he over estimated the influence of the first and under estimated the influence of the last. But there can be little doubt that underlying his remark is a very suggestive truth. Nevertheless, what he said might be somewhat improved by a slight alteration. If he had said, "Let me make the literature of the youth of a nation, and then I do not care who makes the literature for the men and women," this would suggest a much more important truth as regards the development of a country than what is suggested in the remark to which we have called attention. Of course songs may be regarded as part of the literature of a nation, and consequently as part of the literature of the youth of the nation; but these songs, even when adapted to youth, make up a very small portion of the literature which floods our country, and which is specially intended for the young. A few weeks ago we called attention to the fact that this is emphatically the age of young people. They are to the front in nearly everything, and yet the amount of literature which is specially prepared for them is simply enormous as well as almost appalling in view of the character of a great deal of it, and this fact of itself serves to distinctly emphasize our remark as to youthful influence being a prominent characteristic of the age. And if our young people are really to be our governors in the future it is surely most important to provide for them such mental food as will make them what they ought to be.—Herald Light.

Who Owns the United States

In spite of the rapid increase in the number of millionaires in the United States in recent years, the popular notion is that wealth is yet very much more evenly distributed in this country than in England. Thos. G. Shearman, the well known New York statistician, has been engaged for some time in collecting facts to show as precisely as possible the proportion of the wealth of the country held by a few rich men and families, and he finds a greater concentration of wealth here than in any other country. The results of his investigation appeared in The Forum. Mr. Shearman makes an enumeration of owners of more than $20,000,000 each, comprising seventy names which represent an aggregate wealth of $2,700,000,000, an average of more than $37,500,000 each. Although Mr. Shearman, in making this estimate, did not look for less than twenty millionaires, he discovered incidentally fifty others worth more than $10,000,000 each; and he says that a list of ten persons can be made whose wealth averages $100,000,000 each, and another list of one hundred persons whose wealth averages $25,000,000. No such lists can be made up in any other country. "The richest dukes of England," he says, "fall below the average wealth of a dozen of American citizens, while the greatest bankers, merchants and railway magnates of England cannot compare in wealth with many Americans."

The average annual income of the richest 100 Englishmen is about $450,000, but the average annual income of the richest 100 Americans cannot be less than $1,200,000, and probably exceeds $1,500,000. The richest of the Rothschilds, and the world renowned banker, Baron Overstone, each left about $17,000,000. Earl Dudley, the owner of the richest iron mines, left $20,000,000. The Duke of Buccleuch (and the Duke of Buccleuch carries half of Scotland in his pocket) left about $30,000,000. The Marquis of Bute was worth in 1872 about $28,000,000 in land, and he may now be worth $40,000,000 in all. The Duke of Norfolk may be worth $40,000,000, and the Duke of Westminster perhaps $50,000,000.

Mr. Shearman's conclusion is that 25,000 persons own one-half the wealth of the United States, and that the whole wealth of the country is practically owned by 250,000 persons, or one in sixty of the adult male population, and he predicts, from the rapid recent concentration of wealth, that under present conditions 50,000 persons will practically own all the wealth of the country in thirty years—or less than one in 500 of the adult male population.—National Baptist.

Dr. Haygood, in the Independent, suggests that, so far as its effect on the people are concerned, a great deal of the preaching might as well be French. His eyes were opened by a Baptist merchant in Boston. "See here," said he, "you don't treat us right. Our pastor in Boston is a big man—a D. D., and a regular star preacher. He has lots of books, and spends nearly all of his time in his study. He has among these books what you call the 'standards'—classics so to speak. I don't know anything about them; but they say they were written a hundred years ago. I expect that the man who wrote them, in order to be counted classical, wrote in the style of a hundred years before that, so that the style of our preacher is two hundred years old. I am on the street, in the store, or on the road all the week. I only know the American language. Our pastor speaks English two hundred years old. So far as understanding him is concerned, it would be as well for me if it were half French." Dr. Haygood gives other illustrations; "A young preacher of rare gifts, just out of the seminary, was for a year pastor of a Mission church composed of a factory population. There was not a scholar in his congregation. They were poor, tired out, illiterate people. The text was 'By grace you are saved through faith.' He began: 'Justification, my brethren, is a forensic term,' and in like manner to the end, making elaborate arguments to prove what these poor people never doubted. The people did not know what justification meant; they had never heard 'forensic;' the only notion they had of the "term" was something about opening and closing of the public schools." Dr. Haygood's final illustration is of a Negro preacher in a Mississippi town: "His voice had the perfect pulpit tone, on which some of the people dote with peculiar fondness. 'Owing to the prevalence of atheism in this community, I will, on next Sunday morning, deliver a discourse designed to prove the existence of God, considered from the cosmological standpoint.' 'My lawd,' exclaimed an old colored sister."—Journal and Messenger.

An Elephant's Fear of a Mouse.

One of the keepers of the Zoo, whose experience with the larger animals has been quite varied, in speaking of the elephant, said: "While it has no fear of the powerful Bengal tiger or the Numidian lion, at the first sight of the most diminutive creature it will shrink from it and tremble all over from the most abject fear. I remember well, years ago, one of the largest and most brutal elephants we had in the Zoological Garden, while feeding one day in its quarters, discovered a mouse which was lunching in a corner on some of the provender, and the scare it gave to the elephant and the way it shook and carried on for a few minutes was a sight to look at. The mouse seemed entirely composed in the presence of such a mastodon, and satisfied its appetite fully before retiring. The elephant gave its Lilliputian visitor a wide berth during its stay."—Philadelphia Press.

Notes from Caldwell County Association.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—It has been with us here at the foot of the Blue ridge, as with us at the capital, very cold—so much so that we have not been able to do much church work for some time. The ground is said has been frozen fifteen and eighteen inches deep, but it is remarkable that it was colder here at Lenoir than at Boone, eight miles north of the top of the Blue ridge, the thermometer being fifteen degrees below zero at Lenoir and only eight at Boone. It is pleasant now, and we hope it will not be so cold again during the winter.

I did not miss an appointment at any of my churches during January, but my congregations were small. At my last appointment at Lenoir we received four persons into fellowship, two by letter and two for baptism, the first we have received for baptism since my connection with the church. We are expecting several others to unite with us soon—some by baptism and others by letter. We have recently put blinds to our house, and the brethren have organized a weekly prayer meeting, and there is some talk of having services twice a month. In addition to first Saturday and Sunday, I could give them a service second Sunday afternoon or night, after-filling my regular appointment at Lower Creek, two miles away. The prospect is hopeful, and we most sincerely trust that the little church will grow to be self sustaining after this year.

The church at Lower Creek has decided to enlarge their house, and make some needed repairs. The present house will not seat the people in good weather at our monthly meetings.

The Lord willing, we hope to begin a meeting of days at King's Creek the third Sunday in this month, and are expecting Bro. C. E. Gower to aid us.

We also hope to have Bro. C. C. Pool with us in a meeting of days at North Catawba early in March. This is my first year with this church, and thus far I am delighted with the membership. All have a mind to work. Brother J. H. Hoffman, whom you have with you at the capital as a member of the Legislature, is a member of this church, and its clerk.

Bro. H. M. Croom has recently been called to the pastorate of Yadkin church. I hope pastor and people will be mutually pleased with each other. I tried to serve this church three years as pastor, and never labored with a better people.

It is reported that Bro. R. L. Patton will be called to Rocky Spring.

Bro. J. H. Nelson is pastor of Piney Grove and Blair's Fork churches.

The Caldwell Union held its last session at Union church, and was a fairly good session, considering the condition of the roads. The next session will be held with Blair's Fork, one and one half miles north of Lenoir, on Friday before the fifth Sunday in April.

The next session of the Caldwell County Sunday-school Association will be held with Globe church, beginning on Friday before the first Sunday in May. Does not our State Sunday-school Convention meet in Charlotte at the same time? If it does, some of us would like to change ours to Friday before the fifth Sunday in April, so as to send a delegate to Charlotte.

Prof. E. B. Phillips is having a good school here at Hibriten. The enrollment thus far in the spring session is above eighty.

Wishing you and all the readers of the RECORDER a prosperous and happy new year, I am yours fraternally,

I. W. THOMAS.

Mt. Zion Union.

Dear Recorder:—Our Mt. Zion Union, which began last Friday morning, was a very pleasant and profitable meeting. The attendance was not large; but considering the weather and roads, the delegation was quite gratifying. Several brethren whom we expected, and whose presence would have contributed very much to the interest of the meeting, were unavoidably prevented from coming.

Dr. Carroll was to preach the introductory sermon, but in his absence, we substituted Bro. C. W. Blanchard, who gave us a most excellent sermon. Bro. Blanchard is about to move to Durham. For some months he has been pastor of the Third church, but now we are glad that he is going to make his home with us.

Dr. Durham and Prof. Poteat were with us and added very much to this meeting. Their addresses on the subject of the Centennial were exceedingly instructive and inspiring.

It was much regretted that Dr. Durham had to leave early Sunday morning to fill an engagement to preach in Raleigh. He made the most of every moment while here, when not in the church, calling to see his old friends; but left without seeing many who were longing to see his face and shake his hand. So numerous are his devoted friends in Durham, it would require a month for him to get around. All day I have been hearing from different ones, "I am so sorry I did not see Bro. Durham."

Prof. Poteat remained over Sunday with us and addressed our people Sunday morning on education. It was a very great pleasure to all of us to have him and his accomplished lady spend a few days with us. I am sure his visit has greatly increased the interest of our people in Wake Forest College, which he so worthily and faithfully represented while here.

The Centennial Committee of our Association is making a vigorous effort to reach and arouse all of our churches and secure from them a contribution to the Centennial fund. The First church will, I think, do her duty in this matter.

Our work in Durham is moving on very pleasantly. We have been somewhat hindered by the severe weather of late, but we are in a good condition for more aggressive action when spring opens. Our church has been bereaved by the death of several members. Bro. F. J. Bailey, one of our best men, passed away Saturday night. For a long time he has been an invalid and an intense sufferer; but all the while his patience and submission have been remarkable. He lived and suffered and died like a christian.

The RECORDER has my very best wishes and shall have among my people my hearty support. Very truly your brother,

W. C. TYREE.

Colgate University.

The library has recently received a gift of books from Rev. James A. Spurgeon, consisting of the following: thirty-seven volumes of the late C. H. Spurgeon's sermons, six volumes of which are from the New Park Street pulpit, and thirty-one from the Metropolitan Tabernacle pulpit; the Treasury of David, seven volumes; My Sermon Notes, one volume; Lectures to My Students, one volume; A Bible, in the front of which is fastened a sheet containing the following: "Pastor's College, Newington, London, This Bible was used many years in the college room by Charles Haddon Spurgeon, founder and first President of the Pastor's College. Presented to Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y., by the sister College in London, James A. Spurgeon, President, 1892."

Dr. John Green, Principal of Colgate Academy, has been appointed Professor of Latin in the College, and Mr. C. H. Thurber of Ithaca has been appointed Principal of the Academy and Professor of Pedagogy, a department recently established in the College. Oratory and Rhetoric are to have a separate department, at the head of which will be Prof. R. W. Thomas.

These changes are all to take place by the opening of the Fall term, 1893.

Cooper's Tobacco Warehouse,

HENDERSON, N. C.

Have you heard the latest from this mammoth concern? The twentieth year of a most successful business is just now closing. D. Y. Cooper, the proprietor, realizing the liberal and generous patronage he has received, proposes for the next two months to hold a sort of informal reception, and show some substantial appreciation for the long and continuous manifestations of confidence and friendship which he has received from his patrons during this long period of business relations.

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

1. To the person selling the greatest number of pounds of tobacco at Cooper's Warehouse, and to the one who receives the largest net sales, from January 1st, 1893, to February 25th, 1893, will be presented with a round-trip ticket, including $4.00 for board, to the presidential inauguration at Washington City March 4th, 1893. Also to the one selling ten pounds of finest bright wrappers, and also to the one offering twenty five pounds finest cutters, will receive a round-trip ticket to Washington City. These tickets will be sent to the winners on or before the first day of March, 1893. A correct record will be kept, and everybody is invited to compete.

Besides offering these extra inducements, the public is assured that they will always receive the highest prices for all grades of tobacco.

The Drink Curse.

Why don't our legislators, now in session, "tackle" the drink question, the great curse of the nation? Why not give us a little wholesome legislation (before their sixty days are out) on that which they know to be evil, and only evil continually, instead of tinkering at the "homestead law," which nobody wants abolished except a few skinflints and sharpers, that they may pile up their own gains and fill their coffers by selling out the homes of their neighbors? Why not legislate for the better protection and security of said "homes" from the greed and grasp of the heartless liquor-sellers all over the State, in every nook and corner, cross-roads and township, with their whiskey dens and traps set to catch the poor unwary drunkard?

Why not pass a law at once, forbidding all county commissioners to grant licenses to sell the "vile stuff" to any one, except by consent of two-thirds of the voters in a county where the "enemy of his race" proposes to sell it? Why not do something great and grand of this kind before returning to their homes and their constituents. Oh no. They want to overturn the "homestead law." That will give work for the needy gentlemen of the "legal profession," and put notices all over the county "Land for Sale," "Important Homestead Sale," "Great Bargain," &c.

Whiskey is the thing we want stopped, right now before the sixty days expire. The drink curse is the great serpent for our wise legislators, that we voted for last November, to throttle and strangle and crush, if possible, and if they don't and won't do something, sure and effective, to dam the flood of this terrible curse, then "good by." They'll get no more votes of mine.

NEWELL—Sister George A. Newell, member of the Roxboro Baptist church, after a few years of declining health, fell asleep in Jesus on Saturday evening, Jan. 28th, 1893, at the home of her son in Henderson, N. C. She was a sweet spirited wife, mother, friend, and christian. She leaves a husband and six children, who were the subjects of her thought, love and prayers, and whom she will await in glory. God bless the sorrowing ones.

RIGGAN—Died in St. Matthew's township, Wake county, Jan. 19th, 1893, Littleton Edwards Riggan, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He was a member of Samaria Baptist church—a quiet, humble christian, a devoted husband and loving father. During his last days, though he was delirious and did not recognize his wife, he called often on the name of Jesus. When he was very sick some time ago and perfectly conscious, he said he expected to die, but was not afraid. He leaves a loving wife, two affectionate daughters and many friends, who hope to meet him again after awhile. Good-bye, dear husband, till then.

WIFE.

TIMBERLAKE—Died at the residence of Mr. George H. Cooper, in Louisburg, Franklin county, Jan. 4th, 1893, Frank J. Timberlake.

He was only sick a few short weeks. He said he was perfectly willing to depart from this life, and no fear came to him at the thought of dying. He was a member of the Baptist church, and had been for a number of years. His motto was, "Do all the good you can while the days are going by," and surely he followed his motto in every way.

He was the very soul of kindness, and often rendered a poor soul happiness by his kind words and deeds. He was indeed a faithful son, a kind and loving brother. He was loved and honored by all who knew him. Those who knew him best loved him best.

He leaves many loved ones and friends to mourn his loss. May God help them to follow in the footsteps of the dear one resting under the shade.

"Sleep in peace, dear one, within thy grave,
Low beneath death's tranquil wave,
Cares no longer pain thy breast,
In thy deep and quiet grave.

Storms no longer round thee roll,
Sins no longer vex thy soul,
Parting words are heard no more,
Every trial now is o'er.

Who, ah, who, would call thee back
To this dark and dreary track?
Who would bid thee live again,
Slave to sorrow and to pain?"

SIMPSON'S 20 DAY

Early Cantaloupe

The Most Delicious and the Earliest of any Melon ever Introduced.

I have been in the trucking business for fifteen years, and I have produced a cantaloupe that is the superior of any in delicacy of flavor and in earliness for the market; and I propose to offer my limited supply of seed to the public at reasonable figures. If the seed of this strain of nutmeg melon were in the hands of some of our seedsmen they would not be sold for less than $5 per pound. Some of the finest strains of melons now offered by our seedsmen at fancy prices—for instance, Johnson's and Stokes Dixie Watermelon—first originated in North Carolina. See the recommendations of two citizens of Greensboro, N. C., (and one hundred could be furnished as readily) and find out what those say who have seen and eaten my new cantaloupe:—

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 25, 1893.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe which you put upon our market last year (1892) was decidedly the most delicious flavored and the earliest I ever ate. I bought largely of you, and I recommend them in the highest terms.

DR. J. G. BRODNAX.

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 26, 1893.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON, Greensboro, N. C.:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe came upon the market the earliest of all, and I was surprised at the earliness of it. I am an old cantaloupe raiser, and I must have some of your seed for this coming season. Yours is a superior melon in every respect, and the very thing for early truckers.

The Home Circle.

In the Portrait Gallery.

Grandfather looks from the paneled wall
At grandmother hanging across the hall,
In the ripened glow of her stately grace;
And a frown comes over his shadowed face
As he says: "The world has grown askew,
My dear, since we were young—we two.

"Nothing that was is the same to-day;
Old-time fancies are cast away;
All our scruples are laughed to scorn;
All our customs are quite outworn;
Each is seeking for something new—
We were content with the old—we two."

Into the shade of the grim old room,
Steal two forms through the twilight's gloom.
Grandfather's eyes are sharp to see,
And a deep voice utters tenderly:
"For aye will I love, and love but you,
And we'll follow love to the end—we two."

Grandfather's face has lost its frown,
And his eyes grown softer gaze gently down
On the pair who naught of his watching know,
And grandmother smiles and whispers low:
"One thing goes on as it used to do
In the days when we were young—we two."

Mr. Martin's Opportunity.

AND HOW HE IMPROVED IT.

"I have been thinking, mother," said farmer Martin to his wife, "that I will be obliged to give up the paper. Things haven't gone well with us, you know, and we shall have to begin retrenching somewhere right at the beginning of the new year."

"You mean the county paper," replied his wife, with a note of inquiry in her voice.

Her husband answered hesitatingly: "No; we could not do without the Times. We always want to hear the home news, of course, and with our produce and marketing to dispose of every week, we must keep posted on the ever changing market. It was the church paper that I was thinking of stopping. We will miss it, of course, but necessity knows no law."

"Can't we manage some way to keep this lifelong friend, father?" asked Mrs. Martin with real concern in her voice. "I can not recollect when it was not a regular visitor, first, in my father's house, and next, for nearly a score of years, in our own. If retrenchment is necessary, better let it begin somewhere else, where it will not be felt so much."

"I do not see where the retrenchment would be less missed, Abby," argued Mr. Martin. "We must have sugar and coffee and tea, even if we do raise our own bread and meat, and use all the economy possible; clothes will wear out, and shoes must be replaced, as the children cannot go barefooted."

"That is quite true; still, I think for all the church paper costs, we might make an effort to deny ourselves so as to continue it," urged Mrs. Martin. "A few cents here and a few cents there would soon amount to two dollars, all it costs, though I am sure we get ten times that amount out of it in solid reading."

"I am not complaining about the makeup of the paper, Abby. It is well enough, so far as I can see, although I sometimes think that if religious papers were not so plentiful, there would be more time for Bible study."

"Instead of hindering Bible study, I find a great assistance in the paper," insisted the farmer's little wife. "And I am quite sure the children will say the same. They are all fond of reading, and in putting such pure literature as is found in our church paper into their hands, we are cultivating their tastes in the right direction. If we do not choose their reading matter for them, we may rest assured that they will select for themselves, and of a kind that we do not approve, very probably, into the bargain."

"Well, well; I suppose that all you say is true, wife," admitted the husband; "still, I can not see my way clear to take on any expenses this year that can be set aside. Perhaps after awhile, if things brighten up a bit, I may change my decision, but just at present we must try to get along without the paper. I can not spare two dollars to pay for it, and you know it has always been a principle with me not to go in debt, and, at my years, I do not intend to change."

Mrs. Martin knew from his voice that he did not intend to be persuaded to change his opinion, even if there were no principle at stake, and so she wisely concluded to bide her time, though, plucky little woman that she was, she meant not to give up the church paper.

"Where is the paper?" asked Fred, the oldest son, the first Sunday after the paper had been stopped. Mrs. Martin heard the question, but read on in silence, leaving the father to make what explanation he could. After searching through the wallpocket in vain, the boy repeated the question, this time addressing his father, and adding that he wanted to study his Sunday-school lesson.

"Haven't you a quarterly?" asked his father evasively, not looking up from his book.

"Yes; but the notes are so brief that they don't throw much light on the subject. At least the explanations in the paper are so much fuller that I am not satisfied till I study it over carefully."

"Well, you will have to get along without it to-day, Fred, for it did not come," said the father, not explaining why.

"Didn't come!" exclaimed Fred. "Why, I never knew it to miss before; it was always as regular as the clock; but I suppose I will have to do without it," and with a look of disappointment he took his Bible to look up the home readings.

Half an hour later, little Dot came in with a request from grandma, who was one of [illegible] that if no one was using the paper, she would like to have it, to [illegible]

[illegible] answering, Fred said, "Tell [illegible] didn't come. And it is too bad, [illegible] account particularly, for she [illegible] and she will miss the sermon sadly," he added, thinking of the patient invalid upstairs.

Mr. Martin winced and turned red, and though he went on with his reading, he felt very uncomfortable at having deprived his old mother of her enjoyment.

Dot was disappointed too, for grandma had promised to read her the children's stories, which were always "so beautiful."

"I was hurrying to get through with my work, to read the new chapter in the serial," pouted Lotie. "It was at its most interesting point, and here I will have to wait till to-morrow to find out whether Ben Holt won the scholarship."

With a sigh of regret as she noticed the cloud that settled on Lottie's fair face, her mother thought—"She will have to wait longer than till to-morrow. I am so sorry on her account, for she is so susceptible to good influences as well as bad, and the beautiful life of the young girl in the serial she was reading with such deep interest had already made an impression on her plastic nature"—an impression which, as she went on reading, the mother hoped would deepen till it became permanent.

"I have been hunting for the paper for the last half hour," said Tom, after the family had returned from church. "I have to lead prayer meeting to-night, and want to look over the Young People's columns. I wonder where it can be."

"That paper again!" said the father to himself; "I had no idea it was in such demand." Then he said aloud, "There was no paper last week, or, at least, we did not get one," and then, as if half ashamed of his evasion, he added, "The truth is, Tom, the times are so hard that I have had to stop the paper."

"Stop the paper!" chorussed half a dozen voices in astonishment; and Tom said, "Why, father, we can not possibly do without it. Every one of us had a department, and our comparing of notes on what we have read furnished amusement for a whole evening. I am sure I speak for all when I say we would rather do without all kinds of presents on Christmas than do without our paper."

"But the Christmas gifts must be sacrificed too, this year," said his father. "You all know that this has been an unfortunate year, and we will have to retrench in many places to make ends meet and to avoid debt."

"I am certain I shall miss it, if only for its missionary intelligence," Mary said thoughtfully. "Since Mrs. Owens appointed me leader of the children's circle, I have learned to depend greatly on its suggestions for conducting the meetings. They are always so bright and fresh, and I have so few good ideas of my own."

"That idea of sticking to the paper is a fairly good one," said Tom. "At any rate, you have plenty of company, and if the question of paper or no paper were put to vote, the affirmative would gain the day."

Just at this juncture the door opened and a little girl, the daughter of a poor neighbor, came in to inquire if her mother could have the paper while the family were attending evening service.

"We did not get the paper last week, Mattie, but I will find something else for your mother to read while alone," said Mrs. Martin, as she went to the bookcase.

"I wish I had taken an inventory of the good qualities of that paper before I stopped it," thought Mr. Martin, as he watched the child go away with a book. "I actually don't believe that it was ever so popular before. Every body wants it just because it can't be had, and I must confess that I miss it myself more than I thought I should. I feel so lost without the weekly church news, and then I do not know the prayer meeting topic. I am to make remarks upon it the next night too."

That night at family prayers he read for the evening lesson the sixth chapter of Galations, and though he had often read it before, there was one verse that came to him like a revelation. It was this: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."

"As we have therefore opportunity" were the words which emphasized themselves with peculiar force in his mind. The incidents of that day had convinced him that he had a great opportunity of doing good to others, outside of his own family as well as at home, by simply renewing his subscription to the church paper. He had never fully understood its worth before, but, his eyes being opened, he could not fail to see the influence for good which it had upon his growing family. Money was scarce, to be sure, but he now agreed with his wife that retrenchment must begin somewhere else. They could not afford to give up the religious paper any better, not half so well, as the county paper, on which they depended for the home news, as well as for the report of the fluctuating market, which regulated the prices of what they had to sell. He had discovered that it was necessary to keep abreast of the religious world, as well as of current events, and wisely decided that before another Sabbath should return the dear old paper should be reinstated in its rightful place, no matter what it cost. "I will give up my tobacco, and by so doing accomplish a double purpose," he said, wondering why he had not thought of retrenching in that way before. Next morning he threw the plug that was in his pocket into the open grate, and, without mentioning his plan even to his wife, the money for another year's subscription was forwarded for the paper, with the request that it be sent immediately, so as to reach its destination before the next Sunday. He was not disappointed, although he had a trip to the post-office after the Saturday night train came in, but the eagerness with which the papers were received the following morning rewarded him fully for his trouble, and it will be a very dark day indeed when he again discontinues his religious paper.—*Belle V. A Sharp Rebuke.

On a Fort Wayne train approaching Chicago there was a short statured, straight-haired, copper colored Indian, going back to the reservation after a trip to the Indian school at Carlyle, Pa. He wore a nice suit of clothes, which fitted him badly, and a paper collar without any necktie. He attended strictly to his own business, and was unmolested until a fellow came into the smoking car from the sleeper.

"An Indian, I guess," said the young man, as he lighted a cigarette. And then approaching the son of the plains, he attracted general attention by shouting, with strange gestures:

"Ugh, heap big Injun! Omaha! Sioux! Pawnee! See Great Father! Have drink firewater! Warm Injun's blood!"

The copper-colored "savage" gazed at the young man a moment with an ill-concealed expression on his face, and then he said, with good pronunciation:

"You must have been reading dime novels, sir. I am going back to my people in Montana, after spending three years in the east at school. I advise you to do the same thing. No; I do not drink whisky. Where I live, gentlemen do not carry whisky flasks in their pockets."

Amid a general laugh a much crestfallen young man retired to the sleeping coach.—Exchange.

Cooking an Egg.

"Isn't it strange," said a short, foreign looking man the other day to some companions, while lunching together at one of the restaurants, "that not one cook in fifty, nor housekeeper either, knows how to boil an egg? And yet most people think they know this simple matter. They will tell you to drop it into boiling water and let it remain three minutes, and be sure the water is boiling.

"Here is where the mistake is made. An egg so prepared is indigestible, and hardly fit for a well person, let alone one who is sick, to eat. The moment it is plunged into boiling water the white hardens and toughens. To boil an egg properly put it in a vessel, cover with cold water, place over the fire, and the second the water begins to boil, your egg is done. The white is as delicate as a jelly and as easily digested and nutritious, as it should be. Try it."

The information is worthy of consideration, since the speaker has occupied the place of chef at several of the largest hotels in the country.—Exchange.

Rev. W. E. Penn, author of the popular song-book, "Harvest Bells," makes the following statement:

I am an evangelist (Baptist) well known in the Southern and Western States. I was rapidly getting deaf from catarrh. When in Covington, Ky., five years ago, holding meetings in the First Baptist church, I happened to learn of Dr. J. H. Moore's treatment of catarrh while at the house of a friend. I saw in a moment it was the very thing I needed, and at once got it, and in three months my hearing was perfectly restored. Since that time I have recommended this treatment wherever I have been, and know of several bad cases of lung trouble that were cured by its use.

Several years ago I met a minister on the train who had been compelled to give up his charge on account of lung trouble. I advised him to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment; he did so, and in three months was back at his work, fully restored. All the leading physicians here endorse this treatment; and with great pleasure I give this statement to the public, hoping it will be the means of bringing similar relief to many others.

Christ in Metaphor—No. 1.

BY HIGHT C. MOORE.

THE TESTATOR.

"For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator." Heb. 9: 16.

The text is the simple recognition of a point in civil law. No will is valid while the testator lives. It goes into force only at his death.

The Apostle argues the precedence of christianity over Judaism. The former covenant has been eclipsed by one far superior The ceremonies of the old dispensation were typical of the new. Past blessings were the prophecy of future glories. The twilight of the centuries now merges into noonday brilliancy. The true Messiah comes, the divine testator. He draws his last will and testament, and therein bequeathes priceless legacies to the children of men.

Here, then, we have a striking metaphor. It presents the dying Saviour making his final covenant with men and cementing it with his blood. It unfolds the true mission of Jesus to the world. It reveals him placing the treasures of heaven at man's disposal. In bold outline it sketches the whole plan of redemption. Clearly we see the heavenly testator (1) making his will, (2) naming his legacies, (3) describing his heirs, and (4) appointing his executors. Let us consider him more particularly in each of these relations.

I. HIS WILL.

1. It is his last will. A living testator may make a hundred testaments, but after his death only the last is binding. Christ knew his hour was coming. He made his will in view of his death. The covenant of the past may now be declared null and void: those of the future are counterfeits of the basest type. This alone is valid and true because it is the last will of the testator. It is, hence, unalterable. Curses are pronounced on those who dare to change it. And it is enduring. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away."

2. It is signed and sealed. A will with no seal or signature is a dead letter. It has no value. It is totally useless. These are essential to its validity. The covenant of redemption is not weak at this point. The hand that was pierced on the cross firmly and willingly signed this document. Then Christ sealed it with his own blood and made it secure.

3. It is witnessed. Angels came down to sing "on earth peace, good will toward men." A halo of glory encompassed the Messiah as the Father declared, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." Jesus said to the heirs, "Ye are my witnesses," and they went forth amid fiery trial and fierce persecution to attest his mission to earth. Conscience, guided by the Spirit, bears unmistakable testimony. Even the critical world is often brought to recognize the true claim of Christ and the validity of his will.

4. It is published. The commission was given, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature." The heralds of the cross have gone forth. The conditions of this covenant have been rehearsed in huts and hovels, in courts and kingdoms. The contents of this will have been widely scattered. Its benefits have been extensively realized. And past achievement is the earnest of future success. It is destined to go into every tongue, to invade every nation under heaven, to belt the entire globe. "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

II. HIS LEGACIES.

The divine testator has wealth in exhaustless abundance. He owns the fat of the land and the fruit of the sea. The rich mine, the fertile plain, and the stately forest are his possessions. "The cattle on a thousand hills are his." He is King of kings. All thrones, sceptres, and coronets are subject to him. He is the embodiment of power and might and strength. He can speak and worlds come into existence. All nature hearkens to his voice. His commands are heeded throughout the universe. He is "Lord of all."

Out of his treasury the wants of man are supplied. He said, "All things are yours." But he does not always bestow on his heirs material wealth. There is something of greater value than silver and gold. There is property more secure than houses and lands. This he freely bequeathes to the race.

1. He gave himself. It is said that the Queen of Cambra consulted the gods as to how the drought cursing her domain might be checked. The reply came, "It will be stayed, if the Queen will give herself a sacrifice for her people." She consented and was buried alive. Out of the hill on which she was buried gushed a stream of pure water, and the land was blessed and the people were saved. Thus Christ gave "his life a ransom for many." The crystal stream has gone forth and now the barren waste may blossom as the rose. Upon his sacrifice hinges our salvation. His blood appeased the wrath of God and effected our redemption.

He also left us an "example that we should follow his steps." A clean record is a priceless heritage. A pure life is a guiding star. A noble example is the loftiest inspiration. The path of Jesus will lead the weary pilgrim to the mansions above. The career of Christ as a compass will guide the voyager safely into the harbor of rest. The courage of the Captain of our salvation inspires with hope his flagging lines and urges them on to victory. A stainless life is before us complete in suffering, submission, and sacrifice. What greater bequest has ever been made?

2. In giving himself, he also gave happiness. There is often misery in a palace and bliss in a dungeon. There have been times when kings were willing to barter thrones for the unmixed delights of ordinary life. Jesus brings joy. The Prince of Peace declares, "My peace I give unto you." Joy and peace are named as fruits of the Spirit. Paul in the midst of trial wrote "Rejoice evermore," and at the hour of midnight in the Philippian jail he sang praises to God. The martyr can be happy though his flesh crackle in the flames. The clouds of gloom may hover low, but the child of God delights in the clear rays of the Sun of Righteousness. The floods of trouble may roll high and rage fearfully, but the christian rejoices in security with his feet planted on the Rock of Eternal Ages. Persecution may come with cyclonic force, but in blissful safety the divine heir has refuge in "the covert from the tempest." The saint can rejoice in "poverty's vale or abounding in wealth." He is content in the sunshine of prosperity and in the shadows of adversity. His sources of joy are abundant as he treads the path of duty. And when life's toil is over, he sinks peacefully into the embrace of death. Happy is the lot of the christian who receives on earth this joy supreme.

3. Another legacy is heaven. Each heir is entitled to a home in the skies. "I go to prepare a place for you." The mansions above are capacious and costly. The streets of the city are paved with gold, its walls are of jasper, and its gates of pearl. The river of life proceeds from the throne of God. There is the tree of life with its fruit and "leaves for the healing of the nations." Heaven is enduring. It is "an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." No foul thief is there entertained. No fraudulent speculator finds habitation within its walls. None but true heirs are admitted to the "building of God eternal in the heavens." They are given harps of praise, crowns of victory, and mansions of everlasting bliss. They spend eternity surrounded by glories indescribable and joys beyond conception. And all through the endless ages they cluster around the great Testator in devout and ceaseless thanksgiving for the bequests of himself, happiness, and heaven so generously given to rebellious man.

III. HIS HEIRS.

A prince, hunting in the forests of Germany years ago, found a poor blind orphan boy, shivering, hungry, and homeless. His heart throbbed with tenderest sympathy. He carried the boy at once to his court and supplied him with every possible comfort. He secured the highest medical skill, and soon the youth recovered his vision. Then he adopted the boy as his own son and gave him all his property. Years passed, and the ragged waif grew to be a mighty prince. Thus man was wandering in the wilderness of earth without spiritual sight, home, wealth, or friends. Then Jesus with infinite compassion came "to seek and to save the lost." In melting tenderness he spake to groping millions, saying, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Strangers receive a hearty welcome. They are adopted into the divine family and become "heirs," entitled to the treasures of the kingdom of heaven.

But not all are adopted. Why? There are conditions to be met and only those who comply enter the palace of the King. The heirs are possessed of a peculiar nature and history.

1. They are characterized by heart crushing penitence. This was enjoined by patriarch and prophet. "Repent ye" was the life-long theme of Christ and his forerunner. The apostles in flood and flame tenaciously held forth the same doctrine. Martyrs went to the rack and the stake in its advocacy. They grasped the great truth that penitence precedes adoption.

There is a story that God offered a man entrance into heaven for the most precious thing on earth. The man then secured the purest gold and flew to the gates of pearl, but they were bolted against him. He went again, gathered the finest jewelry and most precious stones, and bore them up, but the gates were still barred. A third time he went forth on his search. Walking on the beach, he saw a little child lying under the shade of the trees asleep. A robber came up and bending over the child thought of its innocence in contrast with his own wicked and reckless life. Then he drew a deep sigh of regret for sin and a tear dropped from his eye. The searcher caught it and again flew to the celestial gates. He found them wide open and a chorus of heavenly voices rang out, "Yes, you have brought us the most precious thing in all the world—the tear of penitence." It is shed by the children of God. It moves the heart of Jehovah. It is a passport into the realms of bliss.

2. Repentance goes hand in hand with faith. They are inseparably linked together. "Repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Every truly penitent soul is a believing soul. Like repentance, faith is an element in the character of the heavenly heir.

Abraham "believed God and it was counted unto him for righteousness." David, the Psalmist, sweetly sang, "In thee, O God, do I put my trust." Job said in accents of strongest faith, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and "though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Isaiah was commanded to say to wayward Israel, "He that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land." Paul declares, "The just shall live by faith," and "without faith it is impossible to please God."

Then arching over the gates of the celestial city, these words glow in full view of men, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." In Bunyan's allegory, Ignorance knocked for admittance without the roll of faith in his bosom. As an intruder he was borne away and lodged in the cavern of woe. Only those who have faith can enter and be crowned heirs of eternal joy.

3. True penitence and living faith are productive of energy. There is no penitence without exertion and "faith without works is dead." Paul of Tarsus, penitent and believing, cries out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The command was given and obeyed, and the chief of sinners became the chief of the apostles in conflict, suffering, success. How earnestly he toiled! How nobly he suffered! How fiercely he fought in Immanuel's army! And when he had expended all the energies of his being in the Master's cause he could say, "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith; there is laid up for me a crown."

And so with every heir of God. They are never to cherish a spirit of idleness and indifference. There is labor to perform: "Go work to day in my vineyard." There is fighting to be done: "Fight the good fight of faith." There is a race course to pursue: "So run that ye may obtain." In a world of ceaseless activity, the christian must not be inactive. With fiery energy he must press on from achievement to achievement.

IV. HIS EXECUTORS.

The will has been made. The legacies have been named. The heirs have been described. The Testator has expired on the tree. Before his death Christ in a prayer to the Father said, "All mine are thine," and he promised the heirs a Comforter, declaring "He will guide you into all truth." The executors, then, are the Father and the Holy Spirit. Notice,

1. They are qualified for the position. They have infinite knowledge and skill. They thoroughly understand all the wishes of the Testator. All the circumstances of the legatees are known to them. They will keep all the treasures in absolute safety. "No man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."

2. They are faithful. They are interested in the heirs. They will carry out the will in every particular. No loss shall be sustained. The envious may present their groundless claims, but divine wealth goes only to the rightful heirs. A jealous Father guards the interests of his children with unswerving fidelity.

Christ stands before us, the divine Testator. Are you one of his heirs? "Rejoice and be exceeding glad." Toil earnestly in his vineyard. Fight valiantly in his army. Die, if need be, in the advocacy of his cause.

Are you without a title to the privileges of the kingdom of heaven? Then, I invite you in his name to become a member of his family and an heir of his wealth. Delay no longer. Your eternal interests are at stake. He will receive you. No one has ever been turned away. "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

Preparation to Meet the Lord.

BY REV. J. R. JONES.

Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh—Matt 23: 44.

Here we have an exhortation, and the reason why it should be heeded. The exhortation is: "Be ye also ready." The reason why it should be heeded: "For in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

If you or I were looking for a very distinguished guest, and did not know at what hour he would come, we would spare no pains to keep everything in readiness for his coming. The Lord is coming. No doctrine of the Bible is more clearly taught. He is coming finally to judge the world, to gather his people together and receive them up into glory, and to cast the wicked into everlasting perdition But, practically to us, his coming will be at our death. If we shall be found ready, there will be no event in our lives up to that time fraught with such happiness as his coming will be to us. On the other hand, if we are not ready, especially so far as faith and repentance are concerned, there can be no event in our lives up to that time that will compare to the dread and terror that will lay hold upon us. Death to the impenitent is the beginning of that death "whose pangs outlast the fleeting years." To them it is the transition point from their state here to one of indescribable woe and misery. Let us notice

1. What we must do to be ready.

There are four things to be done; and if death comes and finds us with any one of these undone, we shall not be fully ready for it. First of all we must repent of our sins, and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as our Saviour. Whatever else we may do, without repentance and faith the Lord will not accept us. "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." "But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." On the day of Pentecost when the convicted people cried, "What shall we do?" Peter said to them, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

From these and other like passages we see that the first thing to be done in order to be ready for the coming of the Lord is to repent and believe.

Repentance is heartfelt sorrow on account of sin, and turning away from it in mind and heart, being followed by conversion, that is, change in the life or conduct. The things Paul loved as an impenitent sinner against Jesus, he hated after repentance; and the zeal with which he served the Lord Jesus whom he persecuted before his repentance, was conversion. To "quit your meanness and do good" is not repentance, but conversion, and may be the fruit of genuine, evangelical repentance, and it may not be. Unless it is such, there is no readiness in it for the coming of the Lord. Faith is belief in the truthfulness of God's word, and trust in the Saviour presented to us in that word. It commits the soul to the keeping of the love and power of Jesus, feeling that he will do for us all that he has promised. Have you repented, and are you trusting Jesus? If so, in the most important particular, you are ready. But this, while the most important, is only the beginning of the christian life, and the work of preparation for the coming of the Lord. In all respects the christian life must be worthy of emulation, and the more worthy it is the more ready will the christian be to meet the Lord. This leads me to say

2. That to be ready we must constantly strive after holiness of life, and be ever active in christian work.

Peter exhorts us "to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord;" and that means to increase in piety-spirituality, and in favor with God, to let the image of the Saviour be more and more clearly seen in us, and to be constantly learning more and more of him. Paul exhorts us to 'grow up into Christ in all things.' The newly regenerated are regarded in the Scriptures as "babes in Christ." They ought to grow. They need to grow, and must be found growing when the Lord comes if they would be ready to meet him. This growth is kept up by using the means of grace we have, such as prayer, church privileges, the Bible, and religious conversation. To neglect these means to cease to grow, and to become cold and worldly minded. And worldly mindedness is the dry rot that is eating out the life of and destroying the power of many christians and churches. The more nearly we are like Christ when he comes the more we shall enjoy his coming. Again, we must be found active in christian work. I think we would feel sadly unready if the Lord were to come and find us doing nothing for him, and that we had done nothing, or but very little. A young man lay dying. Suddenly a look of sadness crossed his face. To the query of a friend he exclaimed, "No, I am not afraid; Jesus saves me now. But oh, must I go and empty handed?" Ah, brother, are you going to meet Jesus empty handed? Will you have no sheaves to lay at his feet? An aged servant of the Lord, and one of the best men I ever knew, said in conversation with a friend just a day or two before he died, "If I knew the judgment would come this evening I would not change my course." How many of us can say that? The Lord says to you and to me, "Occupy till I come." Be busy in the use of the powers, privileges and opportunities that he has given us. To be active in the protracted meeting and on Sunday, and idle the balance of the time, will not do. The Lord may not come to us in the protracted meeting, nor on Sunday. Religion is an every-day, an all-the-time, business. If we wish to be ready, let us keep busy at work for the Lord. We notice

3. That to be ready we must be square with the world.

And that means to have all accounts with those with whom we have had dealings settled, or provision made for their settlement. There is a deplorable indifference on the part of many, and even of some church members, about paying debts, and most especially when the debts have become old. They seem to forget that old claims are as binding as new ones, and are blind to the force of the Bible injunction, "Owe no man anything, but to love him," &c., and go right along as if there were no danger of bringing their character under suspicion by such indifference, and forfeiting the confidence of their fellowmen. No one with debts upon him unprovided for is fully ready to meet death. If adverse circumstances, over which he has no control, render it impossible for him to pay them, or to have provision made for their payment, he can die with a clear conscience, but he will not have a quiet, undisturbed frame of mind; for while he may have the satisfaction of knowing that he has done his best, there will be the thought, and at that time a most unpleasant thought it will be to him, that somebody will lose by him. Another thought there will be to trouble him, and that is, to have to go down to the grave with his character under suspicion. While in his case the suspicion would be without foundation and unjust, yet it would exist. It arises in this way. If a person can, and will not pay his debts, he is dishonest. We all know that. Now, whether the man's failure to pay his debts be the result of extravagant living, bad management, neglect, misfortune, or sheer dishonesty, there will be some who will suspect his character. This thought, to any one who wishes to leave behind him a reputation for strict integrity, a name that would be a blessing to his family and an inspiration to uprightness of life, would be as bitterness in the soul. And if this is true of one who, on account of misfortune, fails to pay his debts, what do you think, my brother, will be your experience in your last days if your failure is on account of extravagant living, or mere indifference? You will be sadly unready. The thing for us to do, then, is to try to keep out of debt, and when it becomes necessary, as it sometimes does, to go in debt, to use every possible effort, exercising the most rigid economy, and even self-denial, to get out as quickly as possible. Taking great risks in speculations, in the hope of realizing large profits, is not wise, when disappointment would result in direct loss to others. Let us all endeavor to so live that when we come to die there will be no claims against us that cannot be satisfied.

4. Another thing we must do to be ready is to get our business matters in such shape that their settlement will not bring trouble and discord into our families.

"Set your house in order, for thou shalt surely die." Many family estrangements have been caused by the settlement of estates left in a confused condition. I have no doubt but that many have been rendered uncomfortable in their last hours by the thought that the division of their property would most likely cause serious trouble in their families. Every one knows what disposition he wants made of his property after he is dead; and he owes it to himself and to his family to have such disposition put in writing, and in terms so plain as to preclude the possibility of misconstruction. This we must do to be fully ready to meet the Lord in death.

5. The reason the Saviour gives why we should be ready at all times is, that we do not know when he is coming.

"Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

We do not know what night the thief will come, and therefore we look up our goods every night. While the rich man was rejoicing over his bountiful harvest, and thinking of the royal good time he was going to have for many years, the Lord said to him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." At the very moment when Belshazzar was reveling and drinking himself drunk at the great feast he had given, Cyrus, at the head of a great army, was marching into the city, and almost before Belshazzar knew it, the city was taken, and he in the hands of his conqueror. Ah, friends, while making your plans for pleasure or wealth, do not forget the all important matter of being ready for death; for it may be nearer than you think. A young lady went to her room one night much concerned about her soul's condition. She sat down at her table and wrote: "One year from to-night I will try to become a christian." And then, as it appears, she thought that was too long to put it off, and wrote under the first lines: "Six months from to-night I will try to become a christian." But it seems that she was afraid to wait that long, and wrote again: "One month from to-night I will try to become a christian." So short a time as a month seemed to satisfy her, and she retired. The next morning she did not come down to breakfast. A servant was sent to her room to see what was the matter, and found her cold in death. Death was so near, and yet she thought it was surely a month off. The only way to be sure of being ready to meet the Lord is to be ready all the time. Somewhere before us is death. We know not how far off it is. Beyond it is long, long eternity; but how we shall spend it depends on whether or not we are ready when death [illegible]. How important, then, to be ready! Are you ready, my friend, are you ready? Be ready without delay. May the Lord help you.

Pray for the guidance of the [illegible]

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1893.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

BY WAY OF REPLY.

We are far from claiming to be infallible. We do not, by any means, claim to speak ex cathedra on any of the questions of the day. We are pleased to notice that our brethren so generally and heartily endorse the editorials of the RECORDER. Such hearty endorsement is always encouraging to the editor, and increases his desire to serve his patrons faithfully. We also recognize the right of courteous dissent from the views of the editor. Some allusions have recently been made to one or two editorials appearing in this paper which deserve some attention.

In the last RECORDER we published a criticism on one argument we used under the head of "Incidental Bible proof that only men are called to preach the gospel." Said criticism was over the signature of Rev. R. L. Patton.

A recent RECORDER also contained a communication on "The Missionary Call," in which kindly allusion was made to, but no criticism was passed on, an editorial in this paper under that caption, which for certain reasons we wish to notice.

First, then, as to the criticism of Rev. R. L. Patton in regard to our comment on Gal. 1: 9. He claims, after doing us the honor of complimenting the editorial, that to base an argument against women preaching in part on Gal. 1: 9, would make that part of it at least a lame argument. Let it be borne in mind that we contend that the strongest arguments against the sisters attempting to preach are the plain express prohibitions of God's word. The proof texts are so well known that we will not repeat them here. In the paper criticised, however, we were calling attention to a kind of Bible proof against women preaching, which is often overlooked, and which may be claimed as the "incidental proof," or circumstantial evidence against the practice. These we classed under six heads, one (and the weakest) of which the brother selects as the point of attack. Let us call the brother's attention to the fact that it is not fair to select the weakest point of a series of arguments, and because it is lame, (as he supposes), and open to attack, to expend his ammunition on that, and by calling special attention to that point at the opening and close of his article to produce the impression that the whole argument is lame. Why did not the brother reply to the second, fifth and sixth points made? In the sixth argument attention is called to Paul's summary of the qualifications that a bishop (Greek episkopos and masculine,) should possess. Will our brother tell us why Paul so persistently sticks to the masculine gender in 1 Tim. 3: 1, 2, ff.? We are fully aware of the fact that it will not do to base an argument as to sex on such a passage as Gal. 1: 9, or others like it, in God's word. This we distinctly stated in our article. Such passages, however, strengthen the argument against the theory of women preaching, when placed by the side of others that refer to preachers by the use of masculine terms. Will our brother say that presbuteros, or episcopos, is feminine? Not only does the general teaching of Scripture justify the use we made of Gal. 1: 9; but even that passage stands in very close relationship to another which shows that Paul persistently stuck to the "masculine gender" when speaking of preachers of the gospel. Let our brother notice the verse that precedes the ninth, and he will find these words, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel," &c. Can the brother claim that the word we, or angel, in the above passage either in English or Greek is feminine.

Hence, we not only reaffirm all we have written, but, if need be, are prepared to furnish further and abundant proof of the statement "that wherever the New Testament writers had occasion to mention or refer to (official) preachers of the gospel the reference is always by the use of nouns or adjectives in the masculine gender. If it be lawful for women to preach, then a man's wife might become his own pastor. In that case how would our brother reconcile Heb. 13: 17 with Eph. 5: 23 and Col. 3: 18?

Now a few words in reference to the interesting article of Rev. John E. White, published in the RECORDER of February 1st, under the heading before mentioned, viz: "The Missionary Call." Our editorial on [illegible] was written because we have [illegible] doubt about just what is [illegible] what is claimed as a distinct call [illegible] mission work. Our object was [illegible] mention, especially on the part of those who have received such calls, and by those who had studied the subject at home.

Bro. White seems to heartily endorse the editorial. So, in the main, we agree; but we are inclined to think that he misunderstands us to some extent, and hence, would expect us to father some ideas he advances in regard to a call to the ministry, which we are not prepared to accept just as he states them. Of course, as we have often admitted, that in one sense of the word, all truly regenerated persons are to preach the gospel. Telling sinners the glad news of salvation is preaching the gospel. Any converted person can, and ought, to do that. But the formal, more official work of preaching, for which Christ set apart his immediate followers, and which he has ever since been calling men to do, is preaching in a higher and more important sense than simple witnessing for Christ. That kind of work was so important in Christ's time that he called and specially trained men to do it. It is just as important now; and hence he calls men to do that work now by exerting upon them a spiritual influence not exerted upon those not thus called, though they may be converted. Keeping in mind that we use the expression "called to preach," in the sense just described, we are hardly able to agree with our brother in the following words, "The call to preach dates from the hour of conversion. Our entrance into what is called the active ministry, (italics ours), is simply the process of sanctification developed up to that point in us at which we feel conscience bound to give all of our efforts to the one effort of saving men. And it is firmly believed that if the process of growing in grace were uninterrupted and persisted in, every christian would reach that point of self consecration. When he has reached that point, how he shall teach or preach Christ is determined entirely by his own judgment of his fitness and talent."

It is true our brother follows the above sentence by the statement, "The Spirit guides him to that decision; but it (he) does not force or push him to it."

We are compelled to differ somewhat from the brother in confounding the call from death unto life with the call to do the official work of preaching. Real preaching, public ministration of the word, is important, quite important, work. It is the great means God has appointed to save a lost world. "Magnify the word." Paul was jealous of his call to preach, and of his apostleship. He, and all true preachers, are embassadors for Christ. The office of preacher is responsible. God has guarded the entrance to this work by specifying certain qualifications one should have before he is prepared to enter it. And we honestly believe that he further guards it by making deep, abiding, spiritual impressions only upon those whom he would have enter it. This can be done without visions, dreams, or superstitious vagaries. We are not sure that we do full justice to the position assumed by our brother. He can speak for himself; our columns are open to him. We must affirm in conclusion our adherence to the staunch old Baptist view, that when one is called to preach (officially) that God will impress that fact on his mind, heart, and conscience in such a way as that he feels constrained to enter the work. And usually, when other means fail, God will so hedge him in by his providences as that he will feel "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel."

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

NOTES FROM HERE AND THERE.

I am very glad to see some sunshine, even if the ground-hog did see his shadow when he showed himself on the first day of the month. A nice bright day has much to do with the feelings of people. It does not require more than half the effort to get a new subscriber or to renew an old one when the sun shines brightly as it has for a few days past. The few bright days we have had might remind us of how promptly the Lord always pays us with good things for all the hard places he calls on us to pass over. After the snow, slush, and cold winds of winter, come the sunshine, the birds and the flowers. So, too, when he saddens our hearts with the loss of any earthly possession, his smiling face in so many ways shows his loving kindness that we soon forget the troubles which pressed so sorely upon us.

I have just reached Winston, and find myself alone in the study of Bro. H. A. Brown, and before he gets in I will write a line or so concerning his sanctum. It is a matter of surprise that I should have gotten in, for as a rule the door is always locked when he is out, and nobody is allowed to disturb anything on the inside. It looks a little like a newspaper office—papers are lying here and there all over the room. He certainly takes a lot of them. Many of them, however, have evidently not been unfolded since they came from the press. Above the writing desk hangs the picture of Dr. Wingate. How fitting that the picture of the man whose life and character has been so strikingly reflected in the life of his old pupil should remain in sight as a stimulant to higher and better attainments. I am not impressed with the great number of books I see, but those I see are nicely bound, well preserved, and are strictly first class.

Judge Ruffin is reported to have said that a one book man was always to be dreaded in a legal contest. Certainly a few books well studied are worth far more than a great amount of careless, aimless reading.

I find his broom, boot-jack and blacking brush, but I am warned he is coming, so I must wait for another opportunity.

I go out to remind the brethren in a more pointed manner of the object of my visit. Those who pay up to date I intend to put on my list of "honorable mention." Those who pay up, and also a year in advance, shall go on the list of "most honorable mention."

Sunday at 11 o'clock I heard Bro. Brown preach from the text, "Abide with us, for the day is far spent." I do not remember ever to have listened to a sweeter and more helpful sermon. Plain, simple, earnest, old fashioned gospel preaching seems to satisfy this brother.

Sunday night I was at Broad Street Church, and heard Bro. Broughton preach from the fifth commandment. While listening to the sermon I was impressed with the fact more than ever before that the Baptist cause in Winston had been specially provided for, not only in having two preachers, but that these men differed in their style of preaching and methods of work to an extent which would accommodate the preferences of all. Bro. Broughton's people are very fond of him as their pastor. They like his style of preaching, and enter into all his plans for the development of the church with a zeal and promptness that is truly wonderful. The church is now completed, and I have seen but few neater audience-rooms than they have. The walls are neatly papered, the floor and pulpit nicely carpeted, pastor's study and heater all complete. There are now one hundred and forty-seven active members, and less than a year ago there were only thirty-eight.

I was present at the meeting of the young people's working band. Miss Nannie Martin, a most excellent young lady, is president, and it was from this meeting I received my first impressions of the spirit of work which seems to pervade every feature of this work.

The pastors of these two churches seem to be "true yoke fellows," and the cause in Winston was never before so full of promise. Each of them testified to the interest which he felt in my work by going with me in the rain, hail and snow to see the brethren in the town.

The First church has secured the choice lot in Winston for the building of their new church. The lot, which is central and in every way desirable, cost $5,500. The building when complete will cost about $20,000. Over half of this sum has already been subscribed, and there will be no trouble in raising the balance when needed.

I spent a night with Bro. S. F. Conrad. He is full of plans and of work for the present year, and wouldn't be happy if he were not struggling to pay off a church debt.

REV. D. W. HERRING AT CLINTON, N. C.

On last Thursday night Bro. D. W. Herring gave a lecture which consisted mainly of a description of his trip across the continent and the voyage across the ocean to China, also his trip to West China, with only an incidental mention of the condition and customs of the people of that country. After this he referred briefly to his plan of work as now proposed by him and Brother Bostick, who is now in China.

He said he was here in the interest of China, the country about which he had just spoken; that as a denomination we were doing too little in the way of giving the gospel to these people. But that while he proposed prosecuting this work on a different line, he did not propose to antagonize or tear down any other forms of mission work; that his purpose was to increase the number of missionaries in the foreign field that the Board had not been able for want of means to support the number of missionaries necessary to do the work.

His plan was to give the churches an opportunity to do the work the board could not do for want of means. He wanted the same relation to exist among the missionaries and the churches as existed among the churches and pastors here. Here said he, if one church can not support a pastor, then it unites with other churches and thus it is enabled to have a pastor for a part of the time. Pastors here do not all receive the same amount of salary, neither is it necessary that all missionaries should receive the same amount of support in the foreign field. The man in Mexico might need more than the man laboring in China. In this way he said men would go to China on salaries small enough to enlist the sympathy and support of the country church. While some say this plan will not do, he thought it would; that if you would develop anybody, even a servant, you must first trust him; that twenty millions of these people were dying every year, and that we were responsible for them to the extent of our power to send them the gospel.

In concluding, he referred to the English mission, saying that numbers of young men had gone out from the best homes and educational institutions, and were working among these people, living in their homes, thus getting nearer to them than they otherwise could do.

I was glad of an opportunity to hear Bro. Herring for the purpose of putting his position clearly before the brethren of the denomination. He, however, scarcely touched that feature of his subject, and in what he said there was nothing that any one could object to. The church here is in the closest sympathy with our work as heretofore carried on, through the Foreign Mission Board, and they will continue to work on these lines.

BRO. HERRING AT MT. GILEAD CHURCH.

At eleven o'clock, Feb. 9th, Bro. Herring preached what might be termed a missionary sermon, opening the way for the exercises which followed in the afternoon.

After the intermission which followed his sermon, he gave practically the same lecture as is referred to above in the Baptist church at Clinton.

At the conclusion of this he stated he had some other things which he wished to say to the audience. He began by saying that Dr. Yates had for years begged for more men to do the mission work in China, and that after his death he had taken up the same cry; that there were plenty of men who wanted to respond, but the means of their support were not at hand. People here, he said, might think they felt interested in this great question of saving the heathen, but that no man could feel the full force of this question until he came to see them as they were; that after he went to West China some of the brethren on the field asked him to come home and place the matter before the Board; that he wrote to the Board asking to be allowed to come, and that the Board decided it was not best at that time for him to come, as there were already too many at home, and further, that the Board had not determined definitely upon a plan for work in West China; that while he realized that the Board knew more about many other things than he did, yet about this work he thought he knew more than did the Board, and thus believing, he came home to present the matter before them. He said there were some changes which ought to be made in our Foreign Mission work; that heretofore the policy had been to stay near the towns and cities on the coast where our national flag is respected; that that time had passed; we were to no longer look to flags for protection and safety, but to God, who will protect us wherever we may go.

Bro. Herring laid much stress upon the necessity of the missionaries identifying themselves with the natives of China; especially he insisted that they ought to adopt the same dress as worn by the Chinese; otherwise he said they would regard the missionary as some one who thought himself above them, and would spend his time looking at the dress of the missionary rather than listening to what was being said. His wife, he said was always welcomed in the homes of these people after she put on their style of dress. Before then it was not so. We must, said he, live on a level with the people to whom we preach if we wish to do them the greatest possible good. This native dress, he said, was worn by more than half the missionaries; that it was much warmer than our clothing. This was one desirable feature, as they had no fire in their houses, although it was as cold there as in this country; and, too, it very greatly reduced expenses, and he did not want to live in a style not in keeping with the condition and circumstances of the people from whom he drew his support; that it would cost but little if any more to dress in Chinese clothes than it would to pay the laundry bill of the foreign style of dress. He said his plan was to live in houses like the natives; that with slight changes and modifications these houses would answer every purpose; and that the Chinese were prejudiced against foreign-built houses for missionaries. Here he referred to two houses which were burned some time ago—one built by the Baptists, the other by the Methodists.

He said our plan is not to build houses nor support schools. The Lord had no where commanded us to do this sort of work. The first thing to do was to preach the gospel; then these other things may follow.

Bro. Herring insisted that there should be two distinctive systems of doing Foreign Mission work: one like that pursued by the Board, and the other like he now advocates. Between these two, the missionaries and the churches should decide as to which they would serve or support. This is fair to all.

Bro. Herring condemned with emphasis the paying of native help to carry on the work. The new plan reduced his living to a bare support. His people were poor, and he did not wish to go to the judgment and face the fact that he had used more of the people's money than was actually necessary. He found that he had got on just as well on six hundred dollars as on his former salary. He supposed the Board did the best they could. He had no criticism to make upon the Board; its members were men in high station, and they knew how to sympathize with people who were poor and in straitened circumstances.

He said we have only a few rich Baptists in the State. He expected his living from those who are poor, and he wanted them to give him that support cheerfully. People should not be encouraged to give less, but let what they do give be so used as to employ more men to go to the foreign field. There was less interest in the churches on Foreign Missions than there was seven years ago. This, he said, was the first opportunity young men ever had of going to China on this plan, and if they did not do so, he hoped that Hudson Taylor, whose agent was now in Asheville, and who paid no attention to denominational lines, would press on and do this work.

Here Bro. H. read an extract from an article from Dr. M. T. Yates, which appeared in the RECORDER of May 25, 1888, and which he claimed supported him in his present position in doing mission work.

Concluding, Bro. H. said some people are afraid of everything that has not machinery and a paid agent behind it. He was no Spurgeon nor Hudson Taylor, but proposed to go, relying on nothing but the churches for his support. He would not be subject to the control of any board of bishops.

The foregoing are substantially the points made by Bro. Herring. He speaks rapidly, and at times it is hard to keep the drift of his argument. We give this report so that the brethren who have not had an opportunity to hear him may get some idea at least about what Bro. Herring is trying to do.

J. C. C.

ONE of our correspondents, who shrinks from publicity, and does not allow us to use his name, makes a very remarkable suggestion concerning the support of the orphan asylums of the State. We publish it for the examination and consideration of our readers:

Dear Sir and Brother:—Cannot the Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Christians and Baptists as well afford to accept State aid in their Orphanage work as they can in the education of their children in the common schools? I think so. Don't you think the State appropriation to Orphanage work can be doubled, provided it is distributed like the public school fund on a per capita basis to the INMATES OF ALL THE REPUTABLE ORPHANAGES in the State, and meet the approval of the charitable minded people of the State? If so, then the State can show her interest in, and guardianship for, the inmates of the various institutions of the kind in our State.

If one orphan in one reputable Orphanage is a ward of the State, then why are not those in other reputable institutions of the same kind?

I think a per capita division the only just one. I would not recommend the taking of a single dollar by any institution whose inmates are now beneficiaries of the State, but rather, if necessary, a double appropriation, and then an equal division per capita among all, including the four or more other institutions which now receive no aid. Thus justice would be done to each orphan and no institution hurt.

I have presented this as a solution of what has heretofore been with some a vexed question. I have presented it to you because of your interest in the work.

It is a well established principle of the Baptists that they are opposed to everything that looks in the direction of a union of Church and State. Consequently our churches and our denominational enterprises can never receive State aid, because it violates that sacred principle of separation between Church and State.

....The West End church of Asheville, N. C., was organized on Sunday afternoon, the 5th inst. Revs. J. L. White, J. K. Connally, J. Q. Adams, D. B. Nelson, W. P. Southern and M. A. Jenkins took part in the exercises. The church is composed of sixty-seven members.

....Rev. C. A. G. Thomas of Greensboro says: "The Baptist hosts of North Carolina are as noble people as the world can produce; they need no such stimulants as 'Roll of Honor,' and list of 'Most Honorable Mention.' They need no names signed in 'silver' and 'gold' on perishable certificates."

....Bro. C. A. G. Thomas of Greensboro is preaching to a crowded house every Sunday. Often people are compelled to go away for want of room. This is very stimulating to the brethren of the church. Bro. Thomas is one of our strongest men. He is an aggressive and safe leader for his people.

....In the report of the Corresponding Secretary on State Missions at the "South Dakota Baptist State Convention" for 1892, it is said: "It is an interesting and gratifying fact that we have been exempt from any deaths in the ranks of the ministry within the bounds of this Convention for nearly ten years."

....One of the richest men in Winston, a member of no church, has said to Bro. H. A. Brown: "When you get ready to build your church, I will give you more money than I have ever given to build any church in Winston." This, while not very definite, means considerable help, for this gentleman has heretofore given liberally to other churches in Winston.

....Rev. Ed. M. Poteat, pastor of the Calvary Baptist church of New Haven, Conn., passed through Raleigh last Thursday on his return from Leaksville, whither he had been to assist in the marriage ceremonies of Miss Lily Connally Morehead. Bro. Poteat is a splendid fellow, and we enjoyed a visit from him very much.

....A letter has been received from Rev. F. T. Gates, Secretary of the American Baptist Education Society, saying that the Society has decided to hold its next meeting in connection with the Southern Baptist Convention here next May. The time of its meeting will be on Thursday before the meeting of the Convention on Friday. Southern Baptists will give the Society a cordial welcome.—Baptist and Reflector.

....The great questions for the Baptists of North Carolina now do not lie so much along the lines of increasing their membership, however important that may be, as along the lines of education, pastors reared from their own churches, or thoroughly identified with our interests, pastors and members, men and women, educated in their own schools, better trained churches, and a higher standard of life and work.

....Dr. T. T. Eaton says: "Dr. W. D. Powell has been greatly blessed so far in the work of raising this special fund" (Permanent Centennial fund). From what we have seen in the Baptist Courier, and from what we know of Dr. Powell's visit and talk at our Convention, we are reminded of what Dr. John A. Broadus says of the rule by which to properly estimate the good a man does: "So much good minus so much evil equal so much." Where is the $2,000 which Doctor Powell said that he secured at our Convention after he left the church? Who gave it? When? Where? For what?

....Rev. J. F. Morris, pastor of the Baptist church at Stanly Creek, has been suffering for months with a tumor on his leg. It has been removed three times. Lately the leg has become so diseased that Mr. Morrison was brought down to see Dr. Robert Gibbon, who amputated the leg just below the knee. The patient is at the hospital and was resting comfortably.—Charlotte Democrat.

....The Religious Herald's yearly "stir up" over some part of our Southern Baptist Convention's work has been begun. Last year it was Dr. Goodwin, and this time it is Drs. Gwin and Ellis. The object of the Herald can be easily understood. These "stir ups" by the Herald are now looked for by us annually during the three months next preceding the session of the Southern Baptist Convention. The real object in them all has been the same. Don't be troubled, brethren.

....One of our wisest and most successful pastors, in speaking of the new departure of doing Foreign Mission work, said: "What great harm a good man can do when he starts in the wrong direction." We have often with sorrow, too, observed the truthfulness of this remark. It is always true that he who is known to be a good man, and who is associated with a good cause, is capable of doing the most harm when he starts in the wrong direction.

Letter from Rev. R. T. Bryan.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I have been trying for some time to write you about my moving to Shanghai. I noticed, under the personal items in the RECORDER, the statement that the Foreign Mission Board had stationed me at Shanghai. Our Board does not move missionaries without their consent. The Board wrote asking me to go to Shanghai, and, after prayerful consideration, we agreed to do so. We were satisfied at Chinkiang, and hated to leave; but we felt that a call had come from God to go to Shanghai, and we obeyed.

I am very agreeably surprised in Shanghai as a mission field. While there are a large number of missionaries in Shanghai, the city and country are not well worked, because a large portion of the missionaries are engaged in other things than direct preaching of the gospel.

We found a section at the east gate of the city, between the city and river, containing more inhabitants than all Chinkiang, and not even a small street chapel in it to preach the gospel. The country, too, is densely populated and very poorly worked. Bro. Tatum and I have enlarged the work by laying out two country circuits, and opening a new centre of work in the large section outside the east gate mentioned above.

We have also converted a small room in my back yard into a small chapel for preaching to the country people, who come in to sell cloth at the cloth market adjoining my place. We preach or converse with them every morning before breakfast, one one morning, and the other the next. We hope in this way to get acquainted with the country people all around Shanghai, for they come here from every direction. Father Yates seems to have had a peculiar gift in selecting positions for mission work. I thought the Chinkiang position was the best in China, but I find that the position here is even better, if possible. From 6:30 to 8:30 a. m. every morning there are several hundred country people from every direction right at my back gate. God grant that we may be the central light to this whole section.

There are many "Mandarin" speaking and "Mandarin" understanding people in Shanghai, and I hope to be able to do a special work among them, for which my stay in Chinkiang has specially prepared me. Speaking two dialects instead of one greatly broadens and increases my influence in a cosmopolitan place like Shanghai. This fact influenced me considerably in making the move to Shanghai. Then there is a special work here to be done in connection with Brother Tatum in developing and influencing the native christians in our church. I left a great field, but have come to a greater. We tried not to be influenced by personal considerations. We feel it a great privilege to be permitted to live where Father and Mother Yates lived so long, and to take part in the work which they began and carried on so wisely for many years; to follow Brother and Sister Herring, who also worked wisely and faithfully; and to be associated with our noble and generous, consecrated and faithful Brother and Sister Tatum.

Surely the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places. Brother and Sister Tatum and Mrs. Bryan and I can find no language to express our appreciation of the great privilege we enjoy in being associated with Mother Yates. We have great confidence in her wisdom and judgment, and feel safe in going ahead when we have gained her approval. I would like to tell how she helps us in our work, but she will not allow me, but God knows. She leaves us with her children, Mr. and Mrs. Seaman, to-morrow for the home-land. O, how we shall miss her help and encouragement while she is away, not to speak of her motherly visits every few days. We pray God to bring her safely back again, and spare her many more years to the work and to us. We commit her to you! Take good care of her! Let her rest and gain strength for China. Do not keep her too long, for we shall miss our mother.

I am not well yet, but hope soon to be my old self again. I have gained back more than half of my lost flesh. We all are in very good health. Robert Thomas Bryan, Jr., is growing very fast. He is not yet three months old, weighs sixteen pounds, and is quite an accomplished crower and laugher.

I am preaching regularly in the Shanghai dialect, sowing the seeds, and waiting and trusting God for the harvest. It is coming soon. Yours sincerely,

R. T. BRYAN.

Another Jonah.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The article of Bro. J. E. White in the RECORDER of February 1st entitled, "The Missionary Call," to my mind contains some very serious errors on the call to the ministry. He says: "That discussion can but be productive of good. It certainly will not have the effect of binding any closer the hood of traditional superstition, the venerable and hoary relic of priestcraft, which has been thrown around this matter of a call to the ministry." It seems to me that Bro. White has taken such a fright at "priestcraft" and "Romanism" that he has flown the track altogether.

He says: "And the sooner we rid ourselves of the other and companion error of a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry." Is it an "error" to believe in "a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry?" If so, then, I must confess that I am in the dark. What does it mean when it says, "God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, here am I?" Ex. 3: 4. "And the Lord came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel?" 1 Sam. 3: 10; Jonah 3: 1, 2? Paul speaks of "the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus." Acts 20: 24. I do not mean to say that God calls men now by an audible voice, or by angels, or any wonderful vision, but by the "still small voice" of his Spirit. Is it not a "miraculous interposition of God" that causes men to live a life of self denial, and often a life of poverty for the sake of the gospel? The Education Board at Wake Forest requires young men to give evidence of their personal call to the ministry. Why should they do this, if "every truly regenerated man" is called to preach the gospel? In addition to that they have them to relate their christian experience. It has been a time-honored custom of our fathers to require a candidate for the ministry to give his christian experience, his reasons for believing that God has called him into the gospel ministry before ordaining him. Shall we eliminate the "call" in our examinations of candidates for the ministry? Bro. White's proof text, Luke 9: 57–62, has reference to one of Christ's disciples—one of his called preachers. See Matt. 8: 21; 28: 16-19.

"Our entrance into what is called the active ministry is simply the process of sanctification developed up to a certain point in us at which we feel conscience bound to give all our efforts to the one work of saving men." Is it a mere matter of "sanctification developed up to" a certain "point" that leads men into "the active ministry?" Isn't it also true that some of our very best sanctified people have never had any impressions to enter "the active ministry?" Bro. White also says: "When we hear a man say that God took him up against his will and perforce put him into the ministry, we cannot think that he has taken much pains to canvass and examine the steps which led him into the ministry, and that he is dealing more or less in hypocrisy." How does the above accord with, the account given in Ex. 4: 10; Jonah 1: 1–4; 2: 1–3; with Paul who said: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" 1 Cor. 9: 16. The writer of this article felt his incapacity to preach the gospel as Moses did, he resisted like Jonah, and felt the woe like Paul.

Every christian ought to work for his Master in some way, "Every man to his work." But I do not believe that we ought to confound the work of the ministry with that of the layman. We know their work is different. That accounts for so many isms in this world. God calls only such men into the ministry as he can trust to preach his Word. Let all others keep out of the ministry. God makes no mistakes. Men who preach everything but the gospel, can we believe that God has called them? I have not written this article in the spirit of controversy, but for the interest that I feel in the cause of Christ.

Whitakers, February 8, 1893.

Warrenton.

We are looking forward to a series of meetings at an early day. There is some interest among the unconverted in the congregation, and the church is in good health spiritually.

We are aiming to enlarge the work in this section. Two or three mission stations will be supplied with preaching by some of the brethren. If the plan that I have arranged to send a number of the brethren through the county preaching, the outlook is good for establishing one or two new churches in the near future. We have during the past year lost some of our best members. We keenly feel the loss we have sustained; but we mean to close up our ranks, enlarge our work, and in the name of our God "go forward."

The removal of Bro. Walter A. Montgomery (not Wm. A. as you put in your issue of the 11th) to Raleigh is a great loss to us, but a great gain to Raleigh, to the Raleigh Bar, and to the First Baptist church. He knows how to help his pastor, and is always ready to take part in every good word and work.

Our plans for enlargement include the enlargement of the list of RECORDER subscribers here. An agent will be appointed to night to look after the interests of the RECORDER and report monthly. He ought to do good work for you, for the paper continues to improve.

Messrs. W. C. & A. B. Stronach, wholesale and retail grocers, bakers and candy manufacturers of Raleigh, have a new advertisement in this paper. Suppose you look it up. They are making some special inducements in fine North Carolina cut and roe herrings by the barrel or kit. Everything in the grocery line can be found at their store. They make a specialty of handling fine canned goods.

From Louisville, Ky.

Dear Recorder:—I have thought all winter that I would write a few lines for insertion in your columns, but have been so enveloped in my work in the Seminary that I have put it off and the months have passed away, and I have scarcely realized how. But now as the much dreaded interviews which the unfortunate professors are accustomed to hold with the students, just at this period of the session, are a thing of the past, I will venture to pen a few lines for the ever welcome visitor.

The intermediate examinations are just over, and the brethren who have been so fortunate as to pass the ordeal successfully, are now carrying a more cheerful face and singing "When I can read my title clear to"—well, we will tell you more about it when we have passed the next one in May.

I am very much pleased with the Seminary. I had very little conception of the work or its value until I came here. It will more than pay any young man who is called of God to preach, to spend one or two years, at least, here in preparation before he enters fully into his work.

Last Wednesday was missionary day at the Seminary, which was a very delightful day for the brethren. The subject was "Dr. Yates," which was an interesting subject especially to us "Tar Heels." It was rendered more interesting because of the well prepared essay which was read by Bro. W. R. Cullom.

These meetings fill the brethren with the missionary spirit, which will make them more useful to the churches as pastors.

The winter has been very severe in this section, but the cold has moderated very much, and we are having some days that resemble spring very much.

The different Baptist churches of the city are making united efforts to carry on more thorough missionary work in the destitute sections of the city, which is very much needed.

May God bless the RECORDER.

D. P. BRIDGES

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 6, 1893.

From Rev. A. J. Taylor.

Dear Editor:—I would be glad if I could get every member of my churches to take the RECORDER. I would have better churches and more and better workers, for if our people knew more about our Lord's cause, and how much it needed their aid, that love which prompted our Saviour to come to this world to save us from that awful doom that awaited us, would prompt his people to send the gospel to those who never heard of a Saviour that would save them. Will we not rejoice when we get to heaven, as we see those who come from China, India, Africa, and the islands of the sea? Then let us do all that we can to send the gospel to them.

God bless the RECORDER and may its influence be felt more and more in the great work of sending the gospel to those that have it not.

Owing to the bad weather, we have not done much work in our field during the past month. We hope to get to our work soon.

Your brother in Christ,

Minister Ordained.

A presbytery met at Lattimore church in Cleveland county on Friday before the first Sunday in February, 1893, for the purpose of ordaining Bro. B. M. Bridges to the full work of the ministry.

The following churches were represented by elders and deacons: Sandy Run, Boiling Springs, Beaver Dam, and Double Springs. Ordained ministers present: Revs. G. W. Rollins, A. C. Irvin, A. P. Hollifield, Z. D. Harrell, T. J. Moss and W. J. Jones.

The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. G. W. Rollins. 2 Tim. 2: 24, 25, 26.

The body proceeded to organize by electing Rev. A. C. Irvin, Moderator, and J. H. Jones, Secretary.

The church introduced Bro. B. M. Bridges to the presbytery, which requested him to relate his christian experience and his impressions or call to the work of preaching the gospel.

On motion, the Moderator proceeded to the examination of Bro. Bridges, as to his qualifications, followed by Rev. G. W. Rollins and Rev. A. P. Hollifield, asking some leading questions which were answered satisfactorily to the presbytery; then, on motion, the presbytery proceeded with the ordination by prayer and imposition of hands; Rev. Z. D. Harrell leading in the ordination prayer, Rev. A. P. Hollifield delivering the charge, and Rev. T. J. Moss presenting the Bible.

Thus closed a pleasant meeting.

In striking contrast to the numerous fanciful Calendars which flood the mails at this season of the year, is the one that is issued by N. W. Ayer & Son, the Keeping Everlastingly At It, Newspaper Advertising Agents of Philadelphia, and which has been for years a very great favorite.

It is large enough to be easily read across a room and handsome enough to hang on the wall for a year without becoming an eyesore.

It is so packed as to reach its destination in perfect condition, and it is sent to any address, post paid on receipt of 25 cents.

Rev. Wm. P. Gray.

On Sunday, Nov. 27th, 1892, this servant of God died at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Md., in his forty-fourth year. He united with Fountain Creek Baptist church, 1873, and was by that church licensed to preach the gospel. He attended Richmond College several sessions, and was then ordained to the full work of the ministry. He accepted the pastoral care of several churches in the county of Brunswick, which he served many years, often riding thirty or forty miles in cold freezing weather to meet his people and fill an appointment. He also served as pastor of Fountain Creek, Zion and Mt. Vernon churches in Greenville county, Va., until forced by ill-health to stop preaching.

His physician advised him to go to Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, for surgical treatment, which he did, and for two months all that medical and surgical skill could do was done, but to no avail.

Although a great sufferer, he always exhibited a gentle and uncomplaining spirit. His physicians and nurses said just before he did, he had been one of the best disposed patients they had ever had, and they have several hundreds every day.

I visited him every day during his last month, and three days before he died he seemed to have premonition of his departure, and asked me to read to him of heaven, which I did; then he said turn to the fifth chapter of Romans and read the first verse. When I had complied with this request, he said, "I want you to preach my funeral from those words, 'Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.'" This I tried to do at our dear old church, Fountain Creek, Va., to the largest crowd of mourning friends I ever saw at a country funeral. He was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, and they took charge of his remains and quietly laid them to rest with all the ceremonies of that fraternity in the family graveyard at his home.

Bro. Gray, like the Master, and everybody else who tries to do what is right, had a few enemies, and a multitude of friends. Not only in his own and other churches, but he had many warm friends who did not belong to any church.

While pastor of Buffalo church near Buffalo Springs, Va., he became a special favorite of Col. Goode, the proprietor of that celebrated watering place, who gave him and family an annual ticket to spend one month at his hotel. When Bro. Gray could not visit the Springs, he would send him the water free of charge to his home.

Sister Gray and her children will most keenly feel the stroke, yet they should remember that their loss is their loved one's eternal gain, and by living aright their separation will not be forever.

Action of North Carolina Seminary Students.

At a meeting of the North Carolina students at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary on Feb. 3, 1893, the following was unanimously adopted:

We note with pleasure the plan for the endowment of a Wm. Royall Chair of the Bible and Moral Philosophy, proposed by Dr. Taylor in the BIBLICAL RECORDER of February 1st.

We heartily endorse the plan and pledge to Dr. Taylor and the proposed committee our earnest co operation.

Cooper's Tobacco Warehouse,

HENDERSON, N. C.

Have you heard the latest from this mammoth concern? The twentieth year of a most successful business is just now closing. D. Y. Cooper, the proprietor, realising the liberal and generous patronage he has received, proposes for the next two months to hold a sort of informal reception, and show some substantial appreciation for the long and continuous manifestations of confidence and friendship which he has received from his patrons during this long period of business relations.

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

1. To the person selling the greatest number of pounds of tobacco at Cooper's Warehouse, and to the one who receives the largest net sales, from January 1st, 1893, to February 25th, 1893, will be presented with a round-trip ticket, including $4.00 for board, to the presidential inauguration at Washington City March 4th, 1893. Also to the one selling ten pounds of finest bright wrappers, and also to the one offering twenty-five pounds finest cutters, will receive a round-trip ticket to Washington City. These tickets will be sent to the winners on or before the first day of March, 1893. A correct record will be kept, and everybody is invited to compete.

Besides offering these extra inducements, the public is assured that they will always receive the highest prices for all grades of tobacco.

It is stated that Baron Rothschild has recently purchased thousands of acres east of the Jordan, in Palestine, near the Damascus Railroad, and in the spring will send out a thousand Jewish families to occupy it. Baron Hirsch has bought largely on the plain of Esdraelon, and has bound himself to sell to none but Jews. The Jews, who are being banished from Russia, and who have the gates of most other countries, including, probably, America, closed against them, will, many of them, take advantage of these opportunities and go to Palestine.—Baptist and Reflector.

A Visitor from Mars.

BY R. H. LEWIS.

A meteoric stone had fallen in a field near my home. I was searching for it. A bright, shining object caught my eye. On a near approach I saw what appeared to be a fragment of stone, having five sharp pointed angles, in the form of what children call a "star." As I came still closer and was reaching forth my hand to pick up this wonderful aerolite, it rapidly increased in size until it stood upon two of its points as tall as myself. Its brightness dimmed gradually, as it grew, until it had the color of new silver.

I was rooted to the spot in amazement and terror. Hardly conscious of my act, I thrust out one hand and touched the long point nearest me. Instantly the five-pointed star became a man. His face was bright with intelligence—his eye piercing, and his whole form cast into a noble mould. He spoke at once:

"I am glad that you had the courage to touch me. Personal contact with humanity renders me human for a season. I am an inhabitant of another world—one which appears as a red star to you dwellers on the earth. We accomplish the object for which we were created; but our forms are as you saw me before you touched me. But, as I said, when we come in contact with any other persons of God's creation, on whatever world we may alight, we assume their form and are as one of them. Come, and let us go and examine this world of yours. I am curious to know about it. You need not have any fear of me."

Somehow I found that I had no fear and went with my friend from Mars readily. We walked to the nearest town. We turned into the main street and passed slowly along.

"What does that portly man do, standing in the door yonder"? he said, pointing to a grocer.

"That man sells groceries," I replied.

"For what?" said he.

"For money," I answered.

"What does he want with money?" he said.

"To support his family, send his children to school, pay taxes and contribute to the expenses necessary to keep up his lodge and his church," I said.

"What is a lodge?" queried my friend. He was "getting close" to me now, and I was compelled to think before answering.

"A lodge," said I, is a combination of men, an aggregation, a society formed for mutual protection and benefit."

"Protection from what?" he said.

"Well, from—from—from—see here, my friend, you are getting too inquisitive," I burst out.

"Excuse me," said my Martial friend, "but I thought a church was a combination, an aggregation, a society for mutual protection and benefit. Then of what use is a lodge?"

"Well, but—," I began; but he interrupted me:

"What does he want to educate his children for?"

My answer was ready: "That they may be able to take care of themselves—to make money."

"What do they want with money?" said he.

Promptly I answered: "To support their families, send their children to school, pay taxes and contribute to the expenses necessary to keep up their lodges and their churches."

"That is queer," said he, "they are going just as their fathers went. What else do they do?"

"Isn't that enough?" I quickly responded.

"I suppose it is," said he, "if that is the main object of your life here. But I thought there was another life to come. I thought this life on your planet was a probationary existence—and that the life to come was dependent on the life here. I thought that the object of being a church member was to imitate, as well as man can, the deeds of the one who instituted the church—to spend your life here in doing good to all, not to yourselves and immediate families only."

"But, my friend," I said, "you must remember our holy Book says: 'But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.'"

"True," said he, "and your holy Book says, Isaiah 58: 7—'Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh.' And again, in Galatians 6: 10, 'As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.' If you notice closely, you will see that self is just last every time."

He was shoving me too close. So I changed the subject. I showed him a fine portly man who was just then crossing the street, and said: "There goes one of our great men. He has done a great deal for our town."

"What has he done?" said the man from Mars.

"Why, he has built a large factory here. He employs three hundred hands. They draw wages every Saturday night and spend the money with our merchants. He causes much money to be put in circulation," I said.

"And divides his profits among his workmen and keeps little for himself—pays much for missions, helps the poor, endows schools, and so forth, I suppose," said he.

"No," I replied, "he keeps all his profits; but he has built a fine house and laid out beautiful grounds. His residence adds much to the beauty of our town."

My friend turned upon me with a very [illegible] countenance and said: "I see that [illegible] I have long wished to visit [illegible] and see what sort of beings inhabited which our Lord and Saviour came. I am grievously disappointed in all you have to show me." [illegible] explain to him that there were a few who really were good men and women, who lived for others and not for themselves, my celestial visitor, in my presence, became again a five-pointed star, then a glowing spark, and soared away to his home on high.

Ready to Help.

Year after year large grants are made by the American Baptist Publication Society to the South. New towns and cities are springing up along the new lines of railway that are penetrating the South through and through. It requires active men, with suppliss of good literature, to go into the midst of these new places to supply them. The Society is friendly to every movement looking to this end, and will gladly aid it to the extent of its ability. Every dollar contributed to the Society by Southern christians, churches or Sunday-schools returns and brings more with it.

Danger Signals.

On the top of a hill in England there is now a notice-board with the inscription, "This hill is dangerous to cyclists." Before that notice was put up, a stranger had ridden down the hill. Before he had proceeded many yards his machine became unmanageable, and he was thrown with a sickening thud upon the pavement, and killed upon the spot. After that they put up the notice.

If every place where a young man's life has been ruined were to be labelled, then every saloon in the United States would have to be labelled, "This place is dangerous to young men." Every racing course, every theatre, variety show and dime museum, and every dancing saloon, would have to be labelled, "This place is dangerous to young men."—Zion's Herald

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

"Paradise" for Sale.

This desirable place is in sight of the ocean and enjoys the delightful sea breeze; five miles from Morehead City, N. C.; bounded on the South by Bogue Sound on the North by Newport river, both navigable streams; and lawful fences. The Atlantic and North Carolina railroad runs through the centre of the farm and in full view of the residence, with a station near by. The water pure and healthy. The farm contains several different kinds of soil and is adapted to any kind of crops grown in the State. Game, fish, clams, oysters, escallops, etc., are abundant. This place is adapted to trucking, fishing, stock raising, or any other occupation one can follow in the country. "Paradise" contains about five hundred acres, and can be bought for three thousand dollars. This is a rare chance to get a place with so many advantages and no disadvantages, and at so low a price. Who will be the lucky one? Call on or address,

Our Duty to the Roman Catholic Countries of America.

To the thoughtful, sincere christian, it seems a deplorable fact of history that upon the discovery and settlement of America such a large proportion of its territory should have fallen into the hands of Roman Catholic power and influence. Mexico, Central America, Cuba, and the greater part of the whole South American continent, are still held under the rule of Roman Catholic priests, while the United States secures to all her citizens the highest religious freedom. From this fact it is not difficult to discover the cause why our country takes the lead among American republics. From the very beginning of their existence the Roman Catholic church has held unlimited and undisputed sway over these Southern countries,—ample time and opportunity, to be sure, for her to accomplish the best or the worst results of which she is capable. The result is that the moral and religious condition of these countries clearly proves before all the world that the sure and final fruits of Roman Catholicism are ignorance, wickedness, idolatry and superstition. The general ignorance of the people of these countries is clearly shown by the fact that, upon an average, only one out of every twelve of the population can read and write. "The Romish church has industriously fostered among the people that ignorance which is so conducive to her continuance in power. This ignorance makes the people easy victims of every form of superstition and error. Reading nothing and so knowing nothing of what other people are thinking and doing in the world, they lie safely locked in the embrace of errors which are the laughing stock of the whole world."

Ignorant of everything else, they are lamentably ignorant of the Bible, which is the fountain of truth and light, and the handbook for holy living. And even if they were able to read it, the Bible is withheld from them by the priests. Bro. Bagby, our missionary to Brazil, says that the great majority of the people do not even understand what is meant when the Bible is first spoken of. Its doctrines have been utterly lost in the perversions of Romanism, and as in the days of Christ, the commandments of men have been taught for the law of the living God.

The superstitions practiced among some of these people are of the grossest and most revolting character. The following example which illustrates some of them is quoted from "Brazilian Missions," a paper published in the interest of missions in that country: "A festa is held here annually called the 'Lavagem do Bomfin.' The church is cleaned but once a year, and as might be expected, becomes very dusty and filthy. When the season for the festa arrives, the devotees assemble and pitch tents around the church, which as usual in this country, is surrounded by a large open space for fireworks, processions, etc. Quantities of water are thrown on the floor and the accumulated mud and dust are stirred up until it becomes a filthy pool. For a whole day the halt, the blind, the withered, a multitude of impotent folk, lie down and roll in the dirty water, drinking it in, as it is supposed to possess miraculous virtue. At the close of the day the floor is washed and left to accumulate material for another year, while the people who have come from afar to celebrate the festa deliver themselves up for the two following days to gambling, bacchanalian revelry, and the unspeakable abominations which distinguished many of the pagan festivals of antiquity."

And as might be expected, where such superstition and debauchery as this is practiced, it is not to be wondered at that idolatry is found to be prevalent. The cross is worshipped, but the Christ is ignored; the image of a dove calls forth the admiration and reverence of the people, but of the quickening power of the Holy Spirit they are utterly ignorant. Even images of God the Father are in some places to be found. These people are as truly idolaters as the Chinaman or the Indian who bow down to their images of wood and stone.

"Moral degradation reigns supreme and infects the highest and most sacred of the relations of life. Immorality begins with the priests, hence the dreadful immorality of the people." The priests who hold a monopoly of celebrating marriage, are so extremely exorbitant in their charges as to compel the poor to live together unmarried, and so have brought marriage into disrepute, they themselves often living in open concubinage.

Such is the condition of these people who are held under the power of the Roman Catholic church. If the Chinese and Africans need the gospel, so do these people, for their moral condition is just as bad. That they need the gospel now may be clearly seen from the following reasons:—

1. From what has been said above, it is readily concluded that they are without hope. The shams and foibles of Romanism can never save them. They have no conception of the meaning of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, nor do not even profess to believe that a renewal of the heart is necessary to salvation. Nothing but the pure gospel can accomplish for these deluded people what Romanism has totally failed to do.

2. Being deluded and oppressed by priestcraft, with no visible good results, these people have become tired and vexed, and the growing sentiment among the thinking classes is that if this is religion they will have no religion at all, and as a result they are rapidly drifting into infidelity. Now is the time for the missionary to enter and give to them the true word of life.

3. The combined population of these countries is about 60,000,000, which is being increased yearly by the great inflowing tide of immigration. The great swarms of European immigrants, which have for so many years been pouring into our country, are slowly but surely beginning to turn towards these inviting tropical regions where a more cordial welcome is extended. These coming immigrants will naturally be influenced by, and eventually imbibe, the social and religious principles of the native citizens. Oh, what a long step it will be for the coming of Christ's kingdom if there can be firmly and securely planted in those countries a strong force of true christians who will welcome and lead to Christ these teaming thousands who are yearly coming to their shores!

4. The results of missionary work in these countries show that consecrated effort is not in vain. The people as a rule gladly hear and believe the gospel wherever it is preached. The glorious and almost miraculous achievements and success of Bagby and his colleagues in Brazil, of Powell and his fellow-workers in Mexico, and of Diaz in Cuba, all testify to this fact.

5. America is the home of liberty, and religious freedom is the very essence of all true liberty. Other forms of religion are now tolerated and even protected in well nigh all these countries. They have thrown open their doors, and have literally bid us enter. All of them have a republican form of government, and are destined to become more and more active and prominent in social, national and commercial intercourse with the other powers of the world. If this be the case, shall we not carry to them the very best of all our exports—the pure, untainted gospel?

Upon whom does the duty of giving these people the gospel devolve? We answer, upon the christian people of the United States, and especially upon the Baptists of the Southern States. Oh, what a power in the hands of God are the Southern Baptists to be in bringing the world to Christ!

1. They are our closest neighbors. We have with them similar kinds of government, institution, etc.; our ideas of liberty, law, justice and right, are very much alike. They all seem to take the United States as a model or ideal. They, like we, are a liberty-loving people, and Baptist churches and free republican government go hand in hand.

2. Their language is very much like ours, and hence the missionary experiences but little difficulty in acquiring a ready and fluent use of it, unlike the Chinese language, which being so unlike the English, is attended with such difficulty in its acquirement.

3. This duty naturally devolves upon us. European christians will not likely take much part in this work. Geographically we are situated nearer to them than any other christian nation, and hence the duty comes to us first.

4. Especially does this duty rest upon the Southern Baptists because from a sanitary view their missionaries will undergo but a slight change of temperature and climate, and hence will not run the risk that might be a hindrance to those accustomed to a more northern clime.

Let us, while doing our full duty to all other mission fields, not forget to give a liberal share of our prayers, contributions and missionaries to those people nearer home.

Keep Busy.

The secret of success in life is to keep busy, to be persevering, patient, and untiring in the pursuit or calling you are following. The busy ones may now and then make mistakes, but it is better to risk these than to be idle and inactive. Keep doing, whether it be at work or seeking recreation. Motion is life, and the busiest are the happiest. Cheerful, active labor is a blessing. An old philosopher says: "The fire-fly only shines when on the wing; so it is with the mind; when once we rest, we darken."—British Printer.

One Sin Leads to Another.

Do you know how the suspension bridge below Niagara Falls was built? The span is some 750 feet, and the height of the bridge 238 feet. How were the cables stretched from pier to pier? I will tell you. A boy's kite was sent up on one side of the river, and carried by the wind across to the other. To the string of the kite was attached a cord, and to the cord a rope. Thus a communication was established. So a single sin, even a small sin, may draw after it the most weighty consequences. Beware of the first sin, the first oath, the first glass, or petty dishonesty.—Kind Words.

Good Temper.

Good temper is like a sunny day, shedding brightness on everything. It is temper which creates the bliss of home, or disturbs its comforts. It is not in the collision of intellect that domestic peace likes to nestle; her home is in the forbearing nature, in the yielding spirit, in the calm pleasures of a mild disposition anxious to give and receive happiness. Goethe says, "He is the happiest, be he king or peasant, who finds peace in his home." But peace cannot be found till sought for, and when once obtained requires cultivation, and the most effectual culture is good temper. It is a fortune in itself, and has the same effect in the domestic circle as the sunshine has on all outside. For as the warm sunshine and the gentle breeze melt the glacier, so the voice of kindness will touch the heart which could not be subdued by severity. Good temper in the morning will lighten the cares of the day, and make all household affairs progress smoothly. Good temper at night will be fraught with sweetest memories free from regrets if death claims a dear one in the darkness.—Christian at Work.

You can never tell what a slight cold may lead to: it is best, therefore, to give yourself the benefit of the doubt, and cure it as soon as possible with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A day's delay, sometimes an hour's delay, may result in serious consequences.

Just as you now play a piece without the music and do not think what notes you strike, though once you picked them out by slow and patient toil, so if you begin of set purpose, you will learn the law of kindness in utterance so perfectly that it will be second nature to you, and make more music in your life than all the songs the sweetest voice has ever sung.—Frances E. Willard.

Benefits of Giving to Missions.

As we give to the Lord we get from the Lord. Giving seems to open a channel by which God's blessings flow in upon us. As we give, it is given unto us.

I do not say we will get of the same kind, although that may be. Glance back over the history of our own (Baptist) denomination for the past few decades, and we see as we have given men to missions, God has increased our numbers more abundantly; as we have given of our means God seems to have prospered us; while those who have not given money nor men are gradually becoming less and less both in numbers and in influence. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth."

I do not say, therefore, that missions is a "boom-town" where you can buy a corner lot for a mere "song," and afterward sell it for one thousand dollars. I do not say invest a prayer and a penny and the Lord will give you a pound. I do not say it is more blessed to give than to receive because for every dime you give you'll get a dollar, although from a merely commercial point of view missions pay. The mission to the Sandwich Islands is said to have cost $5,000,000 while the trade with this country amounted to $16,000,000 in six years, so that the interest for two years amounted to more than the whole principal.

But the greater blessing consists in the larger man, for in giving he has dethroned selfishness and made his heart a more fit dwelling-place for the Holy Spirit. A man riding along the street dropped a quarter into the outstretched hand of a beggar woman, but as he rode away he began to repent his good deed, saying, "How do I know that the woman is worthy? She may take that money and spend it on drink;" and he rode back and asked the woman to return the money. The astonished woman did so, and was more astonished to receive a five-dollar bill. As the man rode away a second time, he was heard to murmur: "There, self, I guess you wish you had kept quiet." I know of no better way to down the selfish man in all of us than hearty, systematic, and prayerful giving to missions.

And, again, the greater blessing consists in the enlarged power of the giver for doing good at home; for the farther he causes his light to shine, the brighter it is bound to shine at home. Therefore, if you want a revival at home, give to those away from home; if you want sinners saved about you, give to those you have never seen; and as God's blessings come down to accompany the money you have given, it will lift you up nearer him and sweep those who are near you into his kingdom. For, say what you please, it is not self-interest that moves the people for good, but self sacrifice. When the unconverted man sees you clinging with death grip to the money the Master has entrusted to you, he mocks at your religion; but when he sees you as a faithful steward give of your means, then he bows before the power of your religion. If I were asked the greatest hindrance to the spread of the gospel at home, I believe I would say, Not enough given to spread the gospel abroad.—Extract from Rev. Paul V. Bomar, in Missionary Review.

Dangerous Prayers.

"I want you to spend fifteen minutes every day praying for Foreign Missions," said a pastor to some young people in his congregation. "But beware how you pray, for I warn you that it is a very costly experiment."

"Costly!" they asked in surprise.

"Ay, costly," he cried. "When Carey began to pray for the conversion of the world, it cost him himself, and it cost those who prayed with him very much. Brainerd prayed for the dark skinned savages, and after two years of blessed work, it cost him his life. Two students in Mr. Moody's summer school began to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more servants into his harvest; and lo! it is going to cost our country five thousand young men and women who have, in answer to this prayer, pledged themselves to the work. Be sure it is a dangerous thing to pray in earnest for this work; you will find that you cannot pray and withhold your labor, or pray and withhold your money; nay, that your very life will no longer be your own when your prayers begin to be answered.

"I have often said in my public addresses that it is a dangerous thing to pray for a blessing unless you want it. What a blessed thing when we are ready to receive!"

Says the Missionary Review: A Hindu conversing with a Church Missionary Society missionary in India, in answer to the question, "Which of all our methods do you fear the most?" he said: "We do not greatly fear your schools, for we need not send our children; we do not fear your books, for we need not read them; we do not fear your preaching, for we need not hear it; but we dread your women and your doctors; for your doctors are winning our hearts and your women are winning our homes; and when our hearts and our homes are won, what is there left us?"

You would like the lamp-chimneys that do not amuse themselves by popping at inconvenient times, wouldn't you?

A chimney ought not to break any more than a tumbler. A tumbler breaks when it tumbles.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass"—they don't break from heat, not one in a hundred; a chimney lasts for years sometimes.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Raleigh Affairs.

Mr. C. A. Tuck of Person county lost $500 on Fayetteville street last week, which was found by Sidney Simmons, a colored man. He spent twenty dollars of the money, and $480 was secured for Mr. Tuck.

Messrs. Latta & Myatts' large three story frame warehouse on Blount Street, this city, was destroyed by fire last Thursday, together with a small frame stable. The building contained 210 bales of cotton, some tobacco, and a car load mowing machines. Three or four adjoining buildings were slightly damaged. The loss on cotton, buildings, &c., is estimeted at about $12,500 mostly covered by insurance.

State News.

Mr. W. F. Wasson, ex sheriff of Iredell county, died recently aged eighty years.

It is stated that Rutherfordton is to have a $200,000 cotton, wool and linen factory.

Dr. William Cameron died at Hillsboro, February 7th. He was in his seventy ninth year.

The colored Baptist church in Beaufort was destroyed by fire last Wednesday night. Loss about $1,000.

John Hambright, colored, the murderer of Jenks Macobson, is to be hanged in Shelby next Friday.

The Mt. Airy Granite Company recently received an order from Philadelphia for $60,000 worth of granite.

The Franklinton Weekly is the name of a neat little paper just started at Franklinton, N. C. Mr. R. C. Gulley is editor.

Wilson Sawyer, aged eighteen, of Perquimans county, was accidentally drowned in the harbor at Beaufort last Friday.

Mr. John R. Smith a merchant at Lumberton has made an assignment. Assets not stated; liabilities about $10,000.

The contract has been let for a system of water-works in Wilson. According to the Mirror the amount to be paid is $51,270.10.

Wayland Rollins, the murderer of Sandy Jones in "Smoky Hollow," a questionable resort in Durham, has been bound over to court.

David Edwards, confined in the Buncombe county jail on charge of manslaughter, recently made his escape by tearing out some brick with a knife and awl.

Loyd Smith, night clerk at the Battery Park Hotel, Asheville, accidentally shot and killed himself, while toying with a pistol Saturday night week.

The Daily Charlotte Observer which, under its present management, has become one of the brightest and most readable newspapers published in the South, recently entered a new volume.

Mr. J. Frank Blanton a merchant of Sharon, Cleveland county, while cutting wood last Friday week, was struck by a falling tree and so badly injured that he died on Sunday following.

A. T. Wright who murdered David Smith in Richmond county, last spring, was recently captured in Georgia. Gov. Carr has made requisition on Gov. Northen for Wright and he will be brought back to this State for trial.

Shade Stanley and wife, colored, living near Newbern, locked their three small children up in their house last Wednesday and went off to work. The house caught fire and was destroyed, and the children were burned to death.

A special of the 3d from Forest City, Rutherford county, to the Charlotte Observer, says: Ardelia Dean, daughter of Salina Dean, while playing with others around the Forest City Manufacturing Company's shops, was caught on the shafting and whipped to death before the machinery could be stopped. The child was nine years old.

The people of Hungary, Point Lookout, Sugar Loaf, and Jude's Ridge, in this county, are greatly excited by the depredations of a pack of wolves which made their appearance several weeks since. The sheep are disappearing like rats before a ferret, some flocks being almost destroyed. Several attempts have been made to hunt them down and kill [illegible] so far they have outwitted both [illegible] their hounds.—Hendersonville

[illegible] CURE FOR CONSUMPTION is a sure cure [illegible] sore throat, croup, consumption, and [illegible] lung troubles.

We hear of quite a number of men who were defeated at the last election contesting for seats. The question arises, are not some of these men contesting purely for the sake of the amount of money which the law allows a man to defray council fees, &c. Of course, if a man has been wronged, he ought to be afforded the means of redress; but when it comes to be a contest simply for the allowance which the law makes, the proceeding becomes at once contemptible, and the man who makes himself a party to such a proceeding deserves the contempt of every good man no matter what his party affiliations may be.

The jury in the Siler murder case in Chatham county, have rendered a virdict, "that Adam Siler and his wife Rebecca came to their death at their residence on December 23d, 1892, from pistol wounds inflicted by a negro man calling himself Phillips, alias Williams, and whose true name is to the jurors unknown." The Governor offers a reward of $200 for the capture of the negro. Since writing the above we see the statement that the murderer of Mr. Siler and his wife was Doc Ray, the same man who murdered Miss McDonald in Moore county. It will be remembered that Ray was shot and killed on January 5th, near Keyser, while resisting arrest.

A Hearty Amen to What Has Been Said.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I wish to give a hearty amen to all the good things said about Dr. Royall. After dining with him last Commencement, we talked for a long while. I saw him also in the State Convention in December. Little did I think it my last time to meet him.

There have been few men I have known of whom I have been so fond. He was so fatherly and Christ like. As a teacher, I put him next to Dr. Broadus.

The RECORDER comes weekly as a letter from home and is eagerly read. I am only twelve miles from the North Carolina line and in easy access to Raleigh; so I do not feel that I am far off—am nearer than I was in Greenville.

I will feel more at home when my family get here. Bad weather and a sick child has detained them in Wake county.

I am glad that Bro. Lamberth goes to Greenville. A. D. HUNTER.

Shall the Work Cease?

The Education Board is doing its work on the cheapest plans possible, and cannot carry on the work long on credit. These thirty-eight young ministers cannot remain here till June, if help be not sent us within the next two months. The money for this work has been pledged by the churches and individuals. If we could get only a part of it now, it would enable us to go on. From Christmas to June the heaviest strain is on the Board of Education. It cannot go through these months without money.

Brethren, do send us some relief.

An Oakville Miracle.

THE REMARKABLE CASE OF MR. JOHN. W. CONDOR.

A HELPLESS CRIPPLE FOR YEARS—TREATED BY THE STAFF OF THE TORONTO GENERAL HOSPITAL AND DISCHARGED AS INCURABLE —THE STORY OF HIS MIRACULOUS RECOVERY AS INVESTIGATED BY AN EMPIRE REPORTER

(Toronto Empire.)

For more than a year past the readers of the Empire have been giving the particulars of some of the most remarkable cures of the 19th century, all, or nearly all of them, in cases hitherto held by the most advanced medical scientists to be incurable. The particulars of these cases vouched for by such leading newspapers as The Hamilton Spectator and Times, The Halifax Herald, Toronto Globe, Le Monde, Montreal; Detroit News, Albany, N. Y.; Journal, Albany Express and others, whose reputation placed beyond question the statements made.

Recently rumors have been afloat of a remarkable case in the pretty little town of Oakville, of a young man recovering after years of helplessness and agony. The Empire determined to subject the case to the most rigid investigation, and accordingly detailed one of our best reporters to make a thorough and impartial investigation into the case. Acting upon these instructions our reporter went to Oakville, and called upon Mr. John W. Condor (who it was so miraculously recovered) and had not long been in conversation with him when he was convinced that the statements made were not only true, but that "the half had not been told." The reporter found Mr. Condor at work in one of the heaviest departments of the Oakville Basket Factory, and was surprised, in the face of what he knew of this case, to be confronted by a strapping young fellow of good physique, ruddy countenance and buoyant bearing. This now rugged young man was he who had spent a great part of his days upon a sick-bed, suffering almost untold agony. When the Empire representative announced the purpose of his visit Mr. Condor cheerfully volunteered a statement of his case for the benefit of other sufferers. "I am," said Mr. Condor, "an Englishman by birth, and came to this country with my parents when nine years of age, and at that time was as rugged and healthy as any boy of my age. I am now twenty nine years of age, and it was when about fourteen years old that the first twinges of inflammatory rheumatism came upon me, and during the fifteen years that intervened between that time and my recovery a few months ago, tongue can hardly tell how much I suffered. My trouble was brought on, I think, through too frequent bathing in cold lake water. The joints of my body began to swell, the cords of my legs to tighten, and the muscles of my limbs to contract. I became a helpless cripple, confined to bed, and for three months did not leave my room. The doctor who was called in administered preparations of iodide of potassium and other remedies without any material beneficial effect. After some months of suffering I became strong enough to leave the bed but my limbs were stiffened and I was unfitted for any active vocation. I was then hampered more or less for the following nine years, when I was again forced to take my bed. This attack was in 1886, and was a great deal more severe than the first. My feet, ankles, knees, legs, arms, shoulders, and in fact all parts of my frame were affected. My joints and muscles became badly swollen, and the disease even reached my head. My face swelled to a great size. I was unable to open my mouth, my jaws being fixed together. I, of course, could eat nothing. My teeth were pried apart and liquid food poured down my throat. I lost my voice, and could speak only in husky whispers. Really, I am unable to describe the state I was in during those long and weary months. With my swollen limbs drawn by the tightening cords up to my emaciated body, and my whole frame twisted and contorted into indescribable shapes, I was nothing more than a deformed skeleton. For three long weary months I was confined to bed, after which I was able to get up, but was a complete physical wreck, hobbling around on crutches a helpless cripple. My sufferings were continually intense, and frequently when I would be hobbling about the street I would be seized with a paroxysm of pain and would fall unconscious to the ground. During all this time I had the constant attendance of medical men, but their remedies were unavailing. All they could do was to try to build up my system by the use of tonics. In the fall of 1889 and spring of 1890 I again suffered intensely severe attacks, and at last my medical attendant, as a last resort, ordered me to the Toronto General Hospital. I entered the Hospital on June 20th, 1890, and remained there until September 20th of the same year. But, notwithstanding all the care and attention bestowed upon me while in this institution, no improvement was noticeable in my condition. After using almost every available remedy the hospital doctors—of whom there was about a dozen—came to the conclusion that my case was incurable, and I was sent away, with the understanding that I might remain an outside patient. Accordingly from September 1890 to the end of January 1891, I went to the hospital once a week for examination and treatment. At this stage I became suddenly worse, and once more gained admission to the hospital, where I lay in a miserable suffering condition for two months or more. In the spring of 1891 I returned to Oakville, and made an attempt to do something toward my own support. I was given light work in the basket factory, but had to be conveyed to and from my place of labor in a buggy and carried from the rig to a table in the works on which I sat and performed my work. In August, 1891, I was again stricken down, and remained in an utterly helpless condition until January 1892. At this time Mr. James, a local druggist, strongly urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I was prejudiced against proprietary medicines as I had spent nearly all I possessed on numerous highly recommended so-called remedies. I had taken into my system large quantities of different family medicines. I had exhausted the list of liniments, but all in vain, and I was therefore reluctant to take Mr. James' advice. I, however, saw strong testimonials as to the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a blood builder and nerve tonic, and thinking that if I could only get my blood in better condition my general state of health might be improved, I resolved to give Pink Pills a trial. With the courage born of despair I bought a box, but there was no noticeable improvement, and I thought this was like the other remedies I had used. But urged on by friends I continued taking Pink Pills, and after using seven boxes I was rewarded by noticing a decided change for the better. My appetite returned, my spirits began to rise and I had a little freer use of my muscles and limbs, the old troublesome swellings subsiding. I continued the remedy until I had used twenty-five boxes when I left off. By this time I had taken on considerable flesh, and weighed as much as a hundred and sixty pounds. This was a gain of sixty pounds in a few weeks. My joints assumed their normal size, my muscles became firmer, and in fact I was a new man. By April I was able to go to work in the basket factory, and now I can work ten hours a day with any man. I often stay on duty overtime without feeling any bad effects. I play baseball in the evenings and can run bases with any of the boys. Why I feel like dancing for very joy at the relief from abject misery I suffered so long. Many a time I prayed for death to release me from my sufferings, but now that is all gone and I enjoy health as only he can who suffered agony for years. I have given you a brief outline of my sufferings, but from what I have told you can guess the depth of my gratitude for the great remedy which has restored me to health and strength.

Wishing to substantiate the truth of Mr. Condor's remarkable story the Empire representative called upon Mr. F. W. James, the Oakville druggist referred to above. Mr. James fully corroborated the statements of Mr. Condor. When the latter had first taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills he was a mere skeleton—a wreck of humanity. The people of the town had long given him up for as good as dead, and would hardly believe the man's recovery until they saw him themselves. The fame of this cure is now spread throughout the section and the result is an enormous sale of Pink Pills. "I sell a dozen-and-a-half boxes of Pink Pills every day," said Mr. James, "and this is remarkable in a town the size of Oakville. And better still they give perfect satisfaction. Mr. James recalled numerous instances of remarkable cures after other remedies had failed. Mr. John Robertson, who lives midway between Oakville and Milton, who had been troubled with asthma and bronchitis for about fifteen years, has been cured by the use of Pink Pills, and this after physicians had told him there was no use doctoring further. Mr. Robertson says his appetite had failed completely, but after taking seven boxes of Pink Pills he was ready and waiting for each meal. He regards his case as a remarkable one. In fact Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are recognized as one of the greatest modern medicines—a perfect blood builder and nerve restorer—curing such diseases as rheumatism, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus' dance, nervous headache, nervous prostration and the tired feeling resulting therefrom, diseases depending upon humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. Pink Pills restore pale and sallow complexions to the glow of health, and are a specific for all the troubles peculiar to the female sex, while in the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature.

The Empire reporter also called upon Mr. J. C. Ford, proprietor of the Oakville Basket Factory, in which Mr. Condor is employed, Mr. Ford said he knew of the pitiable condition Condor had been in for years, and he had thought he would never recover. The cure was evidently a thorough one for Condor worked steadily at heavy labor in the mills and apparently stood it as well as the rest of the employees. Mr. Ford said he thought a great deal of the young man and was pleased at his wonderous deliverance from the grave and his restoration to vigorous health.

In order to still further verify the statements made by Mr. Condor in the above interview, the reporter on his return to Toronto examined the General Hospital records, and found therein the entries fully bearing out all Mr. Condor had said, thus leaving no doubt that his case is one of the most remarkable on record, and all the more remarkable because it had baffled the skill of the best physicians in Toronto.

These pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at fifty cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company from either address. The price at which these pills are sold make a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

DIED.

SMITH—On February 1st, Randal James Smith, a little nine-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Smith, went to his reward. Though quite young, he had given his little heart and life to the Saviour. He professed faith in Christ last summer and was baptized. He gave strong evidences of a changed heart in his daily life. On his dying bed of the most severe suffering he was perfectly resigned to the Lord's will without a murmur. His wise little admonitions will never be forgotten by those who stood by his bed in his last hours. In his last hours, while struggling with death, he was heard to say, "Lord, take me if it is thy will," (then pausing for like of strength, finished his broken sentence,) "and not mine."

He told us many times during his sickness about how he loved Jesus, and in his last farewell bade us all to meet him in heaven.

We ought to thank God for the gift of him on whose bosom the children even can and do find sweet rest. May God bless the sorrowing home. A BROTHER.

FICHTE—Mrs. Susan Elizabeth Fichte, wife of Mr. John C. Fichte, died at her home in Gaston county, N. C., January 31st, 1893, in the sixty-first year of her age. She was confined to her room for two months with the disease that terminated in her death. She was a devoted christian member of Castanea Grove Presbyterian church, and made a public profession of faith in Christ more than forty years ago. During these years, she grew constantly in grace, and in her affliction was so spiritually minded that her conversation was chiefly of a religious character. And when death came under the power of dying and victorious grace, she fell asleep in Jesus. In her peaceful and happy death we see verified the truth of the poet—

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

She leaves an affectionate christian husband, four devoted children, two brothers, (Rev. M. A. and Mr. Frank Henderson), four sisters, and a large circle of kindred and friends to mourn her death. But their loss is her eternal gain. May the Lord sustain and comfort the bereaved family, and give to her surviving children such a measure of grace as she herself enjoyed, and at last reunite the entire family in heaven. PASTOR.

BAILEY—On the night of January 28th, at eleven o'clock, the spirit of F. J. Bailey took its flight from earth to the paradise of God. The reason for this statement is taken from the fact that his previous life had been such as to warrant the truthfulness of the statement. For many years he had been a member of the Baptist church, and had led an exemplary christian life, honest in all his dealings with his fellow-man, a kind neighbor, and an affectionate husband, and liberal in the support of the gospel of the Son of God. Three months or more previous to his death he had been confined to his bed, and though he was racked with disease and tortured with pain, not a murmur or word of complaint escaped his lips. The patient man of God, like Job, was willing to trust him in all his dealings, and when asked the question, As the body grows weaker dose the spirit grow stronger? He with great tranquility of spirit remarked that in the sunny days of health and prosperity, and also in the days of sickness and pain, he had trusted Jesus, and still felt that his hand was in the hand of Jesus, and hoped to be able in death to trust him still. Thus the spirit of Bro. Bailey took its flight to the mansions of bliss. While on that Sabbath afternoon the earth about us was wrapped in clouds, and the cold rain came down in fitful showers as his mortal remains were quietly laid to rest in the city cemetery, we could but feel that the spirit of this godly man was basking in the rays of a genial clime.

Had Bro. Bailey lived until next July he would have been fifty-eight years old. He had every attention that a loving devoted christian wife and kind friends could give. Human friends can do much to prepare each other for the journey through the valley of the shadow of death. They may go hand in hand to the very brink of the cold river that rolls between this and the unseen land. They may do much to soothe and sustain each other as the last awful hour draws near. But there is a point beyond which human help cannot go. Every one of us must advance to meet the great and final foe with no human hand on which to lean. And yet, like Bro. Bailey, in that awful hour we need not find ourselves alone. "There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother," and on this friend he leaned and found support.

Blest assurance ever dear,
As our troubles come so fast,
How it does the spirit cheer
To be promised peace at last.

We can stand the driving rains,
We can bide the cutting blast,
While the promise still remains
Of unbroken peace at last.

A FRIEND.

SIMPSON'S 20 DAY
Early Cantaloupe

The Most Delicious and the Earliest of any Melon ever Introduced.

I have been in the trucking business for fifteen years, and I have produced a cantaloupe that is the superior of any in delicacy of flavor and in earliness for the market; and I propose to offer my limited supply of seed to the public at reasonable figures. If the seed of this strain of nutmeg melon were in the hands of some of our seedsmen they would not be sold for less than $5 per pound. Some of the finest strains of melons now offered by our seedsmen at fancy prices—for instance, Johnson's and Stokes Dixie Watermelon—first originated in North Carolina. See the recommendations of two citizens of Greensboro, N. C., (and one hundred could be furnished as readily) and find out what those say who have seen and eaten my new cantaloupe:—

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 25, 1893.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe which you put upon our market last year (1892) was decidedly the most delicious flavored and the earliest I ever ate. I bought largely of you, and I recommend them in the highest terms.
DR. J. G. BRODNAX.

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 26, 1893.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON, Greensboro, N. C.:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe came upon the market the earliest of all, and I was surprised at the earliness of it. I am an old cantaloupe raiser, and I must have some of your seed for this coming season. Yours is a superior melon in every respect, and the very thing for early truckers.

My Guest.

One day I sat dejected,
So sick my heart and sore,
When a stranger unexpected
Knocked softly at the door.

He seemed one poor and needy,
Yet, with such want I sighed,
I gave entrance speedy,
And pressed him to abide.

Then gently like a brother,
He brought me inward cheer,
Till no compassion other
Was half so sweet and dear.

At last I said, "Why sever
The tie that makes me blest!
Abide, O Jesus, ever!"
And he is still my guest.

The Opal and the Goldfinch.

Once when I was riding with Mr. Spurgeon I happened to mention a rumor which had been running through the papers, that he prayed once for a ring and got it. I asked him if that was true. "Oh, no!" he said. "Let me tell you the whole story." And I reproduce it here as accurately as I can remember it, to show the way in which everything, in his view, came to him from God's hand. Mrs. Spurgeon had been very sick, and for the benefit of the sea air he had taken her to Brighton. Leaving her on Thursday morning, when he must go to London to preach, as his wont was always, in the Tabernacle on the evening of that day, he asked her if he could not bring her something which would relieve a little the tedium of her sickness. At first nothing seemed to come to her. In sportive mood she at last said that she would like an opal ring and a piping goldfinch. Lovingly, and yet laughingly, he declared it was quite impossible for him to bring her such things as these. But when he had reached London, and the noon mail came in, and he was opening it as he was sitting at his luncheon, in the mail there was a little box, and, tearing it open, he saw flashing up from it the sheen of an opal ring. Some friend had sent it with a most kindly note, asking Mrs. Spurgeon's acceptance of it, with the hope that its lustre might fling a little light into the gloom of her sick chamber. "What I thought," he said, "when the ring flashed on me, of God's care and goodness, it would be impossible for me to tell." Carefully it was laid away in his pocket, that its brightness might flash pleasure to Mrs. Spurgeon when he should have chance to carry it to her. That very afternoon, as he went on to tell me, he was obliged to visit a gentleman who was very sick—so sick that it was utterly impossible for him to speak aloud, and with whom communication could be had only by writing on a slate. The visit was over, and the prayer offered, and then, as Mr. Spurgeon rose to leave, the wife of the gentleman said to him:

"Mr. Spurgeon, for some years I have made a pet of a piping goldfinch. The only person in the world to whom I would give it is yourself. But the bird makes too much noise for my husband in his weak state, and won't you accept it?"

Mr. Spurgeon said he preached that night in the Tabernacle with the ring in his pocket and the little bird sleeping with his head beneath its wing in a room of the Tabernacle; and the next morning Mrs. Spurgeon had her opal ring and her piping goldfinch. Through the weary hours of that long sickness both were a great delight to her. The bird would sit upon her finger and sing its heart out. When she recovered, the little creature finished its ministry and died.

It struck me as a most wonderful story, but afterward, when I thought about it, it did not seem so wonderful after all. I looked back along my own life and saw many a time when God had given me, and as unexpectedly, what was quite equivalent to an opal ring and a piping goldfinch. But the trouble with me had been that in their giving I had failed to recognize the hand of the heavenly Father. But Mr. Spurgeon was not so stupid. What came to him of brightness and of pleasure, came, to his thinking, straight from the hand of God. It might come through channels intermediate, but always to him God was the initial giver. And so always upon his lips sat praise even for what men would call slight mercies, and the brightness of them was steadily enhanced by his perpetual recognition of the kindness of his heavenly Father.—Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D., in Walks and Talks with Spurgeon.

The Story of a Pin.

Many years ago a nobleman who in some way had offended his king was cast into a dark dungeon. If he could have had books, and a light to read by, time would not have dragged along so drearily, but except for a few moments twice a day when the jailer brought him a crust of bread and cup of water, carrying with him a dim lantern, he never saw one ray of light.

One day he chanced to find a pin sticking in his coat, and he was so pleased with the [illegible] that he laughed outright. "Now I have something to do," he exclaimed [illegible] voice. He then took the pin [illegible] on the floor, after which he got [illegible] and began to search for [illegible] as he had it in his fingers, he threw it down again, that he might have the pleasure of hunting for it again.

This process was repeated day after day, and month after month, and year after year, until six long years were spent alone in the dungeon. Alone—except with such companionship as the pin afforded. He afterwards declared that this employment, simple as it was, kept him from growing wild.

After he was set free and had gone back to his beautiful home, he had a memento made from this brass pin which had given him so much pleasure. He had it set around with costly diamonds, the very finest that could be procured. When his wife inquired, why in the centre of the group he had placed the head of a common brass pin, he told her its story, and added, "I will not part with that pin as long as I live, for it was the means of saving my life."

This is a true story, and from it every girl and boy may learn that no idler can be happy. To get the most out of life, we must have some regular employment—work or study, and try to keep busy, every hour of the day.

Satan finds some mischief still,
For idle hands to do.

A Curious Clock.

A curious clock, destined for the World's Fair at Chicago, has been made by a clockmaker at Warsaw, named Goldfaden, who has worked at it six years. The clock represents a railway station, with waiting rooms for the traveler, telegraph and ticket offices, a very pretty, well lighted platform, and a flower garden, in the centre of which is a sparkling fountain of clear water. Past the railway station run the lines. There are also signal-boxes, lights and reservoirs—in fact, everything that belongs to a railway station, to the smallest detail. In the cupola of the central tower is a clock which shows the time of the place; two clocks in the side cupolas show the time at New York and Pekin; and on the two outermost towers are a calendar and a barometer. Every quarter of an hour the station begins to show signs of life. First of all the telegraph official begins to work. He despatches a telegram stating that the line is clear. The door opens, and on the platform appear the station master and his assistant; the clerk is seen at the window of the ticket office; and the pointsmen come out of their boxes and close the barriers. A long line of people form at the ticket office to buy tickets; porters carry luggage; the bell is rung, and then out of the tunnel comes a train, and after the engine has given a shrill whistle, stops. A workman goes from carriage to carriage and tests the axles with a hammer. Another pumps water into the boiler of the engine. After the third signal with the bell the engine whistles, and the train disappears into the opposite tunnel; the station master and his assistants leave the platform and the doors of the waiting room close behind them; the pointsmen return into their boxes and perfect stillness prevails till, in a quarter of an hour, the whole is repeated.—Home Journal.

Dishonest Men Value Honesty.

A young man came one day with a case of conscience. He was corresponding clerk in a flourishing house of business. His employer had begun to direct him to write letters to customers containing statements which he knew to be false. He had objected and they said:

"We are responsible for these statements; it is nothing to you whether they are true or false."

I said to him, "Do they sign the letters, or ask you to write them in your own name?"

As soon as the question had left my lips I saw that, if there was a difference, both would be wrong, and I hastened to tell him so. He said: "I have to sign them with my name pro B'ank."

I said, "Your case is perfectly clear; you must decline to do it."

He said, "Then I shall be dismissed," and after a pause—"I have a wife and family."

I met him some days after.

"Well, Mr. ——," said I, "how are you getting on now!"

He replied, "I am still in my situation; I had an interview with the partners, and I told them I would not write letters I knew to be untrue; they were very angry, and I expected to receive notice, but I have not received it yet."

Months passed, and he remained in his situation. After a while he called on me, and I saw by his face something had happened.

"Well, Mr. ——," I said, "have you had your dismissal?"

"No," he said, "I have not," and smiled.

"What then?"

"A very confidential post in their service, with a higher salary, has fallen vacant, and they have put me into it."

On second thought, these unprincipled men had come to the conclusion that a clerk who would not deceive a customer would not deceive them, and was too valuable to be lost.—Selected.

When to Wind a Watch.

A gentleman who had purchased a handsome new watch complained to the jeweler who sold it to him that it did not keep accurate time. It varied at least a minute to a week, when it should have kept time to a second.

"Let me see your watch," said the jeweler. He critically examined the works through his glass, closed the case, and handed the timepiece to its owner.

"There is nothing the matter with your watch. It will keep perfect time if you wind it in the morning."

"Why, I wind it at a certain hour each night," said the gentleman.

"That has nothing to do with it," responded the clerk. "During the night your watch is quiet, as it were. That is, it hangs in your vest without motion or touch. If you don't wind it at night the mainspring is then relaxed instead of being in that condition during the day. By winding it in the morning the mainspring remains close and tight all day. It keeps the movement steady at a time when you are handling it, running around and more or less jarring it as you hasten about the city attending to your daily affairs. A relaxed mainspring at this time accounts for the fine watches varying slightly. Try it, and you will find that I am right."—Albany Argus.

Master Pin and Lady Needle.

A pin and a needle, being neighbors in a work-basket, and both being idle folk, began to quarrel, as idle folk are apt to do.

"I should like to know," said the pin, "what you are good for, and how you expect to get through the world without a head."

"What is the use of your head," replied the needle, rather sharply, "if you have no eye?"

"What is the use of an eye," said the pin, "if there is always something in it?"

"I am more active, and can go through more work than you can," said the needle.

"Yes, but you will not live long, because you have always a stitch in the side," said the pin.

"You are a poor, crooked creature," said the needle.

"And you are so proud that you can't bend without breaking your back," retorted the pin.

"I'll pull your head off if you insult me again."

"I'll pull your eye out if you touch me; remember, your life hangs on a single thread," said the pin.

While they were thus conversing a little girl entered, and, undertaking to sew, she very soon broke off the needle at the eye. She then tied the thread around the neck of the pin and attempted to sew with it, but pulled its head off and threw it into the dirt by the side of the broken needle.

"Well, here we are," said the needle.

"We have nothing to fight about now," said the pin. "It seems misfortune has brought us to our senses."

"A pity we had not come to them sooner," said the needle. "How much we resemble human beings, who quarrel about their blessipgs till they lose them, and never find out they are brothers till they lie down in the dust together, as we do."—Selected.

The Glorious Manifestation.

BY REV. C. E. W. DOBBS, D. D.

That is a precious passage left us by John: "Beloved, now are we children of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. We know that if he shall be manifested, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." In the margin of the Revised Version, instead of the first "he," we have the neuter "it." This raises the question, "To what antecedent does the pronoun refer?" Who is it that is to appear, and how will his appearing accomplish the wonderful change desired? The Greek verb phanerothee here is without the pronoun, and, therefore, may be rendered with either he or it. If we adopt the latter, the antecedent would be the "what" (ti) of the preceding sentence. This would give a fine meaning to the Apostle's words. That we are now the children of God is a guaranty of final perfection. That perfection, however, is not yet made manifest, either to ourselves or to the world. One day it will be so manifested, and all shall see the glory of our blessed condition. If this be the meaning of John, then we must render it, not he.

Upon the whole, the Revised Version, which in the text here follows the old version, is to be preferred. The personal pronoun he better agrees with the him that follows. Christ is the antecedent subject. The Apostle writes of the glorious manifestation of the Saviour, which was the hope of the early christians (Tit. 2: 13), the coming of the Lord. He had just exhorted, "And now, my little children, abide in him, that if he shall be manifested, we may have boldness, and not be ashamed before him, at his coming." (Chap. 2: 28). This is only two verses removed from the text under consideration, though the close connection of the original is obscured by the human division into chapters and verses. In neither place does John use the personal pronoun, though we see at once its necessity in rendering the former passage. Equally so in the latter.

Other passages would seem to confirm this view. Paul rejoiced in the hope, "When Christ, who is our life, shall be manifested, then shall ye also with him be manifested in glory." (Col. 3: 4). He expected the fullness of the inheritance only when "the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." For that hope—"the redemption of our body"—he waited in patience. (Rom. 8: 21—25). The glory would be consummated only when the Lord should return from heaven—"from whence also we wait for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory." (Phil. 3: 20, 21). The manifested glory of Jesus and his saints is to be at his second coming, at the end of the mediatorial reign. Then "we shall be like him." The called of God are "foreordained to be conformed to the image of his Son." (Rom. 8: 29). This blessed purpose of the Father will not be fulfilled till we attain moral and spiritual perfection in the resurrection body. Then shall we shine in the manifested glory of the risen and perfect human nature. Between death and the second coming of Jesus, the believer will be "with Christ"—"at home with the Lord;" but he will not reach the full likeness to Christ, anticipated by John, till the final day of triumph.

The Apostle gives a reason for his hope: "For we shall see him as he is." Shall the final sight of the manifested Christ be instrumental in perfecting our spiritual likeness to him? Some so understood this phrase. As if the vision of the glorified Master were necessary to burn up all imperfection in his disciples. But such seems not to be the force of John's words. Rather he gives an evidential reason. Only those born again can see the kingdom of God. Only spiritual eyes can discern spiritual things. Only the pure in heart can see God. So only a perfected spiritual nature can see Christ in his manifested glory. The fact that "we shall see him as he is" implies that we shall have been made "like him" through the grace of God.

Contributions to Baptist Work and Where They Come From.

As the minutes of the recent Baptist State Convention have lately been sent out to leading brethren of the State, I desire, while the matter is still fresh in their minds, to direct attention to some facts bearing especially on the financial exhibit as revealed by an analysis of the statistics of the different Associations.

I congratulate the denomination that the report of the Corresponding Secretary shows the largest grand total for all objects of any year within our history. Progress is shown in all departments of our work. The column in the financial table headed "contributions to all objects" with many blank spaces, due to the fact that no reports were made by clerks of Associations in time for the minutes, still shows $198,447.77 for the North Carolina Convention, $22,584 29 for Western North Carolina Convention, making a total for the entire State of $21,032.06. To be precise, the above sum is derived from thirty five Associations; and the amounts given, but not reported, by the other twenty four Associations would largely increase it. I think $250,000 would be quite a conservative estimate for the whole State. But of the amount reported, a glance at the table shows that the larger proportion was contributed by nine Associations, viz.: Central, $9,421.68; Atlantic, $10,854 96; Eastern, $13,128.68; Raleigh, $13,867.17; Robeson, $14,607.73; Buncombe, $16,535 45; West Chowan, $17,013 89; Tar River, $18,076 55, and Chowan, $19,772.03, making $113,278 14, or more than one half. This is not because the churches of these Associations contain more members, for the membership of the churches composing the other twenty-four Associations exceeds the former by more than eighteen thousand. Broadly speaking, one fourth of the Associations, with a little more than one third of the membership, gave more than all the others.

So much for a comparison of the stronger and weaker Associations. "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Let us apply the test of interest in the Lord's work as indicated by contributions per church member. Tried by this standard, the stronger Associations still stand well as shown in the following: Eastern, $1.91; West Chowan, $2.04; Chowan, $2.75; Tar River, $2 83; Raleigh, $2.89; Central, $3 02; Robeson, $3.06; Atlantic, $4.98; Buncombe, $5 71; the latter being the banner Association of the State. Little Richmond leads the Associations of the Baptist State Convention with an average of $5.37 per member; but if union is effected with the Anson, as contemplated, the average will fall to $3.61 per member. In that case the Beulah would become the banner Association of the Baptist State Convention, with an average of $5 04 per member. The Beulah, organized in 1834, and venerable with age, sends greeting to her young and progressive sister beyond the mountains. This showing of the Beulah becomes interesting in the light of some remarks recently indulged in at her expense by some good brethren to the effect that having outlived her day of usefulness, she is bordering on final dissolution, and that her history is not such as to be referred to with pride. By some she is looked upon as dead already, and the writer confesses to having sympathized with this view, and to have entertained the propriety of holding an inquest over the remains, and making an autopsy to ascertain, if possible, the cause of death. If any one should still think her death impending, she begs leave to submit the above figures as her ante-mortem statement, and if others should consider her already dead, I claim for her the distinction of being the livest corpse in the Baptist State Convention. If she be dead, or lingering in a state of mortal illness, I raise the question as to the state of even some of the stronger Associations, as the Eastern, Chowan, West Chowan, Tar River, Raleigh, Central, Robeson and Atlantic.

Applying the Beulah's membership aver age to the membership of the nine stronger Associations, the sum is found to be $234, 304.56, or more than was reported for all purposes from the entire State last year.

What about North Carolina's quota of $15,000 for the "Centennial Fund," and $15,000 for State Missions in the light of these figures? The question is absurd, for they show that the nine stronger Associations could furnish the funds for the support of all departments of our work for this year, and yet show an advance over last year of more than thirteen thousand dollars.

Applying the same basis of calculation to the entire membership of the State, we find that what would now be considered, the enormous sum of $730,971.36 would flow into the Baptist treasury. I know that the actual collection of this amount in one year will be regarded as the vision of a dreamer, and its accomplishment in the near future as betokening the dawn, if not the ushering in, of the millenium. It would seem that there are large numbers of our people who have not even apprehended the possibilities of growth along the line of giving as well as numbers. The same is true, also, with reference to the basic principle underlying the foundation of our denomination—that of giving the gospel to the people—the destitute of the State as well as the nations of the world. But have these calculations no practical bearing on the enlargement of our work? "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord of Hosts" comprehended the vitalization, by the presence and power of Jehovah, of the gifts of his people in his service. I think I see some parallel between the condition of our own people and that to whom the above language was addressed. See Haggai 1: 4–6. It is not so much a lack of means, but rather the withholding of what we have that hinders the work. I believe that if our people would obey the injunction, "consider your ways," and would consecrate their means to the service of the Lord along the lines indicated by the above calculations, it would do more to bring about material prosperity in the State than a thousand "sub-treasury bills."

A variation of the prophet's question might be propounded in this connection to the more prosperous Associations, "Is it time for you to dwell and worship in your ceiled houses, and the Lord's cause lie waste in other less favored sections of the State?"

I appeal to the brethren of these Associations not to suffer their visions to be obscured by the grand total sent up from their Associations, but to consider their responsibility as revealed by a comparison with a so called dead Association. There are extenuating circumstances connected with the failure on the part of many Associations to come up to a high average per church member; but I submit that they do not apply to the stronger Associations named. A little reflection will show that within their territories are embraced our largest centers of wealth and intelligence. In point of ability to give, there is not one of them inferior to the Beulah. Will not the pastors of churches in these Associations bring to the attention of their churches the above comparison which, bear in mind, is with a so-called dead Association? A comparison of the Beulah with some of the older Associations may be of interest. The Chowan organized in 1805, Raleigh 1805, Tar River 1830, and Eastern 1803, have already been mentioned. The Flat River, organized in 1793, contributed per church member $1.91; Green River (1840) $1.09; King's Mountain (1851) $1.53; Liberty (1833) $1.81; Sandy Creek (1751) 92c.; Three Forks (1840) 66c.; and Tuckasiege (1829) 58c. As to numbers of churches the Beulah is far behind the older Associations, but in this connection she points with pride and admiration to her growing offspring, the Pilot Mountain, with which as a representative of the young and live Associations, I will make one more comparison. This shows that the Pilot Mountain contributed $2 72 per church member, or a little more than half as much as the Beulah average.

Submitting this imperfect investigation of the sources of contributions to Baptist work to the earnest consideration of the brethren of the other Associations of the State, what of its effect on the future work of the Beulah? Will she rest on her record of last year as glory enough, repudiate her past history, and go into voluntary dissolution? Or will she, encouraged by the past, take a new lease on life, enlarge the place of her tent, stretch forth the curtains of her habitations, lengthen her cords and strengthen her stakes, and reclaim from oblivion whatever is valuable in her past history? These questions seem pertinent in view of the agitation which is going on in the minds of some of the brethren, and to present fairly the issue involved. Conceding to others liberty of opinion and the right to form their own conclusions, with the present lights before me I find no hesitancy in deciding on which side of this issue I stand. I am in favor of a reorganization of the Association on the lines of future growth and usefulness by enlarging her territory and with the retention of the old name, but to a dissolution, and formation of a new Association on a part of her ruins, I am unconditionally opposed.

As the matter will come up for discussion at the next meeting of the Association, and involving as it does the issue of life or death, I bring it to the attention of the brethren of the different churches in order that they may arrive at a conclusion in harmony with the best interests of our work.

CONCLUDING REFLECTIONS.

If our denominational statistics are to be used as a basis for calculations, the more accurate the statistics the more correct will be the conclusions based on them.

The minutes of the recent Convention show negligence on the part of more than twenty clerks of Associations in failing to send report or minutes to recording secretaries of the Convention. The minutes of the Associations are often far from being correct, due to careless and incompetent church clerks in making out church letters to the Association, and the churches ought to be impressed that the remedy ultimately lies with them by electing only intelligent and competent clerks. The minutes of the Convention ought to show value of church property, and to this end a column for this purpose should be added to the circular church letter to the Association.

I make this request in the interest of a correct report of the value of church property in the South for the American Baptist Year Book. Heretofore the clerks of the Associations in this State in making reports to Dr. Burrows, the editor, have been obliged to guess at the value of church property in their respective Associations, or leave that heading blank. Hoping that the foregoing may bear some fruit in the enlargement of Baptist work, I remain,

Fraternally,

F. P. TUCKER.

Ruffin, N. C., Feb. 7, 1893.

Perpetuation of the Pastoral Relation.

Keep your pastor, and he will keep you. A pastor is a shepherd, and a shepherd is a watcher and feeder of the flock of Christ. The true, called of God pastor studies diligently the spiritual interest of those for whom God has made him an under-shepherd. He knows more about their weakness, their strength, their real and varied wants than a novice, or one inexperienced among them possibly could know. The model church in the old Pee Dee Association kept her pastor for more than fifty years, and up to the day of his death that church (Spring Hill) manifested no desire to change pastors. But upon the contrary they unitedly and affectionately clung to him till the Lord called him from his labors on earth to his reward in heaven. And that church, for whom Elder John Monroe so wisely and faithfully labored for more than half a century, was during that long period justly regarded the model church of the Pee Dee Association.

But we have very few John Monroes in the world, and perhaps equally as few Spring Hill churches. There was something remarkable about Father Monroe's ministration of the word. It was a very rare thing indeed for any one professing faith in Christ under his ministry to ever again turn back to the world and fade out as a follower of Christ. But it is impossible for all churches to have such a pastor as Father Monroe was, and it is improbable for us to have many such churches as Spring Hill is. Therefore a change of pastors may occasionally be necessary and best for both church and pastor. But I am satisfied that I have seen almost ruinous results from too frequent change of pastor—at least seriously damaging to both parties. My observation for more than thirty years is that when a church has a good pastor, they ought to keep him a long time if possible. Pray for him and encourage him in every possible way that we can by meeting him punctually at the church, and also by paying him promptly what they promise him.

But while I admit that the pastor may sometimes be in fault for frequent changes, I believe that churches are mostly blamable in this matter. For instance, a church has a good pastor with a somewhat scattered membership; they have a weekly prayer-meeting and Sunday school of tolerable interest run by a portion of the members. But as is the case in most country churches, there is a portion of indifferent, delinquent members that hardly ever go to church only on special occasions, although they are wonderfully gifted in rendering excuses for their absence, and equally ingenious in framing excuses for paying almost nothing to the cause of religion; and yet they are tolerably good citizens, and will treat the pastor kindly when he goes to see them, but they go to church only once in a while. But when they become fully conscious that their pastor knows them by heart, how little they do for him or the church, they are ashamed to meet him; so they begin to want a new preacher, that don't know them so well. In the mean time they go down to Goose Creek and hear Bro. Sensational preach. Of course they are wonderfully carried away with him. They say, "Oh! if we just had such a preacher as he is, we would have a perfect camp-meeting all the year round." So they commence in good earnest to get him to help their pastor in the protracted meeting. He comes; preaches some of his big, stirring, favorite sermons; and the last one of these spasmodic members go, rain or shine, day or night till the protracted meeting is over. Then worse than no more in twelve months, or till the next protracted meeting, unless the time comes to call a pastor.

Now brethren, a little wisdom and grace, timely and carefully exercised, would save all this trouble and confusion, and keep the church in a healthy and prosperous condition.

I, therefore, exhort the churches to hold on to their pastors till the Lord in his providence makes it apparent to both church and pastor that a change is necessary.

In conclusion, let me beg the churches while in the exercise of their independence and christian rights in calling their pastors, to do so considerately, prayerfully, and with special reference to the honor and glory of the Great Head of the Church.

Thoughts.

BY SCATTERHEAD.

"And he looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury. And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites. And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all: for all these of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her want hath cast in all the living that she had." Luke 21.

A great deal has been said about the "widow's mite," when it should be mites. Many folks these days think that the Lord estimates our offerings according to the value in dollars and cents, but he is not disposed to look at things as we corrupted mortals are inclined to do. Man looks on the outward appearance and sees the actions, and God looks at the heart and beholds the motives. The poor widow's offering was very small, only about two-fifths of a cent, and yet the Saviour said she cast in more than the rich fellows. I imagine some of the rich Pharisees strutted up to the treasury and flung in some pretty big coins, maybe to be seen of the blessed Master and the balance of the people, but the Lord took special notice of the woman's gift, and said, she gave more than any of the others. We suppose she gave more in proportion to the sacrifice she made. The rich men, we may suppose, gave liberally, but they had plenty left after making their offerings, and out of their abundance, they did not miss what they gave; so they made no sacrifice. The poor widow gave but little, but she of her want, out of her poverty, gave all she had, and she had nothing to eat that day; she fasted that she might cast into the treasury, though it was but two mites; so she made a sacrifice and gave till she felt it. Mighty few church members these days would fast a whole day in order to give to the Lord's cause. Some people at the "meeting house" get powerful impatient during the sermon, and want the preacher to cut matters short, so that they can get home for early dinner. Well, it is a mighty fast for some folks to go five hours without eating.

It would be a monstrous nice thing if the tobacco users would all take a fast while in the meeting-house. This is a wonderful fast age, but it can't be called a fasting one. Well, it would be a good thing in the eyes of the Lord and some of his people, for the tobacco users to proclaim a fast that would continue the remainder of their days. Some of the best people on earth use the weed, and perhaps they would tarry long with us if they had no bad habits. We are told to make no "provisions for the flesh to fulfil the lusts" of the same, and to "abstain from all fleshly lusts which war against the soul." Many poor church members will live on half rations, and sometimes do without anything to eat so they can pander to the desires of the flesh and buy tobacco, whiskey, opium, &c., such things as they should not use. Lots of people will make sacrifices for Satan, and he has a mighty big treasury.

The poor widow gave all she had to live on for that day; she went hungry not that she might buy wine or a robe, but that she might give her all to her God in whom she was so absorbed she forgot her own comfort, forgot self. Jesus is now looking down, not up, and gives credit for the offerings made by his people, not according to the money value, but according to the "motives and sacrifices with which they are made." A penny given in the spirit of love and at a sacrifice such as the Lord will own and bless, will accomplish more than a thousand dollars not thus given.

Lots of offerings are made in the Lord's name that he will not accept, and therefore will not advance his cause nor prove a blessing to the giver. Poor christians should be encouraged to make their offerings to the Lord, though quite small they be, from the Saviour's praise of the poor widow's gift, knowing that he is ever looking down upon us, and is well pleased with the offerings of all his people whether great or small, when they are tokens of hearts filled with his love, and the sacrifices made are for his name's sake and glory. Offerings of the Lord's poor should be prized. We should not despise the day of small things. "God can thrash a mountain with a worm." The Lord can accomplish wonders with mighty sorry means. His ways are not ours, neither are his thoughts. Sometimes christians get so faithless that in order to do a job of work for the Lord, they must raise a fixed amount of money and engage a certain number of men to accomplish the proposed work, and then with all make a complete failure. The Lord might choose to accomplish the same work though a very base instrument.

Let us endeavor to realize that the Lord Jesus is beholding his treasury, and that he expects us all to give as he directs in his word, "as we are prospered," ever remembering his precious words, "it is more blessed to give than to receive." We should learn, too, from the lesson under consideration that the gift most pleasing to our Lord is not the one from our abundance, but the one from our deep want, and one that will cost us a real sacrifice.

Let all christians give from pure motives, and give till they miss it. Some church members can do some powerful loud singing; very nice talking, mighty big crying, and monstrous long praying, but are wonderful grum when the contribution box is poked at them, as they don't take much stock in the substantial part of worship. Some people put a pretty low estimate on the value of their religion, judging from their contributions. Is it possible that we are not willing to deny ourselves in order that Christ's cause might be advanced? If we realize the truth deep down in our souls that we are not our own, but belong to the Lord Jesus, being bought with his own precious blood, surely we will not have the Satanic disposition to want to withhold anything from him. Money is needed to carry on the Lord's work, and he wants his people to honor him and give freely of their means in any way the Holy Spirit may direct. We can never make the sacrifice our adorable Redeemer made, but we must possess the same mind, and be willing to live a life of self-denial for him "who loved us and gave himself for us." Soon our struggles will be over, and we shall behold our [illegible] treasure, our eternal all, to-wit, the Jesus, shall see him as he is and be like him. Christians, don't your hearts leap at his appearing, and what would become of us without Christ!

No matter where we walk, we will be followed by somebody.

AMERICAN FLUNKYISM.

We glory in America, and we believe in American institutions. Take it altogether, we think our country is the most highly favored by God among all the nations of the earth. We would rather live in America than in any other land, and when we reach the end of our pilgrimage we wish our bones to rest among those of our fathers. Certain great principles have operated, under God, in making America what she is; and this is true especially of these United States. Our people have always been noted as a liberty-loving people; for their opposition to any union between Church and State; for their sturdy advocacy of the doctrine of "equal rights to all, but special privileges to none;" and, as a rule, for their opposition to all forms of priestcraft, and any spiritual domination over the consciences and religious rights of men. These things being so, it is needful that certain tendencies, noticeable especially among those who represent us at our seat of government, and those who hold offices of public trust and honor, should be watched, and when they pass the bounds of true Americanism, sternly rebuked by the constituency of those who hold office. Following this line of thought, all true lovers of American customs, habits of belief, &c., can but deplore such flunkyism as is aptly described in the following paragraph, contained in a recent copy of Society News published at Washington City:—

"The apostolic delegate Mgr. Satolli had the pleasure of meeting yesterday, at Mr. Dahlgren's, most of the prominent persons, (italics ours), in the official, resident, and diplomatic society of the capital. The opportunity of meeting such a distinguished churchman is rare, even in this city, especially just now, when Monsignor Satolli occupies the public eye to such a large extent; not only for the importance of the mission that has brought him to this country, but the interesting personality of the prelate himself. From 5 to 6:30 Mrs. Dahlgren's rooms were occupied by a company who thoroughly enjoyed the occasion. Unfortunately, Monsignor Satolli speaks no English; but Rev. Father Daugherty of St. Augustine's church so played the part of interpreter that all who desired to do more than pay their respects were gratified. Next to the special guest, stood Right Rev. Bishop Keane, whose acquaintance is so large that he was a stranger to comparatively few of those present. Both the prelates wore their purple-bound cassocks, purple silk ferrolas; and around the neck of the papal ablegate was a thick gold chain, to which a pictorial cross, also of gold and richly jewelled, was suspended. Most of the visitors in greeting both prelates knelt to kiss their rings, a ceremony in which Washington society is becoming quite adept."

Aha! here we have it; a pure case of American flunkyism! In reading the above paragraph we confess feeling, somewhere about us, a sensation very like that of a friend of ours who, in describing the effect produced on him by receiving a letter from his sweetheart which discarded him, said "it made me sick at the stomach." Any true American on reading this would be apt to have a feeling very similar to that of Spurgeon when he once said to his students, "The man who intones deserves a cheque written with my toe." It would be quite interesting to have the names of all that the Society News includes under the head of "official, resident, and diplomatic society of the capital." It is plain enough as to what persons are included under the resident and diplomatic society of the capital; but that term official may include quite a host, and some names that the people at large would like to see in print just in this connection, if indeed those who bear them were present and participated in the ring-kissing ceremony. Were any of our Senators or Representatives in the long procession that showed their respects to the papal ablegate? Did any of them kneel and kiss the ring on his finger? The people at home would like to know. A day of reckoning is coming, and many of them will again ask "the dear people" for their votes, and it is quite likely that some of the "dear people" would cast their ballots for somebody else if they knew that those who represent them [illegible] the halls of Congress had misrepresented [illegible] the recent gathering at Mr. Dahl-[illegible]ner to whom honor is due," is a time-[illegible] saying, and this honor can be [illegible]n Mans or the people of any other [illegible] Americans, without belittling [illegible] bringing the blush of shame to the cheek of him who remembers what a struggle his fathers had to free themselves from the oppressive yoke of that master and that system that Mgr. Satolli so truly represents. And this kneeling before any mortal celebrity, home or foreign, is it not utterly contrary to our notions of propriety and the fitness of things? And this ring-kissing business:—how silly and puerile the whole thing is! It carries us back to the days of feudalism, yea worse, of religious slavery and serfdom. Ah! this kissing of toes and rings will do for the beggars of Rome and the Lazzeroni of Naples, but not for American freemen, and especially for American christians.

The truth of it is, our English cousins borrowing from Rome and from senseless traditions are great on baubles, and we borrow much from them. One can but admire the manhood and common sense of the great Cromwell who, when he had suppressed the British Parliament, said of the gaudy mace lying on one of the tables, "What shall we do with this bauble? take it away!". This love of baubles, aping of English customs, admiration for royalty, have had their effect on American society. And this wearing of costly jewelry by those who claim to be embassadors of the meek and lowly Nazarene!—is there not inconsistency here? We confess that when we had read the above fulsome description of the "thick gold chain around the neck of the papal ablegate" we were forcibly reminded of the collar placed around the dog's neck by his master. We don't mean to compare the ablegate to a dog; but one thing is certain, the Pope is his master, and if by such offices as he holds, and the gewgaws that accompany these offices, such as purple-bound cassocks, silk ferrolas, golden chains, pendant pectoral crosses, that some men of decided ability are more readily retained, and hence render to the Pope more cheerful obedience.

Disguise it as you may, this thing of kneeling before men as an acknowledgment of their religious authority, is a species of idolatry. If it ever were excusable to bow before any being except God, in a religious capacity, John had found that being in the person of the angel that he mentions in the last chapter of Revelation; but the answer was, "See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God."

For the sake of decency, then, for the sake of common sense, and for the sake of the religion of Jesus our Saviour, we sincerely hope that such exhibitions of American flunkyism as that mentioned above will cease at Washington City. We are not at all surprised that some of the diplomatic corps were among the first to rush to the Dahlgren reception, for many of these represent Catholic countries, and some of them have more decorations than brains. The wonder is that Americans have so far forgotten the history of the past as to be led by such social lights (?) into customs that are utterly foreign to American habits. Let us be true to the principles of our government. The tremendous moral and physical influence that America has abroad is largely to be accounted for by the fact that the crowned and uncrowned heads of Europe, Asia, Africa, and of the world at large, know that we have here over sixty million of freemen, free in body and free in soul. Let us not seek to be bound again. Christ teaches us to recognize no one as our spiritual master except himself; but that is what one does when he kisses the Pope's toe, or kneels before his legate in Italy or America. God forbid that we should despise our birthright!

A DISTINGUISHED judge south of us, now a member of the Supreme Court of his State, after the close of a great and an important convention over which he was called to preside, and where there were many conflicting opinions and interest to be settled largely by committees, said: "No man ever presented to me a list of names from which I was expected or requested to name any committee." This was a fine compliment to the men interested in the great questions before that convention, but a much greater compliment (though not thus designed) to the incorruptible character of the judge himself.

We should be glad to know whether the gentlemen who preside over our present General Assembly could say as much as did this judge referred to above, and if not, we would like to have the names of the men who have handed them list of names for committees, especially the committees on education and propositions and grievances.

BRO. J. C. CADDELL, our travelling correspondent, jumped from a hack, to which a pair of frightened horses were attached, in Lumberton, last week, and was so badly jolted by jumping that he could not travel for a few days; but we hope before this reaches our readers he will be able to resume his journeyings.

....Is it not more reasonable to suppose that man has degenerated, or evolved downward, into an ape, than to suppose that he has evolved upward from an ape? But there is no truth in either statement.

....Would it not be a good thing to unite the Central and Raleigh Associations in one body, and thus secure a large, strong, and influential Association here in the center of the State? The brethren are thinking about it.

....The Cape Fear and Columbus Associations were not consolidated as was expected at their meeting appointed for that purpose in part in January. The brethren seemed not to understand each other. But they will later.

....Rev. Hugh C. Smith of Martinsville, Va., says he likes the place; has just moved into a beautiful pastorium. He expects to have Rev. J. E. Hutson to aid him in a meeting in March.

....Mrs. Ada C. Bell, wife of Rev. T. P. Bell, Assistant Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, died at her home in Richmond, Va., on the 13th inst. We extend our hearty sympathy to our bereaved Bro. Bell, and trust the Lord will abundantly sustain him in this sad affliction.

....At the meeting of the W. C. T. U. in St. Louis there was a banquet. The caterer put a separate table for the colored sisters, but the white ones could not consent to such separation, and all sat down together.—Western Recorder.

....The jury in the case of J. T. Clark, who killed Rev. J. R. Moffett last fall, after a trial of ten days, on last Friday returned a verdict of guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and fixed his punishment at five years in the penitentiary.

....The Rev. J. H. Nelson, Methodist, is in jail in Para, Brazil, serving out a four months' sentence for saying that the worship of the Virgin Mary is idolatry. That is what Romanism does where it has the power.—Western Recorder.

....Science seems to show that physical life involves death; but the "tree of life" was near enough to the first two on earth to have secured physical immortality, but for the cherubims and the flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.

....The State Chronicle's promptness in publishing the account of the public debate at the anniversary of the Literary Societies of Wake Forest College last Saturday morning is highly commendable. The debate was on Friday afternoon, and an elaborate account of it appeared next morning in the paper.

....Rev. S. F. Conrad has made arrangements with R. H. Woodward & Co., of Baltimore, to furnish a good book (Life, Wit and Wisdom of C. H. Spurgeon,) and a six months membership in their "Book Buyer's Bureau," for $1.25, as a means of raising money to finish paying for the churches at Walnut Cove and Ruffin. See advertisement.

....In attempting to settle a pastor a church wrote asking whether the wife of the prospective pastor could lead the woman's prayer-meeting, preside over the sewing society, speak in public on temperance, and head the social purity campaign. In reply it was stated that they had left out one important matter upon which exact information was necessary. Namely, they had forgotten to say what salary they intended to pay the minister's wife.—Central Baptist.

....Rev. D. W. Herring said in his address at Mt. Gilead, "there was less interest in the churches on Foreign Missions than there was seven years ago." Our brother is mistaken, as all the facts and contributions show. The subject presents itself to him from a different standpoint. Then he was among our churches as the regular appointee of the Board of Foreign Missions, and was warmly received and heartily endorsed by pastors and brethren as our own representative and missionary. Now he is among our churches in opposition to the plans of the Foreign Mission Board, and many of our best and wisest pastors and brethren, who love Bro. Herring, regard his present effort as tending to disorganize the Foreign Mission work, and to be hurtful to the spirit of missions by creating the impression that there is confusion.

Letter from Pine Knot.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I see so many letters in the dear old RECORDER from every which away that I concluded one was due from this section. I am nothing of a writer, as it were, and my spelling may not be up with some of the new ways, but I believe you editors always fix up what is lacking, and so I will do the best I can and leave you to do the rest.

It has been powerful dull all through this piny woods country since Christmas. We had a big snow fall on Monday night following Christmas day, and from that time on until now it has been snow, sleet or rain.

We have all read every old newspaper we could lay our hands on, and each of the family goes almost wild every Wednesday as the mail carrier calls by to leave our RECORDER. I am sorry you don't publish much news from the legislature. But it may be that they are not doing much. Well, I reckon, after all it is best they should do but little. Bro. Taylor certainly wrote a searching letter to Mr. Kitchin on the subject of the University and denominational schools, and I have wondered what the Legislature is going to do about it.

It does seem to me that unless there is some change in the way things is going on, the denominational colleges might as well close their doors, for of course the longest pole will get the persimmon every time, and there is nothing to prevent the University having the longest pole if the tax-payers of the State furnish it.

But after all, is it not our fault? There are voters enough in the State behind the denominational colleges to put a stop to that which is wrong and we are in our own light if we don't do it. We can stand it two years more if we must, and then we should vote only for such men as will give us relief.

You have a great many queer things going on up there in Raleigh. One of my neighbors had to go to town the other day and he brought me a lot of old papers from our editors office, and among them was a daily published in your city. I see its date is that of last Sunday.

It had been so long since I had got hold of a fresh political paper that I read about everything in it.

Things certainly seem lively up there and such visiting from house to house, drinking punch, showing fine gowns, as the paper has it, I never heard the like of in my life. There was no mention of all the stores being closed, but I don't see how any business could be attended to.

I read also about private dancing parties having a good time at the Governor's Palace. That did not strike me well at all. We farmers have been wanting a Governor of our own a long time and I felt very proud as I have thought of getting to Raleigh to see one, but since I read about that dancing at the Palace I feel disappointed.

It does seem to me that the Governor's Palace ought to be a place where the minister of the gospel or the humblest citizen could go without being grieved at anything so worldly and out of place as a dance. Dancing has given our churches in this section a great deal of trouble and I regret that our farmer Governor has given it such recognition as to throw open the Palace to it.

It may be that we are behind the times down here. Do they have balls and dances in the White House at Washington?

The paper said that Lent was to begin on Wednesday and the dance at the Palace of last Saturday night would be the last till Lent was over. That also appeared strange to me. What does it mean? Are only Episcopalians allowed to have balls at the Palace. Suppose some persons should want to have a quilting at the Palace, do you reckon it would be allowed?

Well, I expect from what I read of the punch and gowns and the teas and luncheons, the germans, &c., that it is a good thing for something to occur to put a stop to it that you may have a breathing spell.

Oh, Brother Bailey, if you knew the condition of the people in the country. If you knew how depressed we all are as we think of the many real things we need without a dollar to buy them. If you know how we have had to rake and scrape to keep buckle and tongue together, you would know how sickening and shocking was much of the worldly gay doings that I read of is.

It was like reading about the last days of Sodom and Gomorrah. May the Lord spare Raleigh from their fate.

I have written a long letter but I find so much on my mind that I will have to write you again if you think enough of this to print it. Yours truly,

WILLIAM RICHARDS.

The Luke-Peter Episode.

Luke's joke on Peter is a good one. It ought to be known and used. Luke was not a preacher, but a physician. It was his business not to preach, but to listen to preaching. He gives the full outlines of a splendid sermon which he heard Peter preach, and then most suggestively remarks, "With many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

Luke here seems to say that Peter passed many good stopping places; that after the sermon was finished, he continued to talk but added no additional thought—used words only, many words, and that all of his "testify and exhort" could be reduced to "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." Luke hints—very delicately, of course—that where a pastor preaches regularly every Sunday to the same congregation, the time, as a rule, from the first note of the voluntary to the last word of the benediction, ought not to be more than one hour.

Now Dr. Luke is held in very high esteem by our congregation, and after one hour, from the time our people assemble for preaching, morning or night, his suggestion about Peter's "many other words" are ever before us. We talked this matter over at our Society the other day, and then the President called on Sister Smith to pray, and the first thing she said was: "O Lord, bless the suggestion of Dr. Luke to the opening of the eyes of our pastor."

As we came away from the church last Sunday the President of our Society said to me: "I'm going right home and read with more interest then ever everything Dr. Luke wrote. It does seem to me that his suggestion must have been made for the benefit of our pastor, and, if Sister Smith's prayer is answered, it will be the first step towards a real revival in our church." My husband called the attention of Judge Jones, who is a member of our church, to Dr. Luke's suggestion about Peter's sermon. The Judge put down in a little book, which he drew from his pocket, Luke 2: 40, and remarked that he would not take one hundred dollars for that verse, that he would certainly call our pastor's attention to it, and try to relieve the long-waiting congregation, that something must be done. We are now hopeful. Will write again later about it.

MRS B. SHORT.

Shortsburg, S. C., Feb. 15, 1893.

From Mars Hill, N. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—After a long and hard struggle, during the hardest times ever known to the people of this country, we have almost completed our new College building. Though we are using some rooms of the new building, yet there is some finishing work to be done.

Our situation is not an exception to the general rule. We are in debt. However our indebtedness is not large. We owe a little less than $500. In addition to this sum, we are compelled to have $500 more for the purpose of repairing the old College and making some necessary improvements on the College grounds.

Therefore we must have $1,000. My plan to raise this sum is to ask twenty-five persons to give ten dollars each, one hundred to give five dollars each, and one hundred to give two dollars and a half each.

The friends around the institution have borne heavy burdens, and sometimes felt they had done all they could, but still they make great sacrifices. However our people are not able to raise this amount of money and meet the demands of this thriving institution.

My object is to set these facts before the readers of the RECORDER, with the hope that many of them will come to our aid. What say you, brethren?

Before I close, let me say our enrollment this year has reached two hundred, and the work is going on well under the wise leadership of President Hufham.

Respectfully, T. M. HONEYCUTT.

A Call to the Ministry.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I noticed a communication in the RECORDER of Feb. 1st, entitled "The Missionary Call," by Bro. John E. White. I felt then like entering a protest, but thought I would leave that for older and wiser heads; but nothing has been said. I am sure I have no desire to provoke a discussion, but as an earnest seeker after truth, I desire to know what the real truth is. Bro. White and all others have a right to their opinions, and so have I.

Bro. White says, "We no longer subscribe to the doctrine of Apostolic succession." "Why? because it is neither scriptural nor reasonable. Besides, it tends to religious oligarchy. And the sooner we rid ourselves of the other and companion error of a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry, * * * nearer will we accord with truth, Scripture, and common sense, and the sooner will the Master be commended to all hearts."

Who would say that God does not personally interpose in the conversion of a soul, and if so, why should he not interpose personally in a call to the ministry? He interposes in the person of his Spirit. "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou heareth the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh nor whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit." May we not adopt the same language and say, "So is every one that is called of God to the ministry"?

Again he says: "If we have not altogether mistaken the spirit and teaching of Christ himself, every christian is a preacher of Christ."

Every one is a preacher in a certain sense, but every one is not required, or even permitted to stand behind the sacred desk and proclaim the gospel publicly. We understand by a call to the ministry, to mean to proclaim it publicly.

Bro. White says further that "How he shall teach or preach Christ is determined entirely by his own judgment of his fitness and talent."

Dangerous doctrine! He that takes upon himself the duty of proclaiming the gospel, assumes a sacred and solemn duty. Let me ask the brother did he determine within himself that his fitness and talent were sufficient to preach? If so, beware! Was there no higher authority for his entering the sacred work? We are represented as fighting a warfare with Jesus Christ as our Chief Commander. These ministers of the gospel are only his subordinate officers. The business of all soldiers is to fight, but who shall fight as commanding subordinate officers is not determined by each man's judgment of his fitness or talent to command but by a higher authority. No one has the right to assume command without this authority, no matter what his own opinion may be of his fitness and talent. Neither had any one the right to preach the gospel publicly without authority from God. This view of a call to the ministry we think "accords with truth and Scripture," though it may or may not accord with "common sense" or reason; for who can reason out, by any process, the dealings of God with his people? That same divine messenger, the Holy Spirit, who was sent into the world to convince men of sin and of righteousness and of a judgment, is here to impress upon the minds and hearts of men whom God would have to preach his gospel. This call is spiritually discerned, and the world cannot know or understand, by any process of reason, the mind of the Spirit.

Moses felt, I think, as many do to-day who are called to preach. When Moses was called of God to deliver Israel he "answered and said, but, behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice; for they will say the Lord hath not appeared unto thee." Ex. 4: 1. And again Moses made excuse, saying, "O, my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou has spoken unto thy servant; but I am slow of speech and of a slow tongue." Is this not the experience generally of those called of God to preach? Moses was commissioned of God by a special call to do a special work. If God called men to be his prophets and then called men to be his apostles and preachers of righteousness, and does not call men now, when was the change? When did he leave it to men's own judgment to say how they shall serve him?

The position, taken, therefore, is this: God does call men and calls them to do a particular work, and no one is permitted to preach unless he receives this special call. A man may have all the qualifications of a minister except the Divine call, and he will be an entire failure. No matter how powerful his intellect, how great his gifts of oratory, unless he has the Divine authority, he is no true preacher of the gospel. And a failure to wait for this Divine authority before entering the ministry, will eventually, if persisted in, lead to a corrupt ministry and a christian membership in name but not in reality.

As to when this Divine call comes, I am not prepared to say. It may come, I think, at conversion or it may come afterward. But it comes, at some time, to all who should preach. What more is necessary to prove a special Divine call to the ministry? "As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Acts 13: 2. Paul begins nearly all his letters in language something like this, "Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle." Rom. 1: 1.

While the field is the world, and all the apostles were sent out to preach in all the world, yet Paul was chosen to go to a special work among the Gentiles.

But we have not space to discuss now the call to the foreign field, if indeed this work requires a separate call. Suffice it to say that while all may go, some must go to the foreign field.

From the Seminary.

Editor Recorder:—The examination in New Testament English on the second inst., completed the list for this time, except some special examinations yet to be given to those who were prevented on account of sickness from standing at the regular time. The battle has been fought, but it remains yet to be seen with what degree of success, as the result of only one or two have as yet been announced.

Just here I feel it not out of place to call attention to the superior advantages offered here to ministers seeking a theological education. There are likely a goodly number who expect to finish their course at Wake Forest College in June. I wish I could say something that would cause them to think seriously as to whether they ought not to come to this Seminary. It offers advantages that are not offered in any Northern Seminary. The fact is, a man can never know from being told how much he has really missed by neglecting to come here and take certain classes that could be mentioned.

I am glad to say that North Carolina has more men here this year than ever before. But this number is not as large as it ought to be. Her sister State, South Carolina, has not as many Baptists as she, and yet South Carolina always sends more students here than our State. This ought not to be so; our State pride, if nothing else, ought not to allow it. I don't think any of our North Carolina brethren here now regret having come to the Seminary. On the contrary, one of them, who graduated at Wake Forest College last June and whose name would be familiar to many of your readers, were I to mention it, was heard to remark a few days ago, when speaking of the benefits of this Seminary, that if he had been compelled to leave a month after he came here, he would not regret having come. It might not be without interest to your readers to know that this Seminary is the largest on the continent. The Western Recorder is responsible for the statement, and there is no reason for doubting its entire correctness.

Why is this so? There are seminaries North that offer more inducement financially to students. There may be several reasons; but one important reason, I think, is, that this is the only Seminary that offers its advantages to any but college trained students. All are invited to come here, from the most thoroughly equipped to those with comparatively no training. It has all the field which others have to draw patronage from, and much more besides. The work it is doing toward giving ministers a thorough theological training is bound, therefore, to be greater and more far reaching than that done by any other Seminary in this country.

Dr. J. L. M. Curry was with us last Monday and addressed the faculty and students on education in general and the public schools and Peabody Fund in particular.

Bro. Fred Agar, late from Oregon, formerly from England, has been appointed missionary to the Congo country by the Baptist Missionary Union. He left Saturday en route for his field of labor, but will in the mean time spend a short time with relatives in England.

Louisville loses another one of her Baptist pastors. This time it is Bro. M. D. Jeffries, who resigns East Baptist church of this city to accept a call to the Second church, Knoxville, Tennessee. Bro. Jeffries is an excellent preacher, and has done a fine work at East church. His congregation will not be the only ones to regret his leaving the city. He was once pastor of the church at Chapel Hill, N. C.

The last meeting of our Missionary Society was one of more than usual interest. Bro. W. R. Cullom, well known to many of your readers, read a paper on "M. T. Yates and Reflex Influence of his Life on the Baptists of North Carolina." I was prevented by sickness from being present to hear it; but it was pronounced to be the best paper read before the Society in some time. Those of us who are acquainted with Bro. Cullom know that it is just like him to do a thing of that kind.

Dr. Sampey has been confined to his room this week and unable to meet his classes. He hopes to be able to meet them by next Monday. More later. J. I. K.

"No Time to Think."

We were talking with a good woman not long since about the very small number of city reared boys and girls who come to be men and women of usefulness and note, and the small per cent. of city bred people that seem to know or care much about solid Bible teaching and preaching. The business of the city in which the conversation took place, was, and is now, very largely conducted by men and women reared in the country; and the country church of which we were speaking had its most useful leaders and members from those reared in the country. Now, said the writer, such seems to be true of this city, and if as true of other cities, how do you account for it? The answer was not long in coming. Said she, "I believe it is because city boys and girls do not have time to think." She went on—"There is always something novel to keep their minds on the go from one thing to another, and they do not have time to gather a lesson from anything they see, hear or read. They continue this course through life and utterly fail at everything they undertake. "Glancing at everything," she continued, "without time to mentally digest and assimilate anything! I believe this is true, as a rule, and I want my children to have time to think." Oh, can it be true?

Well, here is another's view, a woman also, and copied from one of my journals, to be re-read and pondered by those who have time to think.

Southey was explaining to a Quakeress how he filled up his time. Said he: "I look over my Portuguese grammar while shaving, read Spanish for an hour before breakfast, &c., having every minute of my time occupied with reading, writing, eating, drinking, talking and sleeping." After hearing this long account of his system of using time, she inquired, "And when dost thou think?"

"Sure enough," said another of our group, "When do some people think?" "Yes, yes," said she, "they talk, they rattle, they clatter, they gabble, they gossip, they read, they teach; but when do they think?"

Another of our company chimed in—"There are people whose lives seem to be largely filled with suggestions and plans for manufacturing crowds, and putting everybody and everything to going "at breakneck speed." You must hear four or five sermons a day, and fill up the intervals with social meetings of some kind. This must be continued for ten or twelve days in succession, each sermon crowding out the one before it, as one wad in the pop-gun crowds out the other; and the social meetings pushing aside all the preceding—and the end is reached with almost nothing save a worn out body."

I was reading of a man in the New York Herald, a foreigner of phlegmatic temperament, who took a walk along Broadway, looking into the windows, trying to cull a lesson or two from the variety and beauty of what he saw and heard. He seems to have been a gentleman of leisure with time to think. But the crowd jostled him. He at once caught the infection and began to hurry. He felt like a race horse and struck off at a terrific gait. He wanted to go somewhere, anywhere, and get there right off. He took up at Fulton ferry, was bound to be the first on board; he tipped over a poor woman's apple stand, but could not stop to remedy the misfortune; edged his way to the front of the boat, gazed at Brooklyn as Columbus did at the new found land, jumped ashore entirely out of breath, and suddenly remembered that he had been doing nothing, and had nothing to do which demanded such speed! But he was nearly dead before he had time to think! Oh, the air is full of push now, and one must go before the pressure, despite his efforts, and before he has so much as time to think. I am fearful this violent exercise will develop the arms and legs at the expense of the mind and heart. People take up in the Lunatic Asylum, or die with heart failure, before having time to think. Oh, for a quiet hour! It would be worth more to some of us, perhaps, than weeks or months of semi thoughtless rush. Do we not need a little more time to be alone with God, that we may move the more intelligently and scripturally when we do act? Let us take due time for "inward reasoning," even though some one should get ahead of us in suggesting some new move, and demand for money. Let us look at subjects long enough to correctly determine what is in them for the glory of God and the good of the living. We need time for a second thought sometimes—a clamer reflection. Let us not think long enough for the mind to become thought-sick with reflection, or to cause us to lose opportunities for doing good by dreaming cogitation; but we must have time for thought. Let us not contract a case of mental indigestion and die of "running at the mouth!" Do not crowd the mind with so many subjects and suggestions that it cannot act under the load. Do not overfill the platter and thereby discourage some one's weak appetite. Do not overtask our minds; and do not hurry us up the steps ere we have time to consent. Do not overtask, either mentally or physically, lest we become weary in well doing. Let us make one strong pull together in the Centennial Mission work now—and then—&c.

Editor Recorder:—The Baptist cause is moving on well in Norfolk and Portsmouth, and Berkley, the "three cities" by the sea. I think "Trinity" or "Trinopolis" would be a good name for the home of the 75,000 people who live here, as the "three cities" are but three in one. We have eleven Baptist churches, and as Churchland, Newport News, Hampton, Suffolk, London Bridge and other places send their pastors to our conference, we usually have about twenty ministers at our Monday morning conference, which is held in the Freemason Street Baptist church. All the ministers report their work as progressing well, but two of them have recently resigned, Drs. T. G. Jones and D. W. Gwin. Dr. Jones has done a noble work at the First Baptist, and is parted with most regretfully. Dr. Gwin has also done well at Park Avenue. These two promising fields will doubtless be supplied soon with first class men.

Freemason Street was never so prosperous. The common verdict is the largest membership, the largest congregations, and the largest Sunday school in its history. I have received about two hundred members since I came here nearly two years ago. The membership now numbers nearly eight hundred. The church edifice is one of the most beautiful in the South. Our Sunday-school now numbering six hundred is the largest in the city. We have been compelled to knock out partitions and enlarge our accommodations. An elegant infant class room, the best I ever saw, has been built, and a new study is in course of erection.

I have received many members from the Old North State, some of them choice spirits, and all "worthy and well qualified."

The RECORDER ought to have a good circulation here.

Dr. Owen is holding a protracted meeting now, which promises good results.

Letter from Rev. F. M. Jordan.

Dear Recorder:—My visit to the Convention in Raleigh was one of the most enjoyable of my life. I spent several days very pleasantly with my son, L. F. Jordan, in Greensboro. Heard Bro. Thomas preach, who seemed to be waking up the people smartly.

I stopped at old Hillsboro with Bro. T. H. Smith and his good wife, whom I united in marriage years ago, and with whom I enjoyed a most delightful visit.

Spent a day with Bro. Ellmore Faucett at my old home where we lived twenty years, and where most of our children were born and raised. Viewed the wonderful changes which had taken place during the last sixteen years. Many of my old friends and neighbors were dead and gone to their long home. The dear mother who once lived so happily with all her dear children in that once delightful home, now sleeping in the beautiful cemetery at Asheville, and her children scattered from California to Greensboro. God alone knows my feelings as I thought of the days and years gone by, and wondered if the sainted mother would meet her companion and all the children in the sweet by-and-by.

I went to Mars Hill where I was once pastor for twelve years, and where some of our children were baptized. Here I stood by the grave of my good old mother, by which I knelt and offered up a prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving to the God of heaven for all his goodness, loving kindness and tender mercies through all the years gone by, and that we might all be prepared to meet her in heaven when the pilgrimage of life is ended and our work is done.

I preached eight days with Bro. Taylor at Mt. Adar, a new church in the western part of Orange county. Here I met with many of my old friends and acquaintances of former years. Some of my brethren and sisters came from Kerr's Chapel and Clement, a distance of ten and twelve miles, to see me, some of whom I baptized while pastor of these churches. It was a happy meeting. The last day of the meeting there was a wonderful manifestation of the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. Many poor sinners gave us their hand, asking to be remembered at a throne of grace that they might be prepared for heaven.

Sunday night I preached in the Baptist church in Hillsboro. Not only the people of the town were out, but they were there from Mars Hill, Cool Spring and Cane Creek, besides the gallery was full of colored people. Many gathered around to shake my hand one time more on earth. I after thought that if it be so delightful to meet here on earth, what will it be to meet in heaven?

Time and space forbid me to tell the pleasures of meeting so many of my brethren, sisters and friends in Raleigh, and what a good time Bro. Cannady and I had in the hospitable home of my dear brother C. B. Edwards. And then it would take another chapter to tell of my visit to the good people of Durham, where I was once pastor for four years, and of the meeting in the second church with my young Bro. Butler and his dear people; my happy stay with Bro. L. V. Riggsbee and his dear family, and so many delightful visits.

Wake Forest College.

That this is a great institution is admitted by all. Yet this does not argue that it is all it should be, and that no improvements can be made. It is the equal of the best colleges in the State and yet it falls short of what it might and aught to be.

I would like to see it lead them all, and looking to this end I wish to make a few suggestions.

1. Wake Forest College places too much stress on ministerial education. It is a College and not a theological seminary. Yet there are many Baptists in North Carolina who think that only those who are preparing for the ministry are admitted as students.

The representative of the College, who attends our associations, is usually the representative of the Board of Education as well. This Board is generally in great need of money, so instead of making a speech on the College, and urging young men in general, to attend it, he makes his speech on the noble young ministers who have been and are being educated by the Board—what they have done, are doing and will do for the denomination, and the State, and winds up with a collection and pledges for ministerial education. Hence the impression that Wake Forest College is a theological school.

2. Since the ministry offers as good, if not better opportunities for young college men to make money than any other profession, why help young ministers to the exclusion of other young men who are equally poor and equally worthy? We are not opposed to ministerial education, and we are not opposed to the college helping poor young ministers. But let the College help poor worthy young men indiscriminately. If they happen to feel called to preach, all right; if not, all right. Wake Forest College and the Baptist denomination need teachers, doctors, lawyers and politicians as much as ministers. It is not surprising that we have so few prominent Baptist politicians, and so little influence in politics, when the best energy of the whole denomination is making ministers only. Without accusing the Board of Education of calling young men to the ministry, it is my opinion that if the Board will take poor worthy young men indiscriminately, it will have fewer applications from young ministers.

3. Let Wake Forest College put an agent in the field, whose duty it shall be, not only to bring students to the College, but to cultivate a more intimate relation between the College and the academies and common schools of the State. If the College maintains its high stand, it must get in closer touch with the preparatory schools of the State. Let this agent visit as many of these preparatory schools as possible each year, urging the young men to go to college. The man who does this work successfully may not bring so many young ministers to the College as are there now, but he will bring vastly more of other callings who will be worth equally as much to the College and to the State. He will increase both the number of students and the revenue of the College.

Reply to Dr. W. B. Harrell.

Editor Recorder:—In your last issue there is an article from Dr. W. B. Harrell on "The Drink Curse," that I think calls for a reply. It is all right for him to attack the whisky traffic—it is a poor preacher that would not—but I am sorry to see any preacher advocating a law that fosters dishonesty. Even "skinflints" and "sharpers", as he chooses to call them, have some rights. But may not the term "skinflints" and "sharpers" be applied to those who are living on the fat of the land and hiding behind a $1,500 homestead and personal property exemption? The homestead law is a disgrace to North Carolina. How many men are there in the church who wear the finest of clothes, and whose daughters do nothing but thump the piano, while the merchant who supplies them is driven to the wall just because they were not worth $1,500, and the poor merchant trusted them on their religion and failed to collect! I have in mind now a widow lady who is teaching school at a low price to support herself and children, whose husband was one of those liberal hearted merchants who couldn't say No. Some one has said, "Make all you can, save all you can, give all you can." In this day, it is get all you can, keep all you can. I believe that the crooked dealing of preachers and church members does as much to impede the progress of christianity as anything else.

But I would not be understood as advocating strong drink, or underestimating the evil of it.

I regret to have to run against a preacher. I love and respect them all—those of all denominations and of all colors. I believe they are the best men we have; the mass of them are trying to elevate the people, but the wisest and best men make mistakes.

Respectfully, A. C. COVINGTON.

Masculine Gender in Gal 1: 9.

In my criticism, I did not say women should preach. Neither did I say that Paul no where stuck to the masculine.

I said that he did not stick to it in Gal. 1: 9. That is the point I made. Did your reply answer my point? Did you show that Paul stuck to the masculine in Gal. 1: 9, as you claimed in your original comment? Your reply, instead of sticking to the point I made, asked a lot of questions about other words and texts which I have not criticised, and about whose meaning we are all agreed. Also, you fortify, in the reply your "sixth," &c., of the original editorial. It will be time to do this when some one attacks them. When you finally came to my point, Gal. 1: 9, you make a statement which seems to admit my criticism, and which I cannot reconcile with your first comment on Gal. 1: 9.

Here are the two statements:

"4. Again, notice Paul's words, Gal. 1: 9. 'If any man,' &c. He seems here to have shown a strange oversight by sticking so persistently to the masculine gender."—RECORDER, Jan. 25.

"We are fully aware of the fact that it will not do to base an argument as to sex on such a passage as Gal. 1: 9, or others like it in God's word."—RECORDER, Feb. 15.

In one statement you say it will not do to base an argument as to sex on Gal. 1: 9. That is what I said—that was my point. In the other statement you did base an argument on Gal. 1: 9, by saying that Paul stuck to the masculine in this verse. This is what I criticised, and what I still criticise, for Paul used a word that was feminine as well as masculine. If the second of the above statements in the RECORDER is your "last will and testament," then I make no criticism. If you stick to the first, then I stand by my criticism.

Cooper's Tobacco Warehouse,

HENDERSON, N. C.

Have you heard the latest from this mammoth concern? The twentieth year of a most successful business is just now closing. D. Y. Cooper, the proprietor, realizing the liberal and generous patronage he has received, proposes for the next two months to hold a sort of informal reception, and show some substantial appreciation for the long and continuous manifestations of confidence and friendship which he has received from his patrons during this long period of business relations.

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

1. To the person selling the greatest number of pounds of tobacco at Cooper's Warehouse, and to the one who receives the largest net sales, from January 1st, 1893, to February 25th, 1893, will be presented with a round trip ticket, including $4.00 for board, to the presidential inauguration at Washington City March 4th, 1893. Also to the one selling ten pounds of finest bright wrappers, and also to the one offering twenty five pounds finest cutters, will receive a round-trip ticket to Washington City. These tickets will be sent to the winners on or before the first day of March, 1893. A correct record will be kept, and everybody is invited to compete.

Besides offering these extra inducements, the public is assured that they will always receive the highest prices for all grades of tobacco.

Roanoke Union at Dawson.

On Jan. 27th—29th, 1893, the Roanoke Union was held with the church at Dawson's, Halifax county.

Rev. J. R. Pace preached the introductory sermon from the text, "Our Father," and though the theme was broad, yet he presented some precious home truths that went to our hearts; and more than ever we felt his loving sympathy and tender watchcare over us, putting us in a suitable frame for the wholesome discussions which were to follow.

First query—Reciprocal duties of church and pastor. Discussed by O. C. Stallings, Revs. J. E. White, J. W. Powell and G. J. Dowell.

Second query—Whose duty is it to take part in the Sunday-school? Discussed by Revs. J. R. Pace, J. W. Powell and H. Williams.

Third query—The University and the Orphanage. Rev. R. T. Vann offered upon this subject the following resolutions:

We as Baptists of Roanoke Union in meeting assembled, do earnestly resolve—

1st. We protest against being taxed to support the State University so long as it is in hurtful competition with our denominational colleges.

2d. We protest against being taxed for ministerial education.

3d. We protest against being taxed for the support of an Orphanage in the control of any secret society, or of any christian denomination.

Rev. J. W. Powell, Prof. W. C. Allen and Dr. J. D. Hufham discussed this subject with gloves off—in an earnest, spirited manner, with that sound reasoning that was poignant and convincing.

The vote being taken, the resolutions were carried without a dissenting voice.

The Union then adjourned to meet with Eagle's church in Edgecombe county.

On Sunday morning we held a Sunday-school mass-meeting.

Rev. J. R. Pace made a stirring speech in the Sunday-school interest, such as only a man absorbed in this work can make, which enthused the school to fever heat.

Dr. Hufham followed with a few practical hints as to what our community was before we had any Sunday-school influence, and because of its influence the bright future which is ahead of us.

At eleven o'clock Dr. Hufham preached the missionary sermon from the text, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise." Rom. 1: 14. Some said he preached an hour; if so, it was an hour sweetly beguiled. Such unselfish love, such tenderness and pathos as rarely ever flow from the heart of man! His soul seemed on fire with love for his fellowman, which inspired us with a self abnegating spirit, which lifted us out of self and enabled us to look beyond to the "fields white unto harvest"—with an ear open to the Macedonian cry.

God be praised for the Union, for the influence and association of those godly men, whose coming we welcomed, whose presence was a benediction.

From Little Alice.

Mr. Editor:—Would you be glad to know that I did not freeze in the time of that big snow? We did not freeze, but we got very cold. When I would try to warm one side, the other side would nearly freeze. At night when brother Pearl and I would be tucked in our warm bed, my nose would get so cold; on waking up, I would find my dear Mamma tucking the cover close around us to keep us warm. How thankful little girls ought to be that they have a mamma, though I know nothing of the pleasure of my Papa.

Brother Pearl and I would visit a good old lady who lived a half mile off and alone, to see if she had in wood and water, or would have us to do any thing for her, although it was so cold. She would have a smile and a kind word for us.

I would be pleased to tell the little girls more of my grandma. She visited us before Christmas, and walked to the Baptist church as straight and fast as any of the ladies. She enjoyed the sermon from our pastor, more especially when he got on to women preaching. Grandma wears a pretty, white cap, and smokes her pipe. She has a good memory and can remember things that happened when she was a little girl like myself. Her mother lived to be 104 years old. She was fifteen years old at the Revolutionary war. Grandma joined the Baptist church in 1824. She has been a constant reader of the RECORDER nearly forty years. She says I made a little mistake in my other letter, which I wish to rectify. She has needle-worked eighty-one counterpanes since she was eighty years old, instead of seventy-five. She was a raiser of silk for forty-two years, and has made long pieces of silk cloth, warp and filling. She now has a silk dress of her own make.

With best wishes and a happy new year. Wishing to be kindly remembered to all who read the RECORDER. In behalf of the old mother Baptist church at Mount Vernon Springs, Resolutions of Connaritsa Church.

Resolved, That we, the Baptists worshiping at Connaritsa, this day assembled in conference, do heartily endorse the course pursued by our pastor, Rev. T. T. Resolved 2. That we send this resolution to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

Religious Instruction for Children.

One great trouble with many parents is to know how to introduce the subject of religion to their children in an easy and attractive way. They often wish to impress lessons of morality and usefulness, but feel a want of satisfactory capacity. By taking The Young Reaper and The Sunlight, semi-monthlies, published by the American Baptist Publication Society, such would find great help. Gather the children, read one of the bright, fresh stories, and from it lead on to the matter of which you would talk. Make a reading club of the family on Sunday afternoon. These papers only cost for the semi monthly, twenty cents, and sixteen cents per year, in clubs of five. The monthly is only ten and eight cents.

For Little Mattie, Charity and Wiley Dowd—In Memory of their Mother.

BY T. L. BANKS.

A mother's love no one can doubt,
All would be inhuman, ingrates without,
A mother's love first taught us to pray
To remember our Creator each closing day.

A mother's love so full and complete,
We should ever cherish, often repeat;
A mother's love and mother's fears
Have soothed us in trial, brought us tears.

A mother's love can never be told—
We cherish it fondly when we are old—
A mother's love, so constant, so true,
When all others fled she clung to you.

A mother's love for us has won
A tie in memory none has done;
A mother's love for children so near,
May she rest in heaven with loved ones dear.

A mother's love, so precious, how sweet,
Akin to Jesus, we hope to meet
Jesus and mother, emblems of love,
Let us strive to join them in heaven above.

They are discussing the question in England whether the christian shall wear a badge in order to indicate what and who he is. It is argued on the one hand that christians may readily recognize each other, and on the other hand it is said that it would be abused by religious tramps and hypocrites. For our part, we believe if a Christ-like spirit shown in character and life be not a sufficient badge, ribbons, gold and mottoes cannot take its place.—Central Baptist.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

Letter from Gov. W. J. Northen of Georgia on his Impressions of our Work in Cuba.

We asked Gov. Northen who accompanied our party on the recent excursion to Cuba, to give us his impressions of our work there, and he has kindly taken time from pressing official duties to send us the following letter.

It may not be improper to add that having been himself for many years one of the most accomplished and successful teachers that Georgia ever had, Gov. Northen naturally looked into the educational interests of our mission and feels very strongly that in addition to the very good schools we now have there, Cuba needs a Baptist High School for girls, so well managed and taught by American teachers as to attract the attention and secure the patronage of the best people in Havana and throughout Cuba.

Are there not Baptist teachers who, for the sake of the cause, and for the promise at the same time of large pecuniary reward, would be willing to undertake this enterprise?

ATLANTA, GA., Feb. 7, 1893.

Bro. Editor:—My recent visit to Cuba, and my examination into the mission work done in Havana, prompt me to say some things for the encouragement of the Home Board and the information of the denomination.

First let me say that before my visit I had not begun to conceive of the extent and efficiency of the work accomplished. During the entire time that I was upon the island I was deeply impressed with the readiness of the Spirit to help our infirmities and the power of God in the accomplishment of great ends.

I thought I knew all about the church building in Havana, but when I entered it I found I was not prepared to believe that such a magnificent audience room in the center of a great city like Havana could be secured at the price paid for this.

A gentleman from New York, a Presbyterian, whom I met at the Hotel Passaje, commenting upon the work of the Board, remarked that he thought the purchase of so expensive a house for the purposes, as he understood them, was a mistake. After he was fully informed as to the extent of the work accomplished and the size and earnest devotion of the congregations accommodated, he was fully convinced of the wisdom of the business policy of the Board. I want candidly to say that no man who visits the city and attends upon the service will hesitate to say that the purchase of the church property was a wise business stroke directed by the Lord.

The first religious service upon which I attended was the mission under Bro. Cova. Whilst I did not understand what was being said, I was profoundly impressed with the earnestness of the people and the heartiness with which they joined, without exception, in the worship.

The services held in Bro. Diaz's church under the direction of Bro. Tichenor in English in the forenoon, and by Bro. Diaz in Spanish in the evening, were largely attended by earnest and anxious listeners.

All danger of interference by the officials, I think, is now removed. The newspapers of the city are giving the work hearty support and encouragement. Large audiences attend upon the service, and everything now seems ready for us to enter and possess the land for the Lord.

Under this state of things the natural inquiry is, what is next to be done? This, of course, the Lord must decide. This I feel quite sure He has already done.

After full and repeated conference among the brethren visiting Havana upon the recent trip, it was unanimously agreed that we need larger and better accommodations for the rapidly growing missions. It was further believed that the Lord is opening up large fields in other portions of the island, and Bro. Tichenor was advised to visit these places and begin work.

Upon one thing the company was unanimous and earnest—the need for a good high school for girls in the city. I do not know that this expense should be pressed upon the Board in the midst of great demands from other fields, but I am convinced that such a school would be a powerful factor for good as co operating with the work of the churches in the city of Havana and those to be established in other parts of the island.

Under the conditions as reported to us by Bro. Diaz, I feel quite sure such a school would soon become self supporting and of vast usefulness in the efficiency and progress of the work.

With all the earnestness I command I would urge the necessity for such an adjunct as I suggest just as soon as the Board can control the means, or private individuals are ready to consecrate their money to this great work for Christ.

I have not a criticism to make upon the work of the Board in the Cuban Mission, but profound gratitude to God that he has led them to such glorious ends and given us such bright promise for the future.

W. J. NORTHEN.

Preaching Without Notes.

We may not be in need of more theological seminaries—of which there are some four hundred in the country—but we would wish some liberal soul would endow a chair of homiletics in some seminary in which oral preaching should be inculcated to the entire exclusion of the manuscript. We know that seminary professors seek to utilize both methods; but the trouble with this lecture process is that at the outset preaching from the written sermon is so much easier than preaching without the manuscript, that the student prefers the sermon paper; as a result, the seminaries are turning out an army of sermon-paper readers, not one in a hundred of whom can preach an effective sermon without the manuscript. We are not now pleading for the entire abolition of the sermon manuscript. On the contrary, realizing that there are thousands of ministers who would be utterly powerless in the pulpit if the services of that indispensable assistant could not be commanded on the instant, we would have the number of this class of dependents reduced to the minimum, and we would have the small class of those who can preach either with or without the manuscript increased.—Christian at Work.

Salting Meat.

On this subject, important to nearly all farmers, an exchange says:

Never salt meat until the hogs have hung long enough for the meat to become entirely cold all the way through. For barrelled pork the brine should be as salt as it can be made—so strong that there will always be salt undissolved in the barrel. Cut into pieces of convenient size and pack them in rings on their edges. Fill all interstices and cover each layer of meat with salt. Then pour in all the strong brine the barrel will hold and keep it filled. For side bacon the usual plan is first to rub each piece with salt and then pack skin side down on a platform covered with salt. As soon as one layer is down cover it with salt and put another on it and so proceed, piling it up as high as convenient. Overhaul, rub, and repack it from three to four times, until it is well salted through. The time it must remain will depend on the thickness of the meat and the temperature of the packing place. In extremely cold weather a third longer time may be required. There is no danger of getting pickled pork or heavy fat sides too salt. For the hams, a pickle should be made just strong enough to barely float an egg. Into this stir brown sugar or molasses to give it a slightly sweet taste. If the weather is moderate, hams that weigh from eight to twelve pounds may be taken out for smoking in from three to four weeks. In hard freezing weather and for large hams a longer time will be required, varying from four to seven weeks.

Salvation Oil should always be kept in the kitchen. For the ready cure of scalds and burns it has no equal. 25 cts.

Have you ever considered the christian duty of being pleasant? Whether you feel happy or worried, whether things are going well or ill with you, you have no right, by your words or even by a doleful countenance, to cast gloom on others. As a christian, you have a light in your heart, and you are commanded to let it shine. You are not only to rejoice, but to impart joy, evermore. Have you ever tried through the duties and trials of one day, "to be a blessing," making your very presence a light and joy to all you meet? Try it.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

Self-conquest.

Alexander could conquer the legions of Persia, but he could not conquer his passions. Cæsar triumphed in a hundred battles, but he fell a victim to the desire of being king. Bonaparte vanquished nearly the whole of Europe, but he could not vanquish his own ambition. And in humbler life, nearer home, in our own every-day affairs, most of us are drawn aside from the path of duty and discretion, because we do not resist some temptation or overcome some prejudice.—Goodrich.

That Meeting, or, The Luxiliary.

"Now tell me all about the missionary meeting, my dear," said sweet-voiced Mrs. Alden to her cheery-faced companion, Madge Greyson.

Madge drew her smooth forehead into a frown, gave her nose an upward incline, and curled her lip somewhat satirically before replying with: "'Missionary meeting' dear Mrs. Alden? Well, of all meetings claiming to be so called, that meeting took the lead."

"Why I understood it was a regular W. M. S. to which you were invited, seeing we are en route from the glorious Oct. 2d in Louisville."

"Glorious Oct. 2d is a very inglorious affair to that missionary (?) society, I should say, judging by that meeting. I wish you could have been there, Mrs. Alden, to have seen for yourself."

"I wish so, indeed, Madgie, but you know how the frail body hinders everything. However, tell me about this unique gathering. Did the President follow the Prayer Card?"

"I should say not. You know I carried Brother Brunson's leaflet (as it is the first week in November), but there wasn't so much as the stirring of a zephyr by a Japanese fan even to indicate interest in that direction."

"Strange," said the longing-to-be-charitable Mrs. Alden." Perhaps they were studying the general subject of missions, and Japan will come next week."

"Next week, indeed! Excuse me, dear Mrs. Alden, for my vehemence, but in my opinion Japan will never come if all meetings of the W. M. S. are like that meeting. I writhed under it, and rewrithed, and came away suffocated with disgust."

Here Miss Greyson commenced pacing the floor excitedly, and Mrs. Alden enquired, "Were many out?"

"Many? I should say so. There were at least one hundred there."

"That was encouraging, certainly. Such a grand time to press the dollar plan. Was it done?"

"It was done, Mrs. Alden. The 'dollar plan' was pressed on the pre-eminently broad platform of the home calls for charity. One hundred dollars were pledged there, this afternoon, by one hundred christian women in a missionary meeting, to buy silver flower stands for the church pulpit!' I was too disgusted to hold my tongue. 'How do you carry on your missionary work?' I asked in holy horror. 'Through the church. We give to all the Boards. This is our Auxiliary, you know. We help the church.' 'Then you do nothing extra in the way of Foreign Mission work in and out of America, in line with the Southern Baptist Convention? I declare, Mrs. Alden, I am ashamed to say she looked at me in a dazed way, and I pitied her ignorance."

"Well, did you let pity lead you on toward her enlightenment, faithful Madgie?" asked Mrs. Alden.

"I did. I couldn't help it. I spoke right out in the meeting and told them exactly what it meant to be a W. M. S. More, more, more all the time for the work of Foreign Missions at home and abroad, through our two S. B. C. Boards, Home and Foreign. Then I told them of the needs of the millions of people without Christ, and prayed them to think of that, and of how they would feel to be without him. Warming with my subject I told them that a church which wasn't missionary didn't deserve the name of a christian church, and that a missionary society that wasn't missionary was a misnomer and an anomaly."

Madge paused for breath, and Mrs. Alden asked: "How was your unseasoned truth received, Madge?"

"As if uttered in the inspiring presence of a group of marble statuary," was the laughing rejoinder; "but I went on regardless of the inanity, and preached the gospel of missions. You should have heard my peroration. 'Sisters,' I said, 'the missionary spirit is the salvation of the churches. Your narrow spirit is dwarfing and ruining you. This is the Centennial year. Do you realize it? One hundred years! One hundred women! One hundred dollars! Silver flower stands! Oh! sisters, consider. For what were you created? For what was this church organized? Let us think. Re-pledge this one hundred dollars for the support of our missionaries on the Foreign field. Don't waste mission money on idle church decoration. Vote again, my sisters, for truth, God and humanity. I dropped into my seat. The missionary society voted again to have the flower stands. Disgusted, dear Mrs. Alden? Of course I am. All o-missionary societies deserve the title of Luxiliaries, and I for one mean to give them their deserts.—S. F. S.

Immigration.

The Christian Union publishes an excellent chart of immigration for the past ten years, showing by lines the increase and decrease from various countries.

The three countries that are most persistent in their increase are Italy, Russia and Hungary. Italian immigration now almost equals the Irish. The Russian exceeds the Swedish, and the Hungarian is greater than that of both the Norwegians and Scotch. Chinese laborers are excluded, but last year we received 1,221 Chinese "merchants."—Tidings.

With a port like that of Baltimore, second only to that of New York, what an opportunity for Home Mission work. When we open the door of our country to foreigners, God opens a door for his people. Shall these foreigners come to a christian land and hear no word of Christ?

SKIN TORTURES

The St. Louis Trade Review and Export Journal in its issue of February 7th, 1893, has this to say:

EDWARDS & BROUGHTON.

One of the leading enterprises of its character in the entire South is the extensive printing and binding establishment, owned and conducted by the firm of Edwards & Broughton, and located at the corner of Hargett and Salisbury streets, Raleigh, N. C. The gentlemen constituting this firm, Mr. C. B. Edwards and Mr. N. B Broughton, are and have been for many years among Raleigh's prominent and substantial business men and citizens. Mr. Edwards is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Franklin county, and has made this city his home for the past quarter of a century, while Mr. Broughton, also a native of North Carolina, was born in Wake county, and has resided in Raleigh since 1858. They began their present co-partnership about twenty-two years ago. The plant is one of the finest in the South, equipped with the best of presses, etc., and with every improvement and convenience. They do a general printing business in all its branches, and carry in stock a fine line of stationery, letter heads, bill heads, statements, fine wedding stationery, etc., and at prices that no house can discount, quality considered. Catalogues, posters, circulars, etc., will be furnished upon the shortest possible notice. They also conduct a general binding business, manufacturing everything in the line of blank books. With their extraordinary facilities and employing only the best skilled workmen, they are enabled to produce a grade of goods that cannot be surpassed by the product of any firm in the country, no matter where located. Prices, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application either personally or by mail, and all orders will receive prompt and careful attention. They have a large trade from outside the city, and parties residing at surrounding points will save money and receive the very best of satisfaction by giving this firm the benefit of their patronage.

An Appeal.

Brethren and Sisters of the Raleigh Association:—We want you to help raise money to build a church at Blackman's X Roads. This is a mission point twelve miles south of Smithfield, and a place where a church is very much needed. Only about five persons out of every hundred are professors of religion. The neighborhood has had Baptist preaching for the past two years, and now they want a church built. The few Baptists there are doing what they can to raise the money, but it is impossible to raise more than about half of it in the neighborhood. Bro. Frank P. Wood, an excellent man, who joined them last summer, has agreed to have the house built at his own expense, if the lumber is furnished by others. We have a deed for the land on which to build. The shingles are ready and paid for. The lumber is sawed and a payment has been made on it. The balance due on the lumber must be paid in less than thirty days. The workmen are ready to go to work on the church and it must be built at once. The house we are now using, which was formerly a liquor shop that caused much trouble all through that section, is very small and uncomfortable, and will not accommodate our congregations.

Some time ago we sent letters to the Sunday-schools of our Association asking each of them to take one collection and help us to pay for the lumber to build this church. Some of the schools have complied with our request, but others have not as yet. We trust they will do so soon. Please look after this matter for us and see that your school sends a contribution for this object. If your school has suspended for the winter, doubtless your church and the people of your neighborhood will contribute something. Of course, individual gifts will be appreciated.

All who are willing to help will please do so at once by sending your contributions to Rev. F. H. Poston, Smithfield, N. C.

Believing that you will help us, I am

Yours fraternally,

J. M. BEATTY,
Sec. Mission Board Raleigh Ass'n.

To the Churches of the Eastern Association.

As an evidence of our gratitude to God for his signal blessing upon the past century of missionary effort, and for the purpose of a still more enlarged effort to evangelize the heathen millions, and to plant the gospel in every destitute region, we are now called upon to make a special contribution for this grand object. This is to be a free will Centennial offering in addition to, and apart from, our regular collections. Let every individual in each church, and every Sunday-school, and woman's mission circle, bring in contributions at once between now and May 1st, and we can thus secure a goodly amount. Some of the Sunday-schools and woman's mission societies have already sent up something for the Chapel Fund for which they have credit, and also the First church in Wilmington has made a noble contribution.

Your Committee, to whom the State Board referred the duty of supervising the Centennial work in our bounds, recommend the following apportionment to the churches as a sort of guide or guage for the amount that reasonably could be raised by united effort on the part of all:

Barlow Chapel, $10.00; Bethel, 10.00; Beulah, 5.00; Boykin's Chapel, 10.00; Bress, 2.50; Bethlehem, 10.00; Bear Marsh, 5.00; Burgaw, 10.00; Brooklyn, 25.00; Clinton, 20.00; Concord, 5.00; Corinth, 5.00; Colvin's Creek, 2.50; Caintuck Chapel, 10.00; Point Caswell, 5.00; Catharine Lake, 2.50; Dobson's Chapel, 5.00; Ebenezer, 5.00; Emma's Chapel, 5.00; Hallsville, 2.50; Haw Bluff, 2.50; Hermon, 2.50; Island Creek, 5.00; Johnson's, 10.00; Kenansville, 10.00; Long Creek, 2.50; Lisbon, 10.00; Maple Hill, 2.50; Mary's Chapel, 2.50; Masonboro, 10.00; Moore's Creek, 2.50; Mt. Gilead, 10.00; Mt. Olive, 15.00; Mt. Holly, 5.00; Magnolia, 10.00; Mt. Zion, 2.50; New Hope, 10.00; Olive Branch, 2.50; Piny Grove, 10.00; Poplar Grove, 2.50; Rose Hill, 2.50; Riley's Creek, 15.00; Sharon, 2.50; Salem, 5.00; Shiloh, 5.00; Siloam, 5.00; Spring Vale, 5.00; Teachey's, 5.00; Warsaw, 20.00; Watt's Chapel, 10.00; Willard, 5.00.

We earnestly and prayerfully call upon every pastor, deacon, Sunday school superintendent, and leader of W. M. S. to give us all possible aid and sympathy in this movement.

Send all Centennial funds raised to Treasurer J. D. Boushall, Raleigh, N. C.

Prayerfully submitted,

From Gaffney, S. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The RECORDER is always a welcome visitor to my new home in Gaffney. I like it especially because it furnishes me with so much valuable missionary news. Then the editorials are always so very practical.

I think I have one of the best churches in the country. It just suits a young minister like myself. I have had twenty-two additions to the church since I came here last June. Then I am sure that I have the pleasure of preaching to some of the best people in the world. I have never seen a kinder people to their pastor. Now you can see why I said it just suits a young minister. Yet it makes me work hard to get up two sermons every week, and sometimes three.

Limestone Institute opened its session on the 8th instant. O, how proud we are to see the young ladies coming in [illegible] different trains! Well, they ought to, for it is one of the best schools in the country, and it is the duty of parents to send their children where the best work is done. The examination papers, which were placed before the public at the last commencement, manifested what kind of work is done. Well, the school is able to do good work, for it has one of the best corps of teachers to be found in any female school in our country. Dr. R. H. Griffith and Prof. H. P. Griffith are well kpown. Then, Miss Phœbe Fuller, Mrs. P. E. Surganns, Miss May Murfee, Miss Hattie Davis, and Miss Pearl Brown are among the most efficient teachers in our country.

The Gaffney people are contemplating building a male fitting school for Furman University. It will be capable of giving a good education, but will be called a "Fitting School." We do hope that we may succeed in this enterprise.

Fraternally, B P. ROBERTSON.

Good but Not the Best.

It is good that our people are making so many and so large subscriptions for our Foreign Mission work. May these pledges grow in size and number! But while this is good, there is something better—that is to pay these pledges as soon as possible. The best thing is to send money designed for our work without a day's unnecessary delay. The Board's expenditures have been $30,000 beyond receipts.

New Spring Dress Goods.

Among the new Dress Goods for the Spring will be noticed some distinct changes, both as to colors and styles, from those of the past season.

Our advance lines of Dress Fabrics for this season are already on sale, and embraces the newest shades and textures in Plain Materials, as well as the latest ideas in the handsomer French Novelties

This year, Cotton Dress Fabrics will be shown in many dainty effects, and our present exhibit of these is the most extensive we have ever made.

We suggest to our patrons to buy early, as most of these goods are our own importations, consequently many styles once so'd cannot be duplicated

Requests for samples should indicate something as to colors, and about what price goods are desired.

Cash with the order, of $5.00 and over, goods will be delivered free (except furniture and crockery) to the nearest Express Office or Railroad station.

A Protest.

I enter my protest as a citizen of North Carolina against the Legislature's making an appropriation to the Masonic Orphanage at Oxford, on three grounds:

First, because the State is thus giving money to an Institution over which it has no control whatever.

Second, because the State has no right to give money for the support of a secret organization, and this position I take, though I am a Knight Templar in Masonry. The thing is wrong in principle, and cannot be justified by good policy; for, in the third place, if it is right to make an appropriation for the Masonic Orphanage at Oxford, then it is right to give money to the Odd Fellows Orphanage at Goldsboro; and if it is right to extend State aid to these two institutions, which represent secret societies, then, surely, for still stronger reasons, it is right to give State aid to the Orphanages of christian churches—of which there are three in the State.

Let the Commonwealth be just and give to all, or give to none, for the one is no worthier than the other four.

There was some sort of excuse for this thing when it was begun, for there was then but this one Orphanage in the State, but that reason does not now exist, nor is it any answer to this constitutional objection to say, that the first appropriation was made while Mr. Mills, a Baptist, was superintendent at Oxford—the thing was, in my judgment, a violation of the Constitution then, as it is now.

It is said by many that the Masons have combined with the Methodists, and that it is, virtually, a Methodist Orphanage now. I do no know that this is true, but there are many who do not scruple to so declare. If that be so, then I have no objection to offer to the alliance, or transfer, as a citizen, though I might seriously object as a Mason; but I do insist that the State has no right to support the Orphanage at Oxford, whether it be a Masonic Orphanage, or a Methodist Orphanage. Let the Masons, or the Methodists, support their own institutions as the Odd Fellows and Presbyterians and Episcopalians and Baptists are required to do. This thing is going to make a stir in the State and the politician who is wise will take warning.—Dr. Pritchard, in Charity and Children.

Opinion Vs. Experience—His Opinion.

WILMINGTON, N. C., April 9, 1891.

Gentlemen:—The Electropoise was received last evening. As I look at this apparently harmless cylinder with a cord attached and think of the price I can hardly refrain from Puck's soliloquy, "What fools these mortals be." The instrument is what you claim for it—a "curative agent of wonderful powers"—or it should take its place in history as the most stupendous colossal fraud of the ninteenth century. I shall use it faithfully, patiently and without prejudice in my family, and if the results are not one half (I shall be satisfied with one-half) what you claim for it, then look out, I shall attack it in the public print with all the energy at my command. For my sake, for the sake of the sick and suffering, I hope to demonstrate your claim—"a wonderful curative instrument." For the present I shall use it as you direct in your letter. If no results follow I will inform you.

Respectfully,

REV. R C. BEAMAN.

HIS EXPERIENCE.

DURHAM, N. C., Jan. 31, 1892.

Gentlemen:—* * * I find the Electropoise in great favor among a large number in this place. I have used it in my own family with marked benefit. I prize it very highly, and would not be without it for many times its cost. Respectfully,

REV. R. C. BEAMAN.

From Texas.

Dear Recorder:—On the 24th day of January last, I boarded the train in Statesville, N. C., with my family, to come to Texas. I was led to this with a hope that the climate here might be beneficial to me. The Lord granted us a safe journey, and we have all been well ever since we left North Carolina.

It was one of the sorest trials of my life to leave the dear brethren and sisters of Statesville church, many of them are the Lord's noblemen—as good and true brethren and sisters as any pastor ever had the honor of serving. And if there was a breath of dissatisfaction between people and pastor I did not know it. And I do pray that the Lord may give them a pastor who shall be able to lead them into much broader fields of usefulness than I was. Then, too, I hated to leave the dear brethren of the State Convention. I knew most of them, and was in accord with all measures and plans of work for the Master's glory which the Convention has in hand.

But if it is the Lord's will I should stay here, I desire to fall in line, and do what I can to advance his cause in this State. Now I have no doubt but some of your readers would love to know whether this is a good place for a preacher to come to. Well, I have not seen enough to tell much about it. But I venture this much. If any one is hunting a field, it it not a good place for one to come to, but if one desires to come to make a field; I know of no better place.

I hope to be able to preach some during the Summer, but can't tell how it will be. I am still unable to speak above a whisper. It is so hard to be idle when there is so much to do in this busy year of 1893.

May the good Lord bless and direct the dear brethren in the grand old State of North Carolina.

It is hard for you to understand how much we appreciate the dear RECORDER in this far off country.

When I have seen more of men and things in Texas I may write again.

W. A. POOL.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches, a year old, fresh as when picked. I use "Hood's improved process;" do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh and costs almosts nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last week I sold directions to over one hundred families. Any one will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful fruit samples. Fall and winter are the best time to sell directions, so people can experiment and be ready for next fruit season. As there are many poor people like myself I consider it my duty to give my experience to such, and feel confident any one can make one or two hundred dollars, round home, in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and complete directions, to any of your readers, for 19 two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the sample, postage, etc., to me. Mrs. W. M. Griffith, New Concord, Ohio.

The sulphite pulp mill, property of the Richards Paper Company, in South Gardiner, Maine, was destroyed by fire on the 16th inst. Loss, $200,000; insurance, $180,000.

Shirley Quilling and James Ewing of Huntingdon, W. Va., settled a quarrel last Thursday by shooting each other with pistols. Ewing was instantly killed, and Quilling was so badly wounded that he has since died.

In the New York Legislature, a bill was introduced several days ago which provides that it shall be "unlawful for any person either to sell, give, loan or furnish to any citizen of this State what is known as and called hoop skirts," and that it shall be unlawful "for any person to wear on their person such an article."

On Thursday night, Feb. 9th, the insane asylum of the Stafford County Workhouse, situated about four miles from Dover, New Hampshire, was totally destroyed by fire, and forty-four of the inmates perished in the flames. Only four of the inmates escaped. The building was of wood and burned like tinder. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

According to the N. Y. Herald, the colored congregation of the American Union Methodist Episcopal church in New York City, under the leadership of their pastor, the Rev. Dr. G. N. H. Smith, ex-Minister to Hayti, have set on foot the formation of an anti-lynching league to unite negroes, throughout the land in a petition to Congress to protect their race from outrage in the South.

Repeated shocks of earthquake have wrought great havoc on the island of Zante, the most beautiful of the Ionian islands, Mediterranean. Houses are in ruins. Thousands of terror-stricken people are without homes and depend upon the charity of the more fortunate for food. Two or three British men of war are on their way to the island with supplies for the destitute.

DIED.

WALTERS—Bro. Joel B. Walters died at his home in Caswell county, Feb. 14, 1893, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. For about fifty years he had been a member of the church, and for a long while member of the Milton Baptist church where he held his membership at his death. He leaves a wife, several children, and many friends to mourn their loss. He rests from his labors. Look up, sorrowing ones, to him who "doeth all things well." J. R. JONES

STEPHENSON—Sister Sallie R. Stephenson returned to God Feb. 6th, in her eighty-ninth year. She was a faithful member of Mt. Carmel church for fifty years. She was married to L. B. Stephenson in 1866. Truly theirs was a real union. Her hope, courage, faithfulness, and patient endurance, gave her great influence in her church, her family, and among her friends. Living successfully, she died triumphantly. Her husband and many friends will miss her sadly, but we will meet again. H. T. WILLIAMS.

RICHARDSON—A. White Richardson died at his home in Johnston county on February 3, 1893. His illness had been long and very painful. A complication of diseases ended in a fatal lung trouble and his life closed in its prime, forty-eight years. He was buried from Clyde Chapel, the church he erected in memory of his son and only child, Clyde, who died about five years ago. Notwithstanding the terrible weather, his many friends and relatives gathered around him, and the church was filled to the utmost. On the last Sunday of his life, he asked that some one sing, "Shall we gather at the river?" his favorite song. As they prepared to carry him out of the chapel, the choir sang it beautifully again. A member of Clyde Chapel, his greatest interest and lifework was centered there. An indulgent husband, a kind neighbor and generous friend, he was always a helper to those in need. He and Clyde sleep together in the silent tomb. The wife and mother is waiting still. He said he was willing, even glad, to die. Surely he has gone out of infinite suffering into perfect peace. COM.

WALLACE—It is my painful duty to chronicle the death of another aged father in Israel.

Brother Robert Wallace, at the advanced aged of nearly eighty-four years, quietly and hopefully passed away at his home in Duplin county on January 24th, 1893.

I am indebted to his son, J. F. Wallace, for the following facts relating to the deceased:

Robert Wallace was born in Rockfish township, Duplin county, N. C., on January 28th, 1809. He was of Irish extraction, his grandfather, Robert Wallace, senior, having emigrated, while an orphan boy, from Ireland and settled in Duplin county. Our brother was united in marriage to Margarett Chasten by Rev. Hiram Stallings, March 22d, 1832. Sister Wallace survives her husband, and is now, in her eighty-ninth year, hopefully expecting and awaiting the summons to cross over to the Better Land. Soon after their marriage they were both baptized into the fellowship of Corinth church, Duplin county, by Rev. Benajah Carroll. Owing to change of residence, he transferred his membership to Island Creek church in the same county, where it remained until his death.

Having been his pastor during the last ten years of his life, it gives me pleasure to bear testimony to the excellent character of our departed brother. He was not faultless; but he was a kind father and husband, a devout christian, a good neighbor, a highly respected citizen, and a great lover of his church and pastor, cheerfully contributing of his means to the benevolent objects of the one and the support of the other.

In the last few years of Bro. Wallace's life the infirmities of age debarred him, as well as his dear wife, from the privileges of public worship; and among the pleasing recollections that will accompany me to the grave is that of having preached the word of life as often as I could in the home of our brother and his beloved companion.

Death was to him great gain; but it is a sad bereavement to his family, his pastor, and his church which he had served for fifty years or more. JNO. T. ALBRITTON.

Resolutions of Thanks from Summerfield Baptist Church.

WHEREAS, Our church has never been able to purchase a musical instrument; and whereas, we believe that an instrument is a great aid to congregational singing, and that there is much power for good in sacred song; and whereas, Messrs. J. T. Davies and E. L. Ropella, of New York, have so kindly and generously presented our church with a splendid organ; therefore

Resolved, That we tender them our most sincere and heartfelt thanks for this magnificent gift; that we pray God's blessings upon them in this world, and a happy meeting with him in that upper and better world.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the above-named gentlemen; that a copy be sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication; also that a copy be spread upon the minutes of the church

SIMPSON'S 20 DAY

Early Cantaloupe

The Most Delicious and the Earliest of any Melon ever Introduced.

I have been in the trucking business for fifteen years, and I have produced a cantaloupe that is the superior of any in delicacy of flavor and in earliness for the market; and I propose to offer my limited supply of seed to the public at reasonable figures. If the seed of this strain of nutmeg melon were in the hands of some of our seedsmen they would not be sold for less than $5 per pound. Some of the finest strains of melons now offered by our seedsmen at fancy prices—for instance, Johnson's and Stokes Dixie Watermelon—first originated in North Carolina. See the recommendations of two citizens of Greensboro, N. C., and one Hundred could be furnished as readily and find out what those say who have seen and eaten my new cantaloupe:—

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 25, 1893.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe which you put upon our market last year (1892) was decided y the most delicious flavored and the earliest I ever ate. I bought largely of you, and I re ommend them in the highest terms.

DR. J. C. BRODNAX.

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 26, 1893.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON, Greensboro, N. C.:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe came upon the market the earliest of all, and I was surprised at the earliness of it. I am an old cantaloupe raiser, and I must have some of your seed for this coming season. Yours is a superior melon in every respect, and the very thing for early truckers.

The Tone of Voice.

It is not so much what you say,
As the manner in which you say it;
It is not so much the language you use,
As the tones in which you convey it.

"Come here!" I sharply said,
And the baby cowered and wept;
"Come here!" I cooed, and he looked and smiled,
And straight to my lap he crept.

The words may be mild and fair,
And the tones may pierce like a dart;
The words may be soft as the summer's air,
And the tones may break the heart.

For words but come from the mind,
And grow by study and art;
But the tones leap forth from the inner self,
And reveal the state of the heart.

Whether you know it or not—
Whether you mean or care—
Gentleness, kindness, love and hate,
Envy and anger are there.

Then would you quarrels avoid,
And in peace and love rejoice,
Keep anger not only out of your words,
But keep it out of your voice.

—Youth's Companion.

Johnnie and the Bricks.

Johnnie, a small boy living in the country, was one day playing with a lot of bricks as his uncle came along. This uncle was a friend to the boy and ready to help in any frolic that was not improper.

"What are you doing, Johnnie?" asked the uncle, after standing awhile to look at the boy.

"Building a house; that is what I'm trying to do. Did you ever build houses of bricks when you were a boy?" asked the little fellow.

"Very likely," was the answer, "though I forget about it, it is so long ago. But I was thinking if you could learn a lesson from these bricks."

"A lesson from bricks?" asked the boy in surprise; "how can I? Bricks can't talk."

"Books cannot either, but you learn lessons from them."

"Oh, but they have reading; that talks."

"But pictures teach lessons without a line of reading."

"Uncle, I wish that you would teach me a lesson from the bricks. Will you? I would like to see what they say."

"Very well," said the uncle. "Just set the bricks up each on its end, a little distance apart, and all in a line."

"How many shall I set up?" asked Johnnie, after he had placed about twenty on end.

"That will do," replied the uncle, looking at the long row. "Now, do you wish these bricks to teach you a lesson?"

"Yes, sir," replied the boy, eagerly. "What shall I do?"

"Come here to the end of the row and push the first brick over against the next one."

"What shall I do then?" asked the boy, hesitating.

"Nothing, until you have seen what the bricks do."

"Shall I push now?"

"Yes, right away. Push only the first one."

The first brick was pushed against the next, and then the boy stood up, looking on. The first brick pushed the next over, and that in turn the next, and that the next, until the whole row was down.

"There! They are all down! Every one is over!" shouted the boy. "See, uncle! All have tumbled!"

"That is so," said the uncle. "Now can you learn a lesson from those bricks?"

"What lesson? I don't see any to learn. I only pushed one down and all the rest fell of themselves."

"Did they fall of themselves, or did each push its neighbor, after you started the first one?"

"Oh, I see now, uncle, what you mean. If we give one brick a push it will push another, and that another, and so all will go down."

"Yes, Johnnie, and so it is with people. Give one a start downward, and he will take another down with him, and he another. But when did the bricks stop falling?"

"When all were down."

"Yes; and so it is with people. Start one in the downward way and he will take another along, and he another, and they will keep falling as long as there is one to fall. We start people in the way of evil habits or other sins, and they start others, and so, if nothing prevent, all might go down until the last had fallen."

"Uncle, I never thought of that; but it is so. One boy learns to cheat, or lie, or steal, and another learns from him, and another from that one; and so it goes on until a whole lot of boys cheat, or lie, or steal. It is awful, but I never thought of it before. The bricks have taught me a lesson."

"There is another lesson you may learn from them; go down to the end of the row and push back the last one that fell. Will it make the others stand up?"

"No, sir," said Johnnie, after trying to make the last one in the row stand on end. "I can't even make one stand unless I take it away from the others. They keep pushing it down all the time."

"Well, there are two more lessons. To tumble all down you need but start the first one; but you cannot make them all stand again by pushing one up straight. You cannot make that one stand up until you take away from those that went down [illegible] you may start a large number of [illegible] the downward way, by giving the [illegible] push; but you cannot bring them [illegible] up one. Each one must [illegible] by special effort. Nor can [illegible] making him stand safely [illegible] the evil company of those who are down. You see it is much easier to push people down than to help them up. It is much easier going down than to get back after you have fallen. Be careful, my boy, that you do not start some one in the way downward to evil and ruin; he will be almost sure to take others with him. To win him back will be a much harder task than push him down. Even if you save him, that will not save the others whom he took with him. Remember, too, that if you would overcome evil and be able to conquer temptation, you must stay out of the company that brings evil and temptation."

Johnnie looked at the bricks with a very serious face, as his uncle entered the house, and determined to act on the lessons the bricks had taught him.—Rev. J. A. Davis, N. Y. Observer.

The Art of Going to Sleep.

A disciple of Delsarte tells in the following paragraphs why grown persons sometimes find it hard to go to sleep, and how to overcome the wakeful tendency:

If you have never done so, watch yourself go to sleep, and you will be amazed to see how tense your position is. Your knees are drawn and bended, your back is curved, the arms are held more or less tightly to the body, and the fingers are folded; the eyelids are held shut, not allowed to droop over the eyes, the neck is strained, and the head seems to touch the pillows only at the temples. The points of contact with the bed are really at temples, shoulders, hips, knees, and anklea. Now look at a child sleeping. Every muscle is relaxed, every joint is inert, and prone on the couch; his little frame finds rest at every point.

The features are undone, so to speak, the nose widens, the mouth droops, the eyelids close easily, and with every line of expression obliterated he finds utter and complete repose. The abandon makes him fall out of bed sometimes, such an inert body has he become. You may imitate him even to that degree if necessary. Begin at your toes to relax, loosen all your joints and muscles, unbend your fingers, shake your wrists loose, take the curve and strain out of your neck, go all to pieces, in fact, and see how the day's fatigue seems to slip off from you, and the gentle mantle of rest and oblivion enfolds you like a garment.

In the same line of suggestion is a word from Hall's Journal of Health on the value of the couch in a cosey room. It says:

A room without a couch of some sort is only half-furnished. Life is full of ups and downs, and all that saves the sanity of the mentally jaded and physically exhausted fortune-fighter is the periodical good cry and momentary loss of consciousness on the upstairs lounge, or the old sofa in the sitting-room. There are times when so many of the things that distract us could be straightened out and the way make clear, if one only had a long, comfortable couch on whose soft bosom he could throw himself, boots and brains, stretch his weary frame, unmindful of tidies and tapestry, close his tired eyes, relax the tension of his muscles, and give his harassed mind a chance. Ten minutes of this soothing narcotic, when the head throbs, the soul yearns for endless, dreamless, eternal rest, would make the vision clear, the nerves steady, the heart light, and the star of hope shine again.—Examiner.

Not in It.

He has no enemies, you say;
My friend, your boast is poor;
He who hath mingled in the fray
Of duty that the brave endure,
Must have made foes.
If he has none
Small is the work that he has done:
He has hit no fraud upon the hip,
He has shook no cup from perjured lip,
He has never turned the wrong to right,
He has been a coward in the fight.

Money Saved is Money Made.

Dr. Wm. Self, of Webster, N. C., an old practitioner of medicine, tells us that after many years experience in medicine he finds it money saved to his patients to use Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein for coughs, colds and consumption.

Spreading Manure in Winter.

The subject of spreading manure in winter has been much discussed, with a decided trend of late in favor of it. Mr. A. B. Barrett sums up the advantages of the practice in the American Cultivator as follows:

There is practically little danger from waste when spread in winter, for during the greater part of the season the manure will be frozen, and freezing does not decompose the fertilizing ingredients. While the manure is in a frozen condition no chemical change takes place, and the manure keeps as well as if in the barnyard. The same holds true about blowing away. Take a field that is bare of vegetation in the winter, and how much of the dust or dirt is blown away by the wind. The earth, as well as the manure, is frozen stiff, or is in a muddy condition, so that the strongest gale cannot blow much of the material away. There is one exception to all of this. If the manure is spread on snow there is danger of considerable waste. It is very apt to be blown away with the drifting snow, and precaution should be taken never to haul out the manure when the fields are covered with snow.

If spread on the land at any other time the snow will fall on top, and as it melts a slight portion of the top soil will be thawed by the moisture, and more or less of the strength of the manure will be absorbed by it. This will not be wasted, but will remain in the soil until ploughing time. In fact, a little thawing is good for the manure, for then it becomes frozen into the soil later. By carting the manure to the fields when the land is hard and frozen the hauling is made comparatively easy, and there is no cutting up the land in great ruts. The work is also done at a season of the year when horses, as well as farmers, are nearly idle, and it is a good thing to give both something to do occasionally. When the rush of spring work is upon us we are truly thankful to feel that we have not the job of carting manure to the fields. We handle the manure in this way only once, which is also a saving.

The late PROF. BASIL MANLY, D. D., of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky.,

says of the Aerial Medication, after his wife had thoroughly tested it in a case of chronic catarrh and sore throat: "I can cordially recommend its use." Write for a fac simile of his letter in full.

Rev. W. E. Penn, author of the popular song-book, "Harvest Bells," makes the following statement:

I am an evangelist (Baptist) well known in the Southern and Western States. I was rapidly getting deaf from catarrh. When in Covington, Ky., five years ago, holding meetings in the First Baptist church, I happened to learn of Dr. J. H. Moore's treatment of catarrh while at the house of a friend. I saw in a moment it was the very thing I needed, and at once got it, and in three months my hearing was perfectly restored. Since that time I have recommended this treatment wherever I have been, and know of several bad cases of lung trouble that were cured by its use.

Several years ago I met a minister on the train who had been compelled to give up his charge on account of lung trouble. I advised him to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment; he did so, and in three months was back at his work, fully restored. All the leading physicians here endorse this treatment to the public, hoping it will be the means of bringing similar relief to many others.

The Missionary Call.

I believe that the call to be a foreign missionary, when allied to that which makes a man a preacher of the gospel at home, is distinct from such a one.

There is, in both cases, the same strong yearning for the salvation of the souls of men which constrains the one "called" to give his life to the work of teaching that salvation; and there is the same "setting apart" of himself, spiritually, from the worldly inclinations, which so easily rub the bloom from the freshness of soul consecration.

But what is that peculiar something that leads the happy and successful preacher to give up a loving and loved church at home; that takes the useful, earnest teacher from her class work in the Sunday-school, and from her place in the various societies of the church; that strange inner prompting that tugs at the heart of the thoughtful young man, even before he has ever entered a theological seminary, or decided upon his life work; what is it that decides each in his own sphere to lay aside clerical ambition, social pleasures, home ties, personal comforts, which have seemed necessities, all of these, in order to enter upon the mission ary's career? Whatever this constraining force may be, it constitutes a missionary's call. When it is the true call of the Spirit of God it is peremptory, and a mistake as to this point need never be made, it seems to me, when this same Spirit is ready to aid in eliminating all self-deceit and false motives.

Perhaps the greatest snare which entraps the young of both sexes into unthinkingly making vows looking toward a foreign mission and even into undertaking such, is the glamour which, to a certain extent, must always linger about one who denies himself for his Master's cause, but which has become considerably attenuated, as personal dangers and difficulties have disappeared before the march of civilization in most mission fields. To be like Christ, in humble serving and constant patience, should be the missionary's ideal, rather than that of gaining the international reputation of such and such a noted missionary of the past.

Let him who is considering whether or not he has such a call, apply a few simple tests to his motives and judge of the results with all honesty. The following facts may be useful in suggesting his own search-questions. The new missionary, if stirring, progressive, and enthused with a desire to see immediate results, and accustomed to the stimulus of an admiring congregation and working church-membership in his native land, after the numberless worries of transportation from his own country to that of his adoption, feels himself another being, unknown to himself. He knows nothing of the language jabbered around him all day long, new restraints bore him, the strange climate enervates him, his brethren seem moving in a sluggish, almost motionless, current of work, and his heart faints at the prospect of growing to be what he imagines his fellow-missionaries have become.

It seems to me that just here the example of Christ's life on earth is of great value; his own personal sufferings from contact with hard, uncongenial surroundings, his patience, his charity, his unselfish love for sinners ought to be an inspiration to the truly "called," and should give strength and wisdom to bear with uncongeniality of every kind, from that of one's own circle to the utmost limits of social and business intercourse.

Let him beware who imagines himself "called" to a life of charming, foreign incidents, such as one would meet with on a touring expedition through China, Mexico, Italy or Africa, and to intercourse with the best people socially, who will pet and fete the foreigner. The truth is that most of the foreign element that will enter into the missionary's life will be the thousand inevitable inconveniences of daily domestic life in a strange land, and a conforming to trying, unnatural circumstances, in an intercourse with a class of people almost entirely outside of his sphere at home.

All this means that a truly called missionary has a firmly fixed conviction that work for the saving of souls in a country outside of his own must be the work of his life; that he is ready to leave the preaching of the gospel at home to others whose convictions may keep them there; that he will possess his soul in patience through the first trying years of initiation, and not expect result nor applause as a reward of his work, except in so far as the inspired promises give hope to every laborer everywhere; and finally, that the work, so long as health is given him and his, shall be a life work. It is said that "hindsight is sometimes better than foresight," and some earnest workers have found to their sorrow of heart that a little more foresight would have been better for them before going to the great expense of moving themselves and families to a foreign country. Their consciences order them home, and they are right to come, and honest in doing so, but did their consciences sound absolutely clear notes in ordering them to go on the mission? Was there no inner remonstrance? Was duty quite plain? Sometimes the call to be a missionary seems to come long before the way is open to such a course. Life interposes many obstacles in all our chosen paths; it is not difficult to understand that a helpless or aged parent, dependent upon the solicitude of a son or daughter, is one of many God given cares, such as are not to be idly thrown aside for a mission to the heathen. There may be cases where even this may be necessary, when it becomes a wife's duty to follow her husband's convictions and him to a foreign land, and oh, the heart-ache of it! First, let the husband be perfectly sure that now is the accepted time for breaking his own and his partner's home ties, and then let both go ahead in peace, for the Lord reigneth.

In my not very long experience of missionary life I have been much impressed with the fact that the disposition and habitual temper of the intended missionary should be taken into consideration fully as much as the question of tendency to disease of the body. It should be known whether his previous life has shown him fitted to deal with his kind; and, if not of natural gifts in that direction, how far the grace of God has aided him in overcoming propensities of fault finding, intolerance and uncharitableness, three of the "little foxes" that too often enter the vineyard. He who feels that he can be content with his Master's "well done," will find in the glow at his heart and the growing inspiration for his work an all-sufficient reward.

A MISSIONARY.

Reading Novels.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—It may seem rather out of place for a young man to speak on such a broad subject; but from experience and continued observation, some thoughts have so pressed themselves upon my mind, that I want to say a few words to all the young people of our State. I say young people, for it is among this class that this habit is placing the blackest stigma.

There are some novels which every young person would do well to read, and by so doing would not only find enteresting employment, but would be inspired to be more noble in life. On the other side, there are books (novels)—thousands of them—scattered all over our State and country—and they have found their way into christian homes, too—which are doing more to corrupt the minds and hearts of the children than any other, yea, than any three other habits combined.

Can this be true? Reading, simply reading books, have such an effect on a person? True, you cannot see the effect on the life at once, and it may not be visible only to a close observer for a long time, but the work is being done equally as fatal though unseen, and sooner or later the person will discover that they have been affected more or less by the reading, while they may not admit it to the dearest friend.

Young people, and I may say young ladies, for they seem more addicted to this habit, for as a rule they have a stronger taste for reading than young men, be it said to their credit. They are not to blame every time in full, for they do not always know which are worthy of being read, and only take some one's word for it, and it may be one who is not competent of judging, or whose taste has been tainted, and hence not capable of judging. A young lady, with a true and noble heart, whose mind is almost entirely free from the stain of evil, with a mind looking forward to a noble and useful life to begin in the near future—and we have such ladies in our own State, with hearts as true as the world can afford, and from their life sweet influences, sacred and hallowed, are thrown around our lives both in Church and State.

But their hand by some mishap falls upon a novel, one not considered very bad, nor can any one point out the good points nor define the moral it contains. Some friend (f) placed it in their hands. They begin to read, only intending to read a few moments or a short time, while they have nothing specially to claim their attention—one page leads to another, and there seems to be no suitable place to stop, and soon they are entirely absorbed, hours pass away, while they unconsciously drink it in without discrimination.

They find sentences and expressions, which cause their cheeks to blush and burn, and which they would not repeat publicly for the world. Time to stop—no, not yet, it is so interesting—the book is finished. A friend comes in (lady friend). "I have a very interesting book which I have been reading, it is very good. I am sure you would like it."

"Where is it, on the centre table?"

"No, in my trunk."

"Why do you hide it?"

"Why you know Mr. A. is not willing for me to read it. You know he don't like such novels. He is rather 'cranky' and extreme on some things; but he will never know it."

"Where is the moral in it?"

"O, I don't know, but it is so interesting. You read it and you will be pleased."

A second novel by chance or purpose gets into her hands, with language less pure than the first. Some expressions too impure and vulgar to be read aloud—a time is selected when alone, or when others are asleep, and no one can see the burning cheek as they drink in the deadly poison. They can no longer find interest in the Bible—"it's too dry, not half so good as novels." Good books do not have the same interest for them they once had. True, they read the Bible sometimes for mere name, as they are sure it is very true and good for old people to read. Their taste has been degraded and lowered, their mind and heart are tainted with a blot which will baffle time to remove.

No longer is the once pure heart aspiring to a grander and more sublime life. The mind has been corrupted in a few short weeks more seriously than it otherwise would have been for years.

Read only such books as will fill your mind and heart with higher and nobler aspirations. If you do not know yourself, consult some one who does know, and whose judgment you are willing to trust, even before you read one page.

Have no book in your home that you are ashamed to have on the centre table.

Read no book which would cause your face to blush with shame should your best friend step in and find you reading it. The life will be filled with thoughts and actions corresponding to the food upon which the mind has been fed.

I had rather have a pure, noble heart that has not been stained by impure books or conversation, than to have all the wealth of this world and fame combined.

Gnats, Camels, &c.

SWALLOWING CAMELS.

A little girl being asked, "What was the special sin of the Pharisees?" promptly replied, "Swallowing camels." The Pharisees may have had a monopoly in that line some nineteen hundred years ago; but they have a good deal of competition in this progressive age. Many a good brother has great difficulty in swallowing a gnat, and finally not only gives it up, but points it out as a dangerous and deadly animal, but the camel, his camel, goes down with the greatest ease.

There is Bro. X., I have not heard from him on the subject; but I know his righteous soul is filled with holy horror as he contemplates the gnat evolved out of the minds and hearts of our sisters for raising a part of the Centennial Fund. Hear him speak of the plan. "The whole thing is wrong. We need no list of contributors to keep a hundred years. The plan appeals to pride, and has a tendency to lead us away from the true motive for giving. It would lead us to ignore the words of Jesus, '"Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth.'" Good Bro. X. has a hard time with this, and many similar gnats, and maybe he is right, and this plan of the sisters is a snare and a delusion. Yes, Bro. X. has trouble with the gnat; but he has been known to swallow a camel, his camel, with the greatest ease in the world. He affirms that the left hand must be kept in ignorance of what the right hand does, and therefore condemns the sisters' plan; but when he contributes to any cause you always see his name with the amount opposite in the published list of contributors. When an agent visits him, and he decides to make a contribution, he always contributes for himself and each member of his family, and in the next week's paper you will see the name and contribution of each member of X.'s family. Rather a big camel in the light of Bro. X.'s doctrine; but he finds no difficulty in swallowing it. Consistency, thy name is not Bro. X.! Reader, do you know Bro. X.? Perhaps, "Thou art the man."

THE OBJECTOR.

The objector is useful in one respect—he keeps you from stagnation. Every plan, every effort except his own, must run the gauntlet of the inevitable, "I am not in favor of that." Then comes the long and profitless discussion while the cause suffers. At length, when he yields the point, or you begin work without him, you have to overcome the opposition of many persons who would have entered heartily into the work if they had not heard that Objector objected. One of the easiest things in the world is to get people to do nothing. Brother Objector is a grand success along this line. Brother pastor, do you know him?

THE ARTFUL DODGER.

Perhaps you know him. He is found almost everywhere, and may be known by his skill in dodging work and collections.

A pastor once asked Artful Dodger for a contribution to State Missions. He replied, "I don't believe in State Missions; Foreign Missions is my special pet. When you take a collection for that purpose, I will help you." When the time to collect for Foreign Missions came, he called on him, and was met with, "I have made up my mind that we are wrong in doing so much for the heathen in foreign lands, while there are so many heathen at home." He was always anxious to do something else, generally something impracticable. When he is cornered, and must give something, it would do you good to see him squirm. For any neglected duty he always has a splendid excuse. In this line he can beat the man that invented the excuse business. Artful Dodger is great on show days. He glories in protracted meetings, and makes a fine impression on the visiting brother. On such occasions he bubbles over with religion, and the visiting brother thinks of him as one of the pillars of the church. Sometimes he is a woman.

T. J. TAYLOR.

How to Pray.

Be short. Jesus, by word and example, inculcated this. He described the Pharisees as those who "for a pretence made long prayers." Persons who sought his aid offered short petitions. Peter in the water, the publican in the temple, and the thief on the cross made short prayers.

When I was a young minister I received through the post office a slip cut from a newspaper containing a college commencement poem. The pew was addressing the pulpit. Four lines impressed me:

"Sermons like wells should small circumference sweep,
Be short in their diameter, but deep;
And public prayer, as in the Scriptures taught,
Beyond a cavil always should be short"

The last two lines were heavily marked about for my benefit. I never knew who sent the slip, but I pinned it over my study table, and kept it there for ten years; and then I did not destroy it, but pasted it in my scrap book, and have it now.

Be specific. Prayer that is indefinite does not avail. "My son," "my daughter," "my servant," "my sight,"—that is the form of request; and the accompanying charge is, "Bring him to me." It was wonderful, in a revival in college, how our prayers were answered for classmates in the order in which we prayed for them by name.

Be importunate. The midnight prayer, "Friend, lend me three loaves," was short, specific, and importunate. And it was answered, not for friendship's sake, but because of importunity.

Pray with a forgiving spirit. "When ye stand praying, forgive.' I once attended an ecclesiastical convention, and was entertained in a refined, christian household. A young lady in the family in a conversation remarked, "I never offer the Lord's prayer." On my expressing surprise, she added, "I don't dare to; I don't dare pray, 'Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors'; I am so afraid that I have not a forgiving spirit that I dare not ask God to forgive me as I forgive others." I asked, "What do you pray?" She replied, "I say, 'As we ought to forgive others.'"

We must do what we can to answer our own prayers. A little boy heard his father pray that God would feed the poor; and when the prayer was over, he said, "Father, if you will give me the key to the granary door, I will answer your prayer myself." Frederick Douglass tells us that when he was a slave he prayed seven years for liberty, but received no answer; at length it occurred to him that he must answer his own prayer; and when, with his eye fixed on the north star, he prayed with his legs, his prayer was answered. If we pray for the conversion of a child, a scholar, or a friend, we must speak to that person and do what we can to bring him to Christ.

We must expect that our prayers will be answered. "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." "Ask, and ye shall receive." Too many pray that the mountain may be removed, and when they open their eyes, say, "There, I knew that it would not be." "Without faith it is impossible to please God." "According to your faith be it unto you."—Dr. L. H. Read.

Fault-Finding.

An old gentleman, a class-leader, one day went into the shop, and the blacksmith soon began about what some christians had done, and seemed to have a good time over it. The old class leader stood a few minutes and listened, and then quietly asked him if he had read the story in the Bible about the rich man and Lazarus. "Yes, many a time; and what of it?" "Well, do you remember about the dogs, how they came and licked the sores of Lazarus?" "Yes; but what of that?" "Well," said the class leader, "do you know you just remind me of those dogs, content merely to lick the christian's sores." The blacksmith suddenly grew pensive, and has not had much to say about failing christians since.—Exchange.

Now, I want you to think that in life, troubles will come which seem as if they never would pass away. The night and the storm look as if they would last forever, but the calm and the morning cannot be stayed; the storm in its very nature is transient. The effort of nature, as that of the human heart, ever is to return to its repose; for God is peace.—Geo. MacDonald.

Paying the Preacher.

Our church polity is such that the pay of the preacher is a matter of agreement between him and the church. There are no bishops or presbyteries to review and exercise a constraining power over the churches. This absolute independence of the local churches is not altogether without its disadvantages. Baptists are perhaps as liberal as other denominations, but there are those among us that believe in a free gospel in its fullest sense. They like to hear good preaching, and expect the preacher to be decently clad, and also that his family be well provided for, but deny his right to stipulate with a church for a specific salary. He ought, they say, to preach and leave the amount that is paid to the generous impulses of the church members, who often feel at liberty to disregard their obligations to the church. This position is unreasonable and is often a mere subterfuge, behind which the avaricious or impecunious member hides himself. The preacher is human and must needs have food and raiment as other men. Often he has a family to support, failing to do which he would be esteemed worse than an infidel. To secure these necessary things for himself and family, he must buy them as do other men, but cannot buy unless he has money. If wholly consecrated to the ministry, he cannot turn aside to earn it by a secular pursuit. If he buys and fails to pay, it destroys his usefulness and loses him his good name. Who would listen to a preacher who does not pay his debts? How can he do this unless he looks ahead and arranges for the means to meet these obligations? With so much at stake he would be unjust to himself and to his family were he to trust to the generous impulses of the average church member. But to take another view of the subject, to do his best work in the ministry, his mind ought to be untrammeled so that he can throw his whole soul and all his energies into his work. He cannot do this unless he is freed from financial embarrassments by giving him a liberal support. Many church members look upon their contributions to the support of the ministry as gifts, when in fact the minister has a right to it because he has rendered a valuable consideration therefor. Christ himself, when sending out the seventy to preach, said to them, "And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give, for the laborer is worthy of his hire."—(Luke 10: 7.) Paul, writing to the Corinthians, very clearly states the case when he says, "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them to do you service."—(2 Cor. 11: 8.) This last Scripture, if it means anything, very clearly teaches that the church, or churches, he serves should support him, and the word wages indicates that he has earned it by reason of his serving the church.

But not only has he the right to demand a support, but it ought to be so liberal that he may be provided with every comfort. On this point Paul writes to Timothy (2 Tim. 5: 8), "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and doctrine."

It is also best for the church. A religion without personal sacrifice, without giving, is not the kind treated of in the Bible. Selfishness and the love of money go hand in hand. They are our most common sins, and the hardest to overcome. Giving tends to break down these sins, and to develop in us the spirit that prompted Christ to lose sight of self in his efforts to do good to others. Lastly, it is God's plan, for so hath he "ordained that they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." Under the Mosaic law he required tithes for the support of the temple service and of the priests who served therein. Not only did he lay a tithe on his people, but he made it specific in amount. How many of us now give one tenth to the support of the gospel? But we may again call Paul as a witness. In 2 Cor., 9th chapter, he plainly tells the Corinthians that, having served them in spiritual things, he had a right to partake of their carnal things.

In conclusion, if the preacher has temporal wants, if we would have his best service in the pulpit and out of it, if we would develop the grace of giving, if we would pay the debt we owe him, if we would obey the divine teaching, we must pay him liberally and promptly for his services. The church that fails to meet this obligation or allows any of its members to shirk this plain duty, will not prosper, because it lives in disobedience to a plain command.—C. A. Board, in Co-Worker.

Is there not a disposition in the current preaching of this age to ignore or at least deal lightly with the exceeding sinfulness of sin? Of course it is right to "hold up Christ" at all times and under all circumstances, but it is equally important to show men their need of Christ. We may be mistaken, but it does seem to us as we look back, that in other days the conviction of sin was more powerful, more manifest and more distressing on the part of the penitent than it is in this day. This whole subject awakens very serious and important inquiries.—Central Baptist.

He who is faithful over a few things is lord of cities. It does not matter whether you preach in Westminster Abbey or to a ragged class, so you be faithful. Faithfulness is all.—Dewy MacDonald.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

CITY CHURCHES AND PASTORS.

The importance of hearty sympathy and co-operation between the disciples of Christ, in doing the Lord's work, can hardly be overestimated. This is true of our people and our principles everywhere. So far as our general observation has gone, we think there is more of this spirit noticeable in country districts than in our cities. It is so often claimed that our city churches are ahead of those in the rural districts that it is a little refreshing to find one respect in which the country churches excel the city.

We do not think we are mistaken when we assert that among our city churches and pastors there is at times a decided want of that hearty co operation one with another in doing the Lord's work that one would expect from those so well situated to extend it. We do not mean to be personal or local in these remarks; but we have noticed such a marked indifference at times among city pastors and churches toward other pastors and churches in the same community that we can but think that special attention should be called to it; and as far as possible a remedy should be found for it. Our churches and pastors, according to our system of church government, are independent one of another; and this fact may account, to some extent, for the indifference complained of. And yet how dependent we are, one upon another under God, for peace, happiness, and success in this life! The inspired writer knew the force of the words, "For none of us liveth to himself; and no man dieth to himself." We believe in our independent form of church government; but it is possible that pastors and churches should imbibe too much of that spirit, and become too independent; so much so as to fail to recognize God's claim upon them for united effort, and they are in danger of cultivating that indifference one toward another which, in the presence of the strong opposition brought to bear against our principles, is often blind folly.

Is it not too often the case that one or more of our city churches are engaged in a life and death struggle against the powers of darkness, and yet receive but scant sympathy and help from other churches or pastors in the same city? There may be a series of meetings held at times in one of our city churches in which the other Baptist pastors and churches take little part. On the third or fourth night of such meeting the neighboring pastors and their members may "begin to drop in;" but then often more as spectators than as hearty co-workers. If the brother pastor is called on to pray or preach, there is an absence of that warmth and earnestness quite noticeable when he is holding a meeting in his own church. The members of other churches, even of the same faith, often take back seats and look on; and by their unsympathetic faces seem to say, "This is your battle, fight it out; you need not expect any help from me." Some of these back seat Baptists may have fine gifts in the way of singing, and doing other good work in such meetings, and yet they have to be coaxed and begged before they will take a front seat and show by their conduct that they feel at home. We are glad to say that many of our people do not act in this way; but what we have complained of is so often seen that it must pain all true lovers of our doctrines, and those that are anxious to see the coming of Christ's kingdom. When we think of those who act in this way, we feel like adopting the language of the apostle, "Now, therefore, there is utterly a fault among you," in regard to this thing.

We think our people are among the best people on the face of the earth; yet this does not blind us to their faults. It is a little hard to account for the state of things complained of in some cities. But among the possible causes may be little local jealousies and rivalries. It is a well-known historical fact that the ancient Grecian States were so generally at war one with another that it was difficult for them to unite, even in the presence of an overwhelming army of foreign invaders. Yet the man who has studied men and nations is not greatly surprised at such blindness; and we are far on the way to solve this problem when we remember that the Greeks were a heathen people. Yet one would expect a much better state of things among Christ's people; and generally, we are glad to say, would not be disappointed. To this rule, however, there would be no exceptions, and there would be if all of God's people saw eye to eye and stood shoulder to shoulder in doing the Lord's work. We once heard a Baptist pastor say of another, who had the oldest and strongest church in the city, "He gives me very little aid or encouragement in my work." Now that is a sad thing to be said about any pastor who lives near a brother who has charge of a weaker church. Are you, brother, reading these lines, the man? If so, let it be no longer true of you. It may not be amiss to say right here, however, that the pastor of the weaker church should not wait for all advances and brotherly overtures to come from the pastor of the older or stronger church. Some pastors, or even churches, have perhaps only themselves to blame for the exclusiveness to which they are relegated. "If a man would have friends, he must show himself friendly," is a motto that will apply to both pastors and churches.

Viewing this whole thing as we do, we think that our churches and pastors should always extend hearty sympathy and co-operation one toward another at all times, and especially at times when special efforts are being made to impress the community religiously and win souls to Christ. Even admitting the weakness of human nature, and that there may be some ground for local jealousies, cannot all of our pastors and churches rise above these petty things in the presence of the enemies of Christ? When there is a meeting in progress, then, at any one of our city churches, even though it be the small unpainted chapel on a back street of the town, let our people rally to the aid of the weak sister church and the struggling pastor. Ah, how it cheers their souls within them, melts their hearts, and kindles their joy, to see among them their zealous and influential brethren and sisters in Christ! There are few more beautiful and pathetic passages in the writings of the great Apostle Paul, than the one that describes his feelings when he met those that came from Rome along the Appian Way, "Whom when Paul saw, he thanked God and took courage."

Go, then, brethren and sisters; go in crowds to the help of your brethren in Christ. But go to work and to pray, and not to sit back and criticise. And remember that to go and work thus is not only a privilege, but also a duty. Once in the days of Deborah and Barak, Israel was engaged in a life and death struggle on the plain of Jezreel against Sisera and his host; and when the aged prophetess sang her song of deliverance, we find these words, "Curse ye Meroz; curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Let us take care, brethren that this curse does not fall on our heads when the "long roll" is beaten, and the battle is joined, and we fail to go to the help of our brethren. Has your church got the "dry rot?" Perhaps we have found the cause; if so, remedy it. Churches and pastors need self-examination now and then. When it is honest, we may be surprised at the results.

IT seems that our Bro. Patton is not satisfied with our answer to his criticism of our remarks in a recent number of the RECORDER on Gal. 1: 9. He still contends for the correctness of his criticism; but in his last rejoinder clearly intimates that said criticism was not intended for the whole editorial, a fact that he did not make so clear in his first article. He claims that Paul did not stick to the masculine gender in Gal. 1: 9, because he uses the Greek indefinite pronoun tis which may be masculine or feminine. When we admitted that we would not base an argument as to sex on such a passage as Gal. 1: 9, we meant simply this: that we would not base an argument as to sex on such a passage standing alone, without any reference to the context, or the general teaching of the Scriptures as to the matter mentioned.

Sometimes tis is used and another word occurs in the same verse, which plainly shows its gender, as John 11: 1; but at other times we are forced to examine the context of a verse in which tis occurs in order to determine its gender, as, for instance, Matt. 12: 47, 48, and Luke 9: 57, 58. In these cases, while the word in which tis occurs does not determine its gender, the context does. In other cases, the gender of tis can be easily determined by the nature of the act which it is used to describe, or by the general teaching of Scripture as bearing on the particular passage in which tis occurs without special reference to the immediate context. Now so far as Gal. 1: 9 is concerned, we claim that tis, as it occurs in that passage, is masculine, and this conclusion we reach by reference to the context (see verse 8), and by noticing the act (that of official preaching) which tis is used to designate, and which the Scriptures teach, is the work of men, and only men. So we affirm that tis in this passage is masculine, and that in writing even Gal. 1: 9, Paul "persistently sticks to the masculine gender."

....Rev. W. R. Gwaltney of Wake Forest was in the city on Monday last on his return trip from Morrisville, where he had been to conduct the funeral service of Mrs. Dr. Edwards,

....Rev. H. N. Quisenberry of Berkley, Va., gives his hearty endorsement of our editorial last week on "American Flunkyism." He reports his work in a most excellent condition.

....Sister Eliza M. Yates of Shanghai, China, her daughter and son in-law, brother and sister Seaman, arrived in Raleigh, N. C., on Friday, Feb. 24th, and are the guests of Bro. M. T. Norris.

....Rev. E. W. Wooten of Wooten, N. C., writes that there has been very little work done among the churches this winter. The severe weather prevented pastors from reaching their appointments.

....General P. G. T. Beauregard, a Confederate General in the late war, and whose name for several years has been associated with the Louisiana Lottery, died at his home in New Orleans on Feb. 20th, in his seventy-fifth year.

....We are informed that five men, Jim Hickson, Willis Cole, Ragan Cole, and B. Follet, and a mulatto named Griffey, all concerned in the blockade whiskey business, went from North Carolina, near the line, over into Tennessee, near Limestone Springs, to the house of T. M. Johnson and shot him and his wife dead in their own yard.

....Rev. J. H. Martin of Hamptonville, Yadkin county, N. C., says that he is confident if the circulation of the RECORDER was increased in his county that the contributions for the Lord's cause would be doubled in less than two years. If that is true, the pastors and leading brethren and sisters could bring it to pass with a little effort on their part.

The College Association of North Carolina met in annual session in Raleigh last week on Friday and Saturday—the 24th and 25th of Feb. President C. E. Taylor of Wake Forest College presided and Prof. W. A. Withers of the A. & M. College, was secretary. The meeting is generally considered a splendid success. It was well attended and was both profitable and entertaining.

....Rev. C. W. Scarborough of Murfreesboro says: "Suffer a word in answer to Bro. A. J. Ward's question in RECORDER of February 1st. The preachers of the eastern part of the State are afraid to write about themselves and their work. The brethren down in this section think that when preachers find the best place and the best people, and their work moves on grandly, gloriously, and all this is written up, the brethren do say, "Well, that is an advertisement for a call." Then, too, the brethren here can't understand how preachers can fish for a call, and then declare that providence directed them to the best of all fields and the best of all peoples. We are afraid to write, Bro. Ward."

....Col. J. M. Heck of Raleigh has been the recipient of a beautiful testimonial of his admirable arrangement and management of the late Centennial procession. It was a lovely cup of sterling silver, and was inscribed "Col. J. M. Heck, Chief Marshal. From the Marshals of the Raleigh Centennial, October, 1892." It was presented on the 22d of February, Washington's birth-day, by Capt. C. B. Denson, and was responded to in the Colonel's happiest style.

....From "Editorial Brevities" in Western Recorder we take the following: "The term 'popular preacher' is mixed up with so many connotations of superficiality, of effeminacy, of vanity, of emptiness, of vapid verbosity, that any one to whom it is applied may well regard it as a term of humiliating insult." So says Archdeacon F. W. Farrar. Let our young ministers take care how they acquire the reputation of being "popular preachers," and let editors be careful how they apply the term. There are those who feel complimented by having applied to them this "humiliating insult," as Farrar calls it.

....President Shearer of Davidson College is a wise and good man, but he must have run off his own track when he prepared for the Legislature a bill putting the University on the apex of education and knocking the base from under it. We think there is abundant room for the University and for all the denominational colleges. In fact, we would like to see any denomination do its full share of the work of education in the State. Every one of them needs a Professor of the Ten Commandments, and another of the New Commandment. On these points we consider the usual college curriculum defective. We attach more importance to the tenth commandment than to the whole science of athletics.—Charity and Children.

....It is announced that Profs. Briggs and Smith propose to form a new denomination, "founded on the errancy of the Bible," in case the Presbyterian General Assembly decides against them. Dr. Briggs is sure he can carry Union Theological Seminary and several "prominent" churches into the new denomination, while Dr. Smith is relied on to carry Lane Seminary. The latter had only fifteen students, by the last account we received. Perhaps it is expected that the General Assembly will be so frightened at the danger of schism that they will not dare to decide against these two gentlemen. We will see what we will see. Among other things we will see whether money given to maintain one set of doctrines can be taken and used to overthrow those doctrines. Let the erring and errancy brethren form their own denomination whenever they will, but let them build their own churches and found their own theological seminaries.—Western Recorder.

Rejoinder to "A. C. Covington."

A. C. Covington of Capel's Mills says:

"It is all right" for W. B. Harrell "to attack the whisky traffic"—(I wonder "A. C. C." didn't "attack" it, himself, in his reply—I wonder if he ever did lift his voice anywhere, on any occasion, in public or private, against the whisky traffic?) "but," says he, "I am sorry to see any preacher advocate a law" (the homestead law) "that fosters dishonesty."

This seems to be a matter (the homestead) that the brother can't swallow. The liquor curse, which is the sum of all iniquity, he disapproves of but faintly; but the homestead law he would utterly abolish, as he declares that "the homestead law is a disgrace to North Carolina." It not only, in the estimation of "A. C. C.," fosters dishonesty, but it is a disgrace to the State.

Well, who made the law? The Legislature of North Carolina. Who composed the Legislature when this disgraceful law (?) was enacted? The very men whom "A. C. C." voted for, and for whom many other good citizens voted also.

Were these legislators dishonest men? Did we vote for dishonest men to fill the legislative halls of our State Capitol at that time? Surely if "A. C. C." thinks the law they made to save the homes of poor women and children "fosters dishonesty," then the men who made such a dishonest law were themselves dishonest men, "A. C. Covington of Capel's Mills" being the judge. A fountain does not send forth sweet water and bitter at the same time. They either were, or they were not, true men. Which?

Our Legislatures have generally been composed of men who have homes and families themselves. They saw the need of some law that would break the iron grip and the cruel grasp of "the skin-flints and sharpers" all over the State who stood ready to sweep the last acre from the control of the needy and the helpless; and in such emergency, they would have been less than human, less than honorable, had they not "called a halt" just then and there.

A. C. C. ought to know that there is another stand-point from which the homestead law may be viewed besides the one occupied by himself and others like him. We do not speak thus because we are possessed of a homestead protected by the law. We have not a foot of land on earth. No $1,500 homestead is our hiding place, nor $100 either. We do know, however, that the last vestige of a home would be ruthlessly "gobbled up" from many a worthy family of mother and little ones by those same "sharpers" and tricky legal gentlemen to aid and abet, if the present homestead law is repealed or abolished.

And more. Not one of those legislators, now tinkering at the present homestead law to have it overturned, would ever return to the Legislature.

But we don't argue for this, or for any other law that belongs strictly to the domain of politics. As a gospel minister, we would leave some things wholly to the politicians; but as for the traffic in drink, so help me Heaven, I expect to fight it with my latest breath, and "may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth," if I do it not.

To be called a "fanatic" or a "crank" by the whisky politicians and the rum hole denizens, all amount to nothing, so we win at last and enter in. Poor souls! Blinded by the love of drink, how can they see the thing that is good for all, even entire prohibition? How can they?

But "A. C. C." need not have said that he regretted "to have to run against a preacher." We are used to being "run against," and run at, and sometimes the attempt is made to run over us, too; but it matters not. We stand for truth, and truth will, in the end, prevail over all opposers, which may the Lord soon bring to pass.

W. B. HARRELL.

Dunn, N. C.

From Rev. G. P. Bostick in China.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—We are now nearing the close of another year in this land of heathenism and darkness. It has been a year of peculiar difficulties and trials to me, but in all my cares, anxieties and perplexities, God has been most gracious. And despite all that may be called trials and difficulties, I have found more to encourage in the work here in the last five months than in all the three previous years combined. The protracted illness of my wife, and the building of a house, as treasurer of the mission, have prevented me from mingling with the people as much as I otherwise would. Mrs. Bostick had a long sickness in early spring, and then a longer and more serious attack again in the summer, from which she has not yet fully recovered.

But in the last few months I have been a good deal with the people, and have been greatly encouraged.

The fourth Sunday in November we had here in Tungchow the annual autumn church meeting, and at the same time a gathering of some members of the four little churches at Saling near Pingtu. In both of these meetings the Holy Spirit seemed to be present, and the native brethren talked much that encouraged one another and the missionaries about our common hopes concerning the future progress of the gospel in this land.

Some of the brethren from twenty five miles east of the city went home with some who lived ten miles west, and Sister Crawford and I have visited them since, and find that their few days' visit did a great deal of good. We try to encourage these native christians all we can to thus associate with each other and to tell of the love of Jesus to those who know it not.

I made a trip to the section east of the city where we have christians, spending the second Sunday in this month. It was bitter cold and snowed on me much of the way there and back, yet I did not suffer specially except to get frosted heels. I stopped in the home of a native brother, sleeping on his brickbed, and eating his food, using the chop sticks, and they were as hospitable as any American christians could be, so far as they were able.

One old brother walked ten miles through the snow nearly a foot deep to be at services that day. He said he was not cold, notwithstanding his hog skin shoes were covered over with snow, while he sat in a room with only a dirt floor for over an hour at the services. In that region are six different villages with christians in them. I am praying and hoping to see some special development there ere long. There are now two or three in the region who are desiring baptism.

The third Sunday in December I spent at Peh Kob, ten miles west of Tungchow. This is one of the villages which Sister Crawford visits frequently and in which we have three of our best christians. It is a delight to my soul to see how earnestly they tell what they know of the gospel to others. One widow lady there is a christian and is wealthy. She has had great persecution from her relatives and neighbors, but she tells them that if they kill her it will only send her to heaven the sooner. She has endured not a little for Christ's sake, and on one occasion, when one of the missionaries wanted to see the mandarine for her, she declined, preferring to manage her own case. In her village and other surrounding villages are now many who know much about the gospel. There are two who wish to be baptized soon. One of them is an old carpenter, who is seventy-six years old and has six sons. I recently spent a night very delightfully in his house. There are many encouraging signs now on every hand, but still there is plenty to discourage; and but for the fact that we feel that we are at work with and for God, we would often feel like giving up. To have the consciousness of his presence is sufficient to encourage us against all things else.

Will our friends pray earnestly for God's blessings upon this work?

With profound gratitude to God for all his mercies during this year, and with earnest prayers that I may do better service next year than ever before, I shall after two days by God's grace enter into the duties, trials and joys of a new year. May heaven's richest blessings abide upon you all who serve God in sincerity and truth.

Fraternally, G. P. BOSTICK.

Dec. 30, 1892.

THE Sunday-school Board of the Southern Baptist Convention has just sent out to the different States another appropriation for Sunday-school missions. In each case it was sent to the State Board of Missions or Sunday-school Board, as the Convention requires the work to be done in conjunctions. Over $3,000 in cash have been appropriated in this way. This serves to indicate what may be accomplished through this agency of the Convention. The Board has no revenue except from its literature, and every order for Sunday-school supplies is a direct contribution to missions. See advertisement of the Board in this paper.

God is working in his providence and grace for the evangelization of the world.

A Visit to Stetson University.

Though we have been more than two years in Florida, we have seen little outside of Ocala. It was, therefore, a very pleasant break in a quiet life last Wednesday to start out for a trip to De Land. Now, De Land to us Florida Baptists means Stetson University, located there. It is hardly necessary to explain that John B. Stetson, the well known hat manufacturer of Philadelphia, has contributed from time to time to the Baptist school there until it has come to bear his name. His latest gifts had been two beautiful buildings costing together about $80,000, one called Elizabeth Hall in honor of Mrs. Stetson, the other not yet named. These buildings, recently completed, were to be formally presented to the board of trustees on the 16th inst., and so from all parts of the State the clans gathered in joyous expectation.

Thursday afternoon at 2:30 the presentation exercises began in the Gymnasium. The presentation address by Rev. Dr. Chase of Philadelphia, Mr. Stetson's pastor, was very appropriate and much complimented. A pleasing and graceful little episode occurred at its close which put the large audience in the happiest frame to enjoy the further exercises.

Sitting on the rostrum, awaiting his turn to reply, was Rev. W. N. Chaudoin, perhaps the best-known and best loved minister in Florida. For about twenty years, in spite of much physical infirmity, he came to Florida then for his health, he has toiled and prayed and sacrificed for the Baptist cause as few men could do. As innocent as a lamb of the friendly plot against him it was a study to watch the face of the dear, good man, when Dr. Chase, turning to one of the trustees, concluded somewhat in this manner: "And now, sir, in behalf of Mr. Stetson, it is my privilege to hand over to you the deeds to Elizabeth Hall and Chaudoin Hall." Bro. Chaudoin, though a little choky at first, then accepted the gift in the name of the trustees. It is not strange that it was pronounced the speech of his life. With a full heart he reviewed the history of the school from its beginning, seeing the gracious leading of God's hand throughout—in the choice of location, in the friends he had raised up, and especially in their wise selection of a president. "He thanked God that at the close of the session not a dollar of indebtedness had yet stood against the University, and he thanked God for the reason," pointing to Mr. Stetson.

Col. Banes of Philadelphia, a prominent lawyer and Baptist layman, then made a bright, spicy little talk of a few moments, and was followed by Dr. Broadus. I am no stenographer, or professional reporter, and can only give the barest outlines of these addresses. I fear it savors of presumption for me to attempt even that. Those who have heard Dr. Broadus can imagine the practical, simple, fatherly way in which he talked to the bright young girls and boys before him. He reminded them of their duty to make the most of themselves for their own sakes, and for the sake of future students who would be more or less affected by the atmosphere they were then helping to create. To be careful of the habits they were forming—in nine cases out of ten a students habits were fixed when he left college. Trust to hard work and not genius. Learn how to study—to study when you don't feel like it, and to stop at the proper time, though you feel like keeping on. Get enough sleep. It is impossible to atone for this morning's idleness by to-night's imprudence, &c., &c.

President Forbes then followed in an excellent and characteristic talk. It did people harm to flatter them, but it surely could do no harm to thank them. His heart was full of gratitude to Mr. Stetson and the many others who had aided so nobly in bringing about these glorious results. He kept his own share of the work in the background with a modesty that was truly beautiful. By general consent President Forbes is "the right man in the right place." In addition to his rare intellectual qualifications, his lovely christian character gives him special fitness for the position. It was pleasant to see the loyalty of his pupils when, as some of the visitors were discussing the different addresses, one of them said "I tell you, President Forbes' was best of all."

After the dedication prayer, a beautiful dedication ode composed for the occasion, set to the Marsellaise hymn, was sung very sweetly as a solo, the audience joining in the last four lines of each stanza. The last four lines of the last stanza ran thus:—

"To thee, O Lord, to thee,
We dedicate this shrine;
Oh, grant that it may ever be
A dwelling-place of thine."

At 7:30 the large Gymnasium was again filled with a cultured and appreciative audience, Dr. Broadus the speaker of the evening. "The Lost Chord," by Sullivan, delightfully rendered by a class of eight young ladies, seemed a fitting prelude to the address which followed. The subject was the well-worn one—"The need of better education,"—but it was fresh, helpful and stimulating. Better education is demanded in all the professions, in the field of authorship, for our editors, with their far-reaching influence, and in every department of industry. Now that our country is fast ceasing to be a new country, competition is getting sharper, and he who is not well equipped will be left behind. He pleaded for better pay for teachers that they might do better work. Old preachers in dread of being shelved must throw aside their good old sermons, read new books, and keep in touch with the present. Money put into schools seemed the safest and most profitable investment. Sometimes by a violent stretch of the imagination he fancied himself a rich man, contributing generously of his means to some worthy institution, and while in that imaginary state, if satisfied with the wisdom of his first bequest, he thinks he might even consider the propriety of making additional gifts. Here turning to Mr. Stetson, he playfully added, "Of course nothing personal is intended." Better education was within the reach of all present. "Tell me," said he, "that I have reached the point where I can improve no more, then bury me alive quick, before the thought, in all its bitterness, can take possession of my soul!" What an inspiration this aspiring, ever growing, grand man must be to the young ministers daily associated with him.

At the conclusion of Dr. Broadus' address, Col. Banes arose and said that many had regretted not having heard more from Mr. Stetson. He had been authorized by Mr. Stetson to make a short speech in his stead. "I am requested by him to state that he has given an additional $50,000 to endow a Forbes chair during the presidency of that gentleman." This was surprise No. 2, and was received with prolonged applause. After a neat speech of thanks from President Forbes, the large audience sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," &c., the benediction was pronounced, and all adjourned to the reception at Chaudoin Hall.

It was a pleasure to shake hands with Mr. Stetson, and to congratulate him on the privilege of doing so much good. How happy he must be to see for himself the fruits of his benefactions rather than defer them till death.

Under the polite escort of one of the young men, we made a tour of all the buildings, commencing with De Land Hall, in which are the chapel, music rooms and art room. Next, on to Elizabeth Hall, an imposing structure of brick, terra cotta and stone, containing all the recitation rooms of the University, together with the library, reading room, chemical laboratory, offices, cloak rooms, &c. Mr. C. T. Sampson of Washington has given one thousand dollars yearly for five years for the library, which now numbers 4,000 well-selected volumes. We lingered in the well appointed recitation rooms. We sat down in those comfortable, latest improved chairs, and thought with a sigh of the hard, backless benches on which we had wrestled with lessons still harder. The satiny hard wood finish of the interior, with its paneling and solid decorations, broad oaken stairways, spacious halls, I can give only a hint of them. If young people cannot be induced to learn amid these surroundings they are indeed hopeless.

Then, under the guidance of one of the young ladies, we made a visit to Chaudoin Hall, the girls' dormitory. The boys confess to a little envy of the girls in their elegant new quarters. As the young lady led us from one end to the other of the splendid building she did so with evident satisfaction. Not only the parlors, but the girls rooms were open for inspection. Very likely they had received a little extra adornment for the occasion by way of flowers, bric-a-brac, &c., but aside from all these there was the furniture—a nice oak suit, consisting of bedstead, bureau, washstand, table, rocking chairs, each room nicely curtained and carpeted, and, best of all to the feminine heart, two convenient closets. Next came a round through the boys' dormitory in Stetson Hall. The boys were not to be eclipsed by their fair neighbors, and so pictures of mothers, sisters and best girls mingled with flowers; some had growing plants in the window—and all sorts of pretty knick-knacks made their rooms very unlike one's usual conception of school-boy house keeping. The furniture was the same as in the girls dormitory. The rooms throughout were as cosey and comfortable as any girl or boy needs to have at home. The buildings are all lighted by electricity and heated by steam from a large central plant.

Our Ocala party had the pleasure of being entertained at Stetson Hall. The writer has had the usual Southern prejudice against the co education of the sexes. This visit has greatly modified it. In the dining room there were seven tables, each seating fourteen. One or more teachers sits at each table with about an equal number of boys and girls alternating around the table. It seemed more like a pleasant home circle than a boarding school. I think I never saw more polite, manly young men, or more modest, gentle young ladies. May it not be that the association is helpful rather than hurtful?

The town of De Land is located in the pine section, with a population of about fifteen hundred. No oaks, and no moss, which latter, they say, means no malaria. It is sandy and rolling, and must be one of the choicest spots in Florida for healthfulness. The town is filled with winter visitors. Among the pupils quite a number from the North had come for the double purpose of attending school and escaping the severe winters at home. The session opens in October and closes in May, which suits exactly. One young man said to us, "I am as well as I can be down here, but as soon as I go back to Chicago the cold tears me all to pieces." Even in North Carolina a parent with a delicate son or daughter might find it very advantageous to send such to Stetson for a few terms. One capital feature of the school must not be overlooked—the young men are not permitted to use tobacco in any form.

It almost transported one to Wake Forest to see Prof. Farriss and brethren Cohen and Osborne seated on the rostrum looking so much at home. In the large crowd I failed to find Bro. Cohen afterwards, and so, much to my regret, I did not meet him.

The weather was delightful. All along the route—for we passed through some fine portions of the State—many of the orange groves still had enough fruit on them to look beautiful. The woods were gay with dogwood, plum and red-bud in full bloom, which everywhere clambered the yellow jessamine in wild luxuriance.

At the University the doors and windows were wide open, mocking-birds singing, roses blooming, and some of the young girls were comfortably dressed in white. We shall always have pleasant memories of our visit to Stetson, and a hope of repeating it. Long may it prosper!

It has been such a pleasure to have with us Mrs. Williams of Raleigh, and Mrs. Wray, formerly of that place, but now of Columbia, S. C. They seem pleased with Florida.

To-day we have our share of the prevailing Northern blizzard. The wind blows, and we need a little fire, but the roses are blooming, the strawberries reddening, and the orange trees budding out nicely. A Florida winter for me every time.

Rejoinder of Rev. J. E. White.

Dear Recorder:—Your kindly criticism editorially of one or two points of the letter written by myself to the RECORDER of February 1st, on "The Missionary Call" did not it seemed to me make necessary anything further from me except a brief restatement of what I really believed with regard to this matter of a call to the ministry. But Bro. J. R. Pace and Bro. T. S. Andrews so vigorously assail those points against which "the older and wiser heads" mentioned in Bro. Andrews' letter, did not seem in a hurry to protest, regarding them evidently as the "most dangerous" heresy that I really feel that I ought to say a word in defence of the letter which they assail.

I am certain that I have no desire to take refuge in Bro. Andrews' proffered escape from an untenable position—that "Bro. White and all others have a right to their opinion" I have a right to my opinion only as that opinion is supported by experience, reason or authority. I have no right to an opinion if that opinion be as Bro. Andrews says "dangerous doctrine."

The two brethren did not deal fairly with the article. They seemed to have felt that something of the nature of rank heresy had been uttered and in their eagerness to stamp it out were not careful to make the writer responsible for what he really did say but with a portion of his material, the modifying and qualifying phrase left off, construct a man of straw which they then proceed valiantly to demolish. Bro. Andrews quotes as follows, and Bro. Pace does the same thing:

"We no longer subscribe to the doctrine of Apostolic succession." "Why? because it is neither scriptural nor reasonable. Besides, it tends to religious oligarchy. And the sooner we rid ourselves of the other and companion error of a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry, * * * nearer will we accord with truth, Scripture, and common sense, and the sooner will the Master be commended to all hearts."

Against this he fulminates. Will the brother allow me to suggest that he in fairness should have quoted the phrase, coming in my letter where he put asterisks "with its attendant theatricals of seances, visions, &c."

With that phrase supplied will the brethren find fault with what is quoted?

If Bro. Pace had done this I do not believe that he would have felt called on to say that he "was in the dark," for he goes on in a minute to agree that he does not believe "that God calls men now by an audible voice or by angels or any wonderful vision."

Bro. Pace was not "in the dark." He only thought he was.

The calling of men into the ministry now is what we were discussing and if Bro. Pace does not believe in the "audible voice and miraculous interposition it is difficult for an ordinary mind to see the appositeness of his citation of Moses and the Bush, Samuel and Jonah as scriptural proof that God does now call men into the ministry by personal and miraculous enterposition. Also the brother's quotation of Pauls word's "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel" is unfortunate for the cause in point. When Paul said that he had been in the ministry for a long while and was only expressing the great hold the gospel had on his mind and the woe he would suffer if he did not continue to preach it. In no sense is it an exclamation wrung from him while considering his call to preach.

Bro. Andrews' argument placing regeneration and the call to preach on the same passage for support is something new in theology. Yes brother, we may "adopt the same language and say "So is every one that is called of God to the ministry." But it would be, like a good many other things we say, gilded nonsense. But since I desire to do only this and then close the matter so far as I am concerned,—set myself straight with the brethren and the editor; perhaps I can best do so by stating what I believe to be the nature of the call to preach.

I accept the distinction made by the RECORDER between the official and unofficial ministry. But if, as the editor says, "telling sinners the glad news of salvation is preaching the gospel," it must be that those who do this feel impelled by the Spirit to do it, and I cannot see that this call is one whit less miraculous than the impression or call to preach "officially," or that it is less durable. And I still believe that the call to do the "official" work is determined by the man's own judgment, enlightened by impressions and convictions of his fitness and talent. I believe that God intended that these official officers, the bishops and pastors, should be fitted by nature to rule, guide, control and govern.

It is a worthy ambition if one love Christ to desire such an honor, should he possess the fitness and talent, and Paul so declares it. 1 Tim. 3: 1, 2—"This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop he desireth a good work. A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach." The call to preach, the impression made by the Spirit urging one to lay aside worldly ambitions, in my opinion, is no more miraculous and special than the impression made by the Spirit urging a man to do a certain act of charity. That there is a great difference in the result aimed at by the Spirit I readily see, but the character and manner of the impression is the same in both cases. It may require the expense of more spiritual force, the struggle may be sharper and more emphatic in one case than in the other, but the manner of approach and application is the same. Therefore in the name of the large army of faithful un-"official" preachers of the gospel, to whom the guidance of the Spirit to tell their Lord's message, is an ever living force, I protest against their being run off into little theological sidetracks, to which no call from God comes, while their "official" brethren lord it over them under the plea of special revelation.

I read in Acts, eighth chapter, that there was great persecution directed against the members of that church, that "they were all scattered by this persecution abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the Apostles," and that "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." If they did not preach publicly, then language is incapable of conveying mental impressions, and if they were not called of God to preach, then Luke has failed to record God's displeasure at their doing so.

I contend that my position is Scriptural and reasonable, and that experience would approve it were it unclouded by mental hallucinations. And I still earnestly believe that if the growth in grace were persisted in that every truly converted person could not, as the supreme importance of the gospel forced itself on his heart, but go preach it to his friends, to strangers, everywhere, as did these members of the Jerusalem church. It is a sad fact that the propagation of the gospel has been delivered over to an official class, and they almost alone of the millions who profess to be soldiers of Christ feel the tremendous importance of his cause. It is a discouraging fact that the ministry (official) must do all the preaching and that they are almost the only men who are sufficiently impressed with man's need of salvation to give some of their time to teaching him the way of life. And I also verily believe that the tendency to divorce the clergy from humanity and thus rob humanity of its own sense of responsibility, is the result of this mystifying clause of special revelation on the part of preachers, and that the sooner we realize and admit that Christ's gospel is the one great thing of the world, the supreme solution of humanity's problem, and that he who, in the love of it and his Master, feels that he ought to declare it to others, is doing the work of Christ, good work, noble work, divine work, then sooner will be a revival of that spirit in the christian world that filled the hearts of the early christians, each of whom felt called to preach the gospel. Is there anything unorthodox in this belief? I am sorry if there is.

To show that there is nothing startling or strange in my view of the gospel call, let me quote from Dr. A. T. Pierson in his book "Evangelistic Work", chapter second. "To many modern minds the word 'preach' always suggests a 'clergyman' and a 'pulpit.' There is absolutely no authority for any such notions in the New Testament. There is nothing in the word preach which which makes it the exclusive prerogative of any order or class to spread the good news. Even Stephen and Philip, who not only preached but baptized, were not ordained to preach but to "serve tables" as deacons. The proof is positive and ample that all the early disciples felt Christ's last command to be addressed to them. Let us not invest the term minister with a mistaken dignity. It never conveys in the New Testament the notion of superiority and domination, but of subordination and service. Teaching was not confined to the presbyters or bishops; all had originally the right of pouring out their hearts before the brethren and of speaking for their edification in public assemblies. This chasm between clergy and laity makes a rent in the body of Christ. The church began as a pure democracy—the creation of clerical caste is a matter of historic development. The common priesthood of believers is a fundamental truth of the New Testament."

The RECORDER will permit me to add in conclusion that so long, in my earnest belief, as the "official ministry" continue to isolate itself under the glamour of special and only revelation denying to the converted the same divine right to declare from pulpit or rostrum the word of salvation, and persist in what every reader of the records of earliest gospel propagation, must know to be a departure from the methods employed by Christ and his converted followers, so long will the evangelization of the world creep at a snail's pace.

JOHN E. WHITE.

Wilson, Feb. 23, 1893.

To the Preachers of the Raleigh Association.

Brethren:—The time for our Centennial work is very short, and probably it is not possible to make a personal canvass of the churches. But the opportunity of making an offering must not go unimproved. We have decided, therefore, to ask each preacher in the Raleigh Association to bring this matter up at once, and to take a collection in each church he serves. Do not worry yourself nor your churches about the several different objects to which it can be appropriated. Take it for "the Centennial of Missions." Let it be the offering of each church towards celebrating the great Centennial year. Do not delegate it to the sisters, nor to the Sunday-schools (unless between your appointments they can see and solicit something from every member). But the time is so short that unless something is done at once, some churches will fail to have a part in this work.

Brethren, make the appeal yourselves. Give all necessary explanations. Let this offering be entirely separate from the regular work of the church. And by or before the third Sunday in April, see that each church is reported with its Centennial collection to Bro. J. D. Boushall, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C. Now, brethren, to the work, and do not fail to have each church included.

Death of Dr. J. R. Carroll.

Dr. J. R. Carroll passed from "earth to heaven" on the morning of Oct. 12, 1892. A more beautiful death-bed scene I hardly think has ever been witnessed. He died with the blessed assurance of life beyond the grave. He was ready and willing to go and be with his blessed Saviour. He suffered intensely for one month with acute gastritis. One of his friends and schoolmates, Rev. Mr. Beckwith, who preceded him to that beautiful city built above only a few months, Dr. Carroll would often speak of, saying that he thought Mr. B. would have lived longer than himself.

I do say it—if Dr. Carroll was my husband—that North Carolina never reared a nobler son than Dr. J. R. Carroll. I knew him for seven years, and at his death we had not been married quite five years. A better, more devoted and attentive husband never lived. Words cannot express my great loss. My cup of sorrow runneth over, but surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life. I have dear loved ones who are left to be of comfort to me in this great affliction, but no one can ever take the place of the one who was so dear to me.

God saw fit to give us two dear little boys. Our first born was only loaned to us for six short months, and then called home to his dear Saviour on Nov. 27, 1889. Little Harvey, just eighteen months old, was his father's joy and pride. Dear little darling calls so frequently for papa, but papa cannot hear or come to his baby boy.

As a member of Black Creek Baptist church, he was one of the most consecrated, devout and influential members in the church. He was a deacon for many years and was up to the time of his death. All looked upon him as an example worthy of imitation. He is sadly missed at home, and in the homes of many where he so often administered to the sick and suffering. In his church, the place made vacant by his death will be hard indeed to fill.

He was conscious almost to the end and prayed and talked both to the converted and the unconverted. I can hear the sweet words now as he uttered them, "I know that my redeemer liveth," and a number of blessed assurances that are given in the Bible. His last moments were as peaceful as a little child going to sleep. He called for each member of his and my family, and for his darling wife and precious little Harvey to tell each good-bye. I feel like I would give the whole world if I had it to see my dear husband once again. I hope, though, by God's grace to meet him "some sweet day" "where the surges cease to roll." I know that my loved one is safe in heaven, freed from all the cares, toils and anxieties of this life, and he is now with our blessed Saviour and our dear little Robbie, waiting to welcome us on the other shore. Home is not the "sweet, sweet home" that it once was. May God give that comfort and peace of mind which the world knoweth not.

The physician is born, not made, and Dr. Carroll was richly endowed by nature with the qualities and capacities which make the successful physician. He loved his profession, his sympathies were quick and inexhaustible, his powers of observation were great, and he was cool, brave, well-balanced and sagacious. He inspired confidence and affection, and his cheerful and sustaining presence in the sick chamber was in itself a great remedial power. He did not regard his profession merely as a means of making money; he honored and loved it for the opportunities that it gave for beneficence and the gratification of his large and charitable heart. He was a true friend, a delightful companion, and a public spirited, patriotic citizen. He was loved in an unusual degree by young and old, white and colored, in the community in which for so many years he went in and out on his mission of healing and loving kindness.

Though living in the borders of another State, his love was still great for his native State.

Ever since our marriage the RECORDER has been a constant visitor to our home, and Dr. Carroll always looked forward to its arrival with pleasure.

Dr. J. R. Carroll was the son of J. C. Carroll of Burgaw, N. C. He was in his thirty-fifth year at the time of his death.

He was married on Dec. 21, 1887, to Miss Jennie Elizabeth DeLorme, and it can be truthfully said a couple never lived happier or were more devoted to each other than we were. But God knows best, and he has seen fit in his alwise providence to remove the one of our little household who was the most important, and the one to whom we looked to at all times for comfort and advice.

Entertaining and Healthful.

The Young Reaper, published by the American Baptist Publication Society, has earned an enviable reputation as an illustrated paper for youth and children, entertaining in style and healthful in influence. It is circulated in all parts of the land, North, South, East and West, and the subscription list is constantly increasing. During the year 1892 there were circulated over three million copies.

The members of the Baptist church purpose building an annex to their church building to cost $2,000 and on Sunday last over $800 was pledged for that purpose. The annex will be used for Sunday-school purposes, lectures and prayer-meetings. A liberal contribution on Sunday will be acceptable to the generous christian people of our Baptist friends.—Methodist Episcopalist-Falcon.

For the RECORDER.

Going to Sleep.

Lift up the curtain, its almost night,
And "at eventide it will be light."
Sing to me now a sad, sad song,
For the day has been sad and long,
And I'm going to sleep.

I am so tired, darling,
I wanted the night to come long ago,
And to see the sunset lights on the snow—
Just as it was when he said good-bye,
And I wanted—oh, I want to cry!
And I want to go to sleep.

When we are asleep we dream, you know,
That the things we wanted to be are so.
Our sweetest moments the soonest fleet,
And our lives are always incomplete,
And I'm tired now and I want to go
And lie underneath the stars and snow,
And go to sleep.

Let me feel your soft hand touch my hair,
And I'll try to say a little prayer—
Just as of oldtime, "for his sake,"
"If I should die before I wake,"
Cross my weak hands and hold them tight,
Stoop down low and kiss me good night—
I shall awake in the morning light,
I am . . . . . gone to sleep.

NORRA WINSTEAD.

Working and Waiting.

I stopped at the blacksmith shop the other day to get my horse shod. Sam Sledge, who is the Vulcan of our neighborhood, was standing by his forge, with one hand on the lever that blows the bellows. He was moving the lever very slowly, and gossiping with Tom Jones and Bill Brand as if he were a man of leisure, and not one of the hardest workers in this region. As I watched him, I could not help saying:

"Why, Sam, you seem to be taking matters very easy this morning."

But before he had time to answer, a great and sudden change passed over him. He dropped the lever and seized a pair of tongs with his left hand and a heavy hammer with his right hand. He drew a red hot horse-shoe out of the fire, laid it on the anvil, and began to beat it with all his might. The sparks flew all over us, like a shower of meteors, and the ring of those stalwart blows, iron upon iron, almost deafened us. Nobody could think of Sam as lazy then. He wrought like a giant, and soon had his shoe in shape for the foot of the waiting horse. While paring the hoof, he said:

"Friend Smith, you thought that I was taking it easy a little while ago; but don't you know that a blacksmith has to wait until his iron is hot? I was doing as much for that job while I was watching the fire as while I was pounding on the anvil."

"Yes, I see. And what a pity it is that everybody does not understand—as you seem to—how waiting and working belong together. I find lots of people who are too lazy to work. They are waiting, they say, for something to turn up. And I find other people who don't know how to wait at all. They insist upon hammering cold iron. We Americans are the most impatient people on the face of the earth. We are always in a hurry. And, as 'haste makes waste,' it is a wonder that we are so prosperous. It is not due to our intense activity, as some suppose, but to the abundance of everything in this new land. God is bountiful and we are extravagant. We throw away, in our reckless haste and hurry, enough to support millions of people. I once asked a friend who had spent twenty years in China what impressed him most on his return to this country. His reply was: 'It seemed to me as if I had landed in a place where everybody was crazy. Crowds were rushing to and fro, as if in mad pursuit of something they knew not what. The contrast of the scene with those of the Orient, where every movement is so deliberate, was startling. The Asiatics are never in a hurry. They have a genius for waiting. They go to the other extreme. But the result is that, though they are miserably poor as compared with our people, they are more contented than we are. If we could import a little of their superabundant patience, and mingle it with our impatience, we would be probably quite as successful, and certainly happier.'"

THE IMPATIENT PREACHER.

Watching that blacksmith, as he waited until the iron was hot, I recalled a bit of church history. Years ago, when I lived in the town of W., the church was very cold and worldly. It had been vacant for sometime, and many of the members had fallen into habits wholly inconsistent with their christian profession. We called a pastor. He came, and entered upon his work with a great deal of zeal. He began at once to denounce visiting on the Sabbath, parlor dances and other fashionable dissipations. Many were offended, and left the church. They were not going there, they said, just to be abused. And even the faithful few who had mourned over the conduct of the others, did not want preaching that was merely denunciatory. They hungered for gospel food. The result was that after a few months the elders were compelled to ask this son of thunder to resign, and he did. We secured as his successor a man of a totally different spirit. Some thought, and even said, that he lacked moral courage—that he was afraid to 'cry aloud and spare not,' declaring unto the people their transgressions. But he preached eloquently the love of Christ. He dwelt with great force and feeling upon the fact that we are not our own, but bought with a price, even the precious blood of the Son of God. He said nothing about Sabbath-breaking or promiscuous dancing, but in a short time there was such a revival of religion in the hearts of christians that they gave up their evil habits. They had found something better. This second pastor tried to melt the iron before he began to hammer it, and, with the help of the Lord, he succeeded. We had a good program, which was briefly, though pointedly, and, we hope, profitably, discussed.

The Bayboro people have a Baptist pastor now in their midst in the person of the earnest and consecrated J. H. Hildreth. Hope they will take good care of him and that the health of himself and family may be such as that he may continue long enough to do a good work in Pamlico county.

The good brethren conveyed us from Newbern and back, the good sisters—well, they did their part royally. The Lord bless the Bayboro people. SECRETARY.

The memory of transgression will always give pain. Penitence is not the best thing; innocence is far better. But, having sinned, penitence is infinitely better than despair. And even out of the sin, the shame and the sorrow, God can bring blessing for ourselves and for others. While we cannot undo our wrong deeds, God can keep them from undoing us, and can even bring good out of them in some strange way, if we commit the whole matter to him.—Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

He Only Licked Them

An American lady visiting Paris was continually interested in the smart little boys in white caps and aprons who deliver the wares of the pastry cooks. One day she said to one of these boys who had brought her some cakes: "Ah! I suppose you get the benefit of one of these cakes yourself sometimes?" "What do you mean, madame?" "You eat a cake now and then?" "Eat them? O, no, madame, that wouldn't do. I only lick 'em as I come along."—Youth's Companion.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

Church Entertainments.

A correspondent sends us a program of a dramatic and musical entertainment for the benefit of one of our Michigan churches, and asks the opinion of the Herald as to the propriety of the church sanctioning such an entertainment. We can only judge of the propriety in this particular case by the program before us. By that evidence alone we would unhesitatingly condemn it as unworthy of the efforts of a christian church.

The rendition of a farce does not appear to us to be within the scope of even "questionable church amusements," but entirely beyond discussion.

There are a few fundamental principles which deserve renewed emphasis in consideration of the oft-recurring question of church entertainments.

First, the purest benevolence is that which gives for the object in view and is not extracted from the pocket book by an entertainment. We are not urging that no entertainments should be given by the church, nor that money may not be legitimately raised in this way, but we insist that the truest and purest benevolence is not so cultivated, and that, consequently, an entertainment can never be justified on the sole ground that it has secured the desired end: a filled treasury.

Granted, then, that there are legitimate church entertainments for which an admission fee may properly be asked, we insist, secondly, that all such entertainments must be elevating and uplifting in their character, and in harmony with the purpose and spirit of a christian church. Care should be taken that the conscience of the weak should not be offended, and what may appear to be innocent in itself, and may be so, may well yield to that Pauline and christian law of expediency which refuses to assert its liberty when the welfare of the whole body is involved.

There are many things which may be harmless under other conditions which have no proper place in an entertainment under the sanction and patronage of the church. Nor would we be Puritanic in our insistence, and eliminate everything which may cause a smile or create a ripple of laughter, but would commend that careful discrimination which will tend to a wholesome cultivation of mind and heart, while avoiding that which is trivial and out of harmony with the more serious purpose of a church.

This rule will not, in the nature of the case, be always easily defined; there will be worldly minded members who will transgress on the side of looseness in its interpretation; on the other hand, there will be constitutional ascetics who would banish everything which is not purely devotional. Neither are right. The Herald would not sit in judgment, but it does insist that a thoughtful regard for the spiritual interests of a church will prompt a desire to keep it unspotted from the spirit of the world, and will consent to only such entertainments as will contribute to its intellectual, moral and spiritual well-being.—Christian Herald, Detroit, Mich.

The Usual Reports.

Miss Annie L. Winston, Ridgeville, N. C., writing under date of May 8, 1889, says: For years I have been in declining health from consumption and I do sincerely believe that I would have been in my grave to day had it not been for the Electropoise. Before I began using it I could feel my health giving way daily; I now feel better than I have for two years and am perfectly charmed with the Electropoise.

Miss Winston writes Dec. 14, 1892, that "she owes her life to the Electropoise, and would not be without it."

Hycotee, N. C., Sept. 1, 1892.

Dear Sir:—I have used the Electropoise with best results, and would recommend it to all who are suffering with any disease. For many long years I have been in delicate health, suffering from dyspepsia, and have been relieved with medicine only temporarily. For the last five years I have suffered much from a lung, not being able to breathe through it except with much pain, and while taking cod liver oil and other medicines. I have not taken a dose of medicine since commencing the Electropoise, nine months ago. I can now eat anything I want, and never have any trouble therefrom. My lung has also been entirely relieved. If I could not get another, money would not buy my Electropoise. Very truly,

Miss Pattie A. Raney.

Some of our papers and centennial speakers and writers have said that it will be a "shame" and a "disgrace" if we do not succeed in raising the proposed permanent centennial fund. We do not believe any thing of the kind. We do not believe that any such argument should be used at this time to push on this particular enterprise. This centennial fund ought to be a free-will offering, over and above the contributions which the churches make for the regular missionary work of the denomination. Where it is squeezed out of the people under high pressure, it is not apt to come in the form of a voluntary, free-will offering.

We do not know how it is in other States, but we shall not feel in the least ashamed or disgraced if South Carolina does not raise the full amount we are asked to raise for this fund, viz., $17,000. We are willing to believe that those of our churches that are accustomed to help all departments of the denominational work, will contribute something to this fund. Many of them have already contributed we do not know how much. We believe that the contributing churches will give for this purpose about as much as they ought. If they do this in addition to their usual contributions for the regular work already established, we shall not feel particularly disgraced if the centennial fund falls short. If anything must come out behind, let it be this special work. We deny that this is more important and more urgent than any other work now before us. We have said all along, and we wish to repeat it and emphasize it now when contributions are beginning to run short, the regular work first, this special centennial work second.

It will not do to say, "let us go ahead and finish up the $17,000; State Missions, Orphanage, Ministerial Education, &c., can wait till the fall of the year." That would not be just nor honest. We must not be considered out of order and out of sympathy with the movement, if we say that the children in the Connie Maxwell Orphanage, the missionaries of our State Board, and the young men at the Seminary and University, need our contributions as much now as they will after the first of May and in the fall of the year. We really believe it is our solemn duty to help these home objects now, now, NOW.

In saying these things we do not mean at all to reflect upon anybody who is disposed to contribute liberally or to work earnestly for the centennial fund. We do not wish to hinder the successful completion of that work. We are perfectly willing for the full amount to be raised, but not at the sacrifice of other work which we believe to be more important. We are glad that some of the most liberal churches in the State, churches that contribute largely to every good object, have been able to contribute largely to the centennial fund. This work has been pushed by brethren who push other work. That is very well; in most cases what has been raised up to this time has been a special, additional offering, and the regular work has not been forgotten in these churches.

We do not know whether we are going to succeed in raising the $17,000 or not. We shall not now predict. The thing that most concerns us now is, how are we going to succeed this year, this hard year, in paying the salaries of the missionaries now on the field—missionaries already commissioned and at work; will we succeed in keeping up with the other departments of our Lord's work? Failing in this would be far worse than a failure to raise a centennial fund.—Baptist (S. C.) Courier.

Dr. Arnold's Daily Prayer.

Dr. Arnold's daily prayer was as follows: "O, Lord, I have a busy world around me; eye, ear, and thought will be needed for all my work to be done in this busy world. Now, ere I enter on it I would commit eye, ear, and thought to Thee. Do thou bless them, and keep their work Thine, that as through thy natural laws my heart beats and my blood flows without any thought of mine, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at these times when my mind cannot conspicuously turn to thee to commit each particular thought to thy service. Hear my prayer, for my dear Redeemer's sake. Amen."

Church members should honor the church and its institutions. The church has its faults, but infidels and atheists will point them out and publish them abroad. It is not becoming to christians to join them in the effort to bring the church of Christ into contempt. Every father has faults, but he would be an ungrateful son who should take pleasure in parading those faults. No man respects the church member who takes pains to discover the things which are wrong in the church and make them public. The christian should honor the church by respecting its discipline, patronizing its educational institutions, familiarizing himself with its history and work, and reading its literature. To ignore these as some do is to cast a reproach on the church in the sight of the world.—Christian Advocate.

The Upper Round.

Boys, aim to be "first-class" men in the pursuit you select for your life work. You have often heard it said that there is plenty of room at the top of the ladder, but you must remember that those who get there must have that in them which makes them worthy of the upper rounds.

Mark Twain says there is not such lack of work for men to do, as there is a scant supply of men who know how to work.

Do not think of your salary, of the closing hour, of how you will spend the evening, but put your mind on your duties, resolved that they shall have the best that is in you. And be sure you shall not lose your reward. —Exchange.

We often hear it said that a person can attend progressive whist parties, and balls, and still be a very good christian. Perhaps he can, but we have seen many such experiments fail. People who attend whist parties either do not go to prayer-meeting at all, or if they do go, are as silent as clams. Why is this? We do not suppose that card-playing in itself is a sin, but the fact remains that all through the centuries, the progressive poker player has never been the progressive christian.—Christian Secretary.

Living.

It has been said that the unconverted in our own midst need not so much men and money, as the Christ life lived before them as an example. But if the Christ life is in us we will never need to ask for men or money, all will be given freely by us, even as he has freely given to us. Let us be careful how we live, and we need not be careful how we give. "The heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes." Ezek. 36: 23.

Giving.

"There must be something very good in human nature, or people would not experience so much pleasure in giving; there must be something very bad in human nature, or more people would try the experiment of giving. Those who do try it become enamored of it, and get their chief pleasure in life out of it; and so evident is this that there is some basis for the idea that it is ignorance rather than badness which keeps so many people from being generous."—Foreign Mission Journal.

Colored People.

Graver questions were never presented to a people than those concerning the colored people of the South. Patriotism and christianity demand a wise, just treatment of a subject so environed with difficulties, prejudices and misunderstandings. So much of bitterness has marked its discussion that many wise men refuse to enter a field where thorns and briers so plentifully grow.

Let us cherish kindness and patience. Let us aid them by counsel and contributions in their work. Wherever there is an open door for usefulness and help, let us enter it for their good and the glory of Christ. Methods and opportunities will suggest themselves to the earnest, hopeful, helpful spirit, which we should constantly increase and cherish.—Rev. Henry McDonald, D. D.

A Remarkable Baptist Growth.

The Examiner makes a quotation from Dr. A. H. Strong's speech before the Baptist Education Society which is thrilling. Every Baptist ought to read it; try to understand how it came about, and what sort of responsibility it carries with it:—

"I have been comparing of late the condition of our denomination to day, as to numbers and educational facilities, with its condition twenty years ago. In 1872 we could count up only 1,489,000 Baptists in the United States; we have now increased to 3,269,000. Then we numbered only one in twenty-six of the population; now we number one in twenty. While the population has come short of doubling, Baptist church membership has more than doubled. In 1872 the total amount of property and endowments belonging to our colleges and theological seminaries was $3,467,000; in 1892 it is $29,000,000. The one institution established in Chicago has now a larger amount of property and endowments than all our colleges and theological seminaries together had twenty years ago."—Home Field.

Frontier Missionaries.

Their poverty and meagre salaries often result in the barest supply of the necessities of life. The wide range of their work, the distances to be travelled, over the roughest roads or where none exists, taking their course from settlement to settlement, sometimes by the sun or by the stars, the heat of summer, the cold of winter, the rain, hail, snow, the swollen streams, the coarse fare, the pallet of straw, the insufficient and sometimes untidy covering, the rudeness and ignorance encountered, the want of houses of worship, preaching often in crowded dwellings, or in the groves, make every day of their long absence from home a day of sacrifice unknown to those who live under more favorable conditions.

Our noble christian women have carried sunshine into many of these homes by the valuable boxes of supplies which they have sent, and we hope that they will continue to do so. But cannot they, and all of our people, so enlarge their money gifts to the Board as to enable us to relieve these burden-bearers, toiling for the Master, still further? Help us to increase their salaries.—I. T. Tichenor.

Foreign Missions Dependent on Home Missions.

The work of Home Missions demands and should receive, for its own sake, the support of every lover of his country and his Lord. Of all the objects which appeal to christian hearts, there is surely none more important or more imperative than that of carrying the gospel to the destitute and neglected of our own land. Upon the prosecution of Home Missions the future welfare of our country very largely depends. The character of the coming American citizen, the growth and efficiency of our denomination, and the extension of the cause of Christ, are all involved in this great enterprise. Duty and interest unite in impelling us to do our utmost to win our whole land to Christ.

But there is another reason why we should engage most heartily in home missions. This reason grows out of the bearing of home mission work upon the evangelization of the world. Foreign and home missions are linked together. The success of that wider enterprise which looks to the redemption of humanity is largely dependent upon the evangelization of our own land. If America be won to Christ, we will have the best basis and assurance of the coming in of that happy time when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."—A. J. Rowland.

Letter from Rev. A. J. Diaz to Miss Armstrong.

Miss Annie W. Armstrong, Baltimore, Md.:

Dear Sister—The girls at the boarding school all took part in our Christmas exercises, and enjoyed it very much. We had a crowded house, and the children did well. It was a very creditable entertainment. We never announce any special exercises at our church without meeting with a hearty response from the people. They like to come and see what we are doing.

Our Sunday evening and week day prayer meeting services are better attended all the time, and the educated and high standing people begin to notice us and attend our meetings, the men specially. We have lately given a couple of lectures, illustrated with magic lantern, that were very well attended. These lectures both instruct and entertain the people and bring large numbers to the church who would otherwise not come. The views are largely taken from Bible history, and bring up subjects that are of vital interest to the people; presented in this way they listen, when otherwise they would not.

We are doing well, all things considered, and have great reason to be satisfied. The old teachings have been so perverse and long continued that even a little progress is great gain, and ours is more than a little. We work on hopefully, and ask the Lord to continue to bless us.

Your brother in Christ,

A. J. Diaz.

A happy new year. Diaz.

The St. Louis Trade Review and Export Journal in its issue of February 7th, 1893, has this to say:

EDWARDS & BROUGHTON.

One of the leading enterprises of its character in the entire South is the extensive printing and binding establishment, owned and conducted by the firm of Edwards & Broughton, and located at the corner of Hargett and Salisbury streets, Raleigh, N. C. The gentlemen constituting this firm, Mr. C. B. Edwards and Mr. N. B. Broughton, are and have been for many years among Raleigh's prominent and substantial business men and citizens. Mr. Edwards is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Franklin county, and has made this city his home for the past quarter of a century, while Mr. Broughton, also a native of North Carolina, was born in Wake county, and has resided in Raleigh since 1858. They began their present co-partnership about twenty-two years ago. The plant is one of the finest in the South, equipped with the best of presses, etc., and with every improvement and convenience. They do a general printing business in all its branches, and carry in stock a fine line of stationery, letter heads, bill heads, statements, fine wedding stationery, etc., and at prices that no house can discount, quality considered. Catalogues, posters, circulars, etc., will be furnished upon the shortest possible notice. They also conduct a general binding business, manufacturing everything in the line of blank books. With their extraordinary facilities and employing only the best skilled workmen, they are enabled to produce a grade of goods that cannot be surpassed by the product of any firm in the country, no matter where located. Prices, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application either personally or by mail, and all orders will receive prompt and careful attention. They have a large trade from outside the city, and parties residing at surrounding points will save money and receive the very best of satisfaction by giving this firm the benefit of their patronage.

RALEIGH, N. C., Feb. 21, 1893.

TO THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF NORTH CAROLINA:

Gentlemen:—At a meeting of some of those interested in the education of the girls of our State, to see what action should be taken in regard to the Normal and Industrial school, we unanimously decided that we have nothing to do with the question of the amount of appropriation to be made to that institution. We are willing to leave the decision of that matter to the Legislature, believing that it will try to do what is right and just.

We, however, respectfully ask that three restrictions be placed upon its management, in justice to the interests of the other female schools in the State. They are as follows:

1. That the institution shall be changed from its present condition as a female seminary into strictly a normal and industrial school as is contemplated in the law establishing it.

2. That the number of pupils receiving aid from each county who shall be actual residents thereof; these to be received into the institution upon the recommendation of the county board of education after a competitive examination, preferences being given to those least able to pay their expenses. Let no others be received as boarders, and require all other pupils to pay at least $40 per session of eight months, for their literary tuition.

3. That the clause in the present law, allowing girls holding certificates from this institution to teach for life in the public schools of the State without being examined by the county superintendent, be repealed.

4. That the ornamental branches, music and art, shall not be taught in the institution.

If, gentlemen, you will give these propositions your careful and thoughtful consideration, we think the interests of female education in the State will not be jeopardized, and that the Normal and Industrial school at Greensboro can and will in the future do the work contemplated in its organization.

Trusting that you may be able to harmonize all interests, and may do that which will accomplish most for the educational development of the whole State, we are

Yours very respectfully,
B. F. DIXON,

The Oxford Orphan Asylum.

Bro. Bailey:—Will you explain why it costs nearly double to take care of an orphan at Oxford that it costs at some other places? I see from a report of the Superintendent of the Oxford Orphan Asylum that it takes one hundred dollars a year to pay the expense of one orphan in that institution. I cannot refer to the other orphan houses, but at Thomasville we find that about sixty dollars is required to pay the expenses of one child for a year, and they are fairly well cared for. Why spend more than is necessary, when the effect is to keep other children out of the orphan houses? If the Oxford Asylum was a State institution, I would not say a word about the injustice of any appropriation the State might make if it was judiciously used; but as long as it is a private enterprise, I do not think our legislators are doing the right thing to require the people of the State to be taxed for its support. In a conversation with a Senator a few days ago, I asked him in regard to this appropriation. He promptly replied that he was a strong Mason and would do all he could for the Oxford Asylum. If public money is to be voted away by such influences as that, is it not time that the constitutionality of the thing was being tested? I think so. What are the good points of one secret society over another? And still we know that these things control our legislation to some extent, and it may be largely. Does anybody believe that this appropriation would be made if it were not for the Masonic influence? Things are as sadly out of joint as when Nehemiah had to be ready to fight the enemy without as well as strive against the bad influence of professed friends.

Most respectfully, R. D. FLEMING.

"Wrong Direction."

"What great harm a good man can do when he starts in the wrong direction."

The foregoing are the words of one of our home pastors, and of course he meant Bro. [illegible]. Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston is probably the best informed Baptist in the United States on the subject of Foreign Missions. [illegible] Missionary Review of the World for March, he has the following to say in regard to the Herring-Bostick movement:

"The movers in this enterprise are several men who have won high positions as earnest and successful missionaries in China under the Southern Baptist Board. The proposal for a new departure in the work of their denomination in China is not the result of sentiment, but the outcome of practical experience and of deliberate reflection. * * We have no doubt of the rich success of the enterprise, for it is apostolic, and therefore has the guarantee of the Holy Spirit's furtherance; and it is practical, having the experience of several notable missionary enterprises of this century. * * We believe that the new enterprise proposed by these Southern brethren has the evidence of demonstrated success as well as the sanction of Scripture to support it." (The italics in the foregoing are mine.)

Dr. Gordon does not think Herring and Bostick are going in the wrong direction. A delegate who was present told me that Herring was "snubbed" by the Convention at Raleigh. That he got but twenty minutes to speak. The same delegate said that when the Baptists of Wilkes, Ashe, Watauga, Caldwell and Alexander hear Herring, they will be with him. The Catawba River Association is very weak, but its prayers and money will in the main be for this new movement. And nowhere in North Carolina, Bro. Herring, will you receive a heartier welcome than in our Association. We do not think you are going in the wrong direction. How can it be? Is your desire to take the gospel to the "regions beyond" where Boards do not send it, wrong? Is a willingness to live as those live among whom you go, as Christ did, wrong? Is cutting your salaries down that more missionaries might be sent, wrong? Is spending every dollar, given by the churches, in preaching the gospel, instead of part for other things, wrong? Is a desire to be sent, as Saul and Barnabas, by the church, the only organization established by Christ, wrong? Is a faith that can rely on him who said, "Lo, I am with you alway," instead of relying on American flags and ministers, wrong?

No! Herring is not going in the wrong direction. Surely the Spirit of the Lord is upon him in this matter. If so, then his persecutors are resisting the Spirit. Let the Boards work and let these men work. And whosoever will, let him say to lost sinners, Come to Christ. And if we cannot agree as to our methods, let not the one say the other is going in the wrong direction.

Immersion the Act of Christian Baptism. By J. T. Christian, D. D. Price, $1.00.

The Examiner, New York, says: "'Immersion, the Act of Christian Baptism,' by Rev. J. T. Christian, D. D., not only gives in compact form an excellent resume of what had already been printed on the subject, but contains a good deal in the way of fresh matter and original testimony. An excellent feature of the book consists of original letters to the author from a large number of the best scholars in Europe and America, all of whom, as a matter of course, confirm the author's position that there is no New Testament baptism save immersion. The book is not controversial save as a plain statement of facts is necessarily controversial as against error, and it contains no abuse of opponents. The testimonies contained in it are certain to be widely quoted, and to have a powerful influence."

Appreciation Expressed.

Dear Editor:—Please allow me to express my appreciation of Bro. J. R. Maynard's article in which he endorsed your editorial on "Hasty Entrance into the Ministry," gives an account of his own entrance upon the work and of his perseverance amid difficulties.

For his encouragement I would say that his case is not an exceptional one. All faithful ministers of Jesus Christ have tribulation in the world. And while very few seem to care much for the pure gospel, the Holy Spirit in answer to our prayers will be sent to open the hearts of the people and create in them the hungering for which he sighs.

Make the Churches Cheerful.

There is nothing that adds more to the popularity and prosperity of a church than cheerfulness, and there is nothing more conducive to cheerfulness than a good light. With the improved methods now in vogue there is no reason why evey church should not be as bright by night as by day with but very little cost. One of the best aids to the economical lighting of churches, halls, and large rooms is the "Bailey Reflector." This ingenious device is so constructed that it diffuses light into the farthest corners of a church, and makes the finest print readable. All ministers or those interested should write to the manufacturers for catalogue and price list. Their address is Bailey Reflector Co., 708 Penn Av. Pittsburg, Pa.

DIED.

CARTWRIGHT—Sister Ollie Cartwright departed this life Feb. 18th, 1893. She was a consistent member of Woodville Baptist church for several years, and was a great sufferer for some time, but was resigned to the will of God. Mother is gone, but we shall meet her in the sweet by-and-by.

A FRIEND.

FORRESTER—Again death has visited the home of Manly Forrester. The victim was his oldest daughter Mamie, aged fifteen years. She died Feb. 16, 1893. Those who knew her have reason to believe that she is with her mother in heaven.

"Loving father, do not weep,
Though chastening be his rod;
Thy daughter has only gone to sleep."

J. E. D.

YOUNG—Bro. Cecil Young a citizen of Louisburg, and a consistent member of the Baptist church, died February 2, 1893, in his twenty-second year. He was an exemplary christian, faithful in the discharge of his duties at church, Sunday-school, prayer meeting and the family altar. He knew that he must die, and was ready for it. He selected for his funeral the two hymns, "Only waiting," and "When shall we meet again?" For him to live was Christ, to die was gain. M.

POOL—Mrs. Irene Pool died at her home in Virginia on February 17th, 1893, aged twenty-four years. She was the daughter of Mrs. Sallie Currin, now living near Enon church, Granville county, N. C. Mrs. Pool when quite a child joined the church at Enon, and grew up in the Sunday-school and under the faithful ministry of Rev. R. H. Marsh, D. D. She was full of life, and generally beloved. On her dying bed she declared her entire willingness to depart this life, expressing confidence in the Saviour to the last. The body was interred in the cemetery at Enon in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. PASTOR.

JONES—Near Berea, Granville county, N. C., Bro. E. H. Jones died on Friday night, Feb. 17th, 1893, in the sixty-second year of his age. He was born October 15th, 1831.

Bro. Jones had been a member of Mt. Zion church for many years, and one of its strongest pillars. He was a successful farmer, having accumulated by remarkable energy a good property, which he leaves unencumbered to his sorrowing wife and five children. As a neighbor he was accommodating, helpful, and always reliable. As a husband and father he was generous, true, sympathetic and indulgent. As a church member he was one of the best I ever knew. Able in prayer and exhortation he was always ready to perform his part in the public gathering. I never knew him to refuse to discharge a duty. He was a conspicuous figure in all the beneficent enterprises of the church. He was honest, modest, prudent, brave, pure.

In the death of Brother Hawkins Jones the pastor loses one of his noblest fellow-helpers and one of the dearest friends of his life.

RASCOE—Molly Mhoon Rascoe, the youngest daughter of the late William Rascoe, Esq., and Mrs. Mary Rascoe, died in Windsor, N. C., on Thursday, Feb. 9th, 1893, aged thirteen years. She was a sister of Mrs. Thomas Gillam, Jr. These names—Mhoon, Rascoe and Gillam—mean much to the Baptists of Eastern North Carolina.

A beautiful life has closed. Mhoonie Rascoe was a model child in more than that word usually implies. She loved her books, her music, the birds and flowers, her friends and mother. Her last words were touching. As the dear bud was about to drop from the stem, her face radiant with smiles, she called, "Come, mamma, lets go home." It is a sad loss to Mrs Rascoe—one of the sweetest characters of my acquaintance—a loss she bears bravely, for she knows that Mhoonie is at "home." W.

SIMPSON'S 20 DAY
Early Cantaloupe
The Most Delicious and the Earliest of any Melon ever Introduced.
I have been in the trucking business for fifteen years, and I have produced a cantaloupe that is the superior of any in delicacy of flavor and in earliness for the market; and I propose to offer my limited supply of seed to the public at reasonable figures. If the seed of this strain of nutmeg melon were in the hands of some of our seedsmen they would not be sold for less than $5 per pound. Some of the finest strains of melons now offered by our seedsmen at fancy prices—for instance, Johnson's and Stokes Diplo Watermelon—first originated in North Carolina. See the recommendations of two citizens of Greensboro, N. C., (and one hundred could be furnished as readily) and find out what those say who have seen and eaten my new cantaloupe:—
GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 25, 1893.
MR. W. W. SIMPSON:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe which you put upon our market last year (1892) was decidedly the most delicious flavored and the earliest I ever ate. I bought largely of you, and I recommend them in the highest terms.
DR. J. G. BRODNAX.
GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 26, 1893.
MR. W. W. SIMPSON, Greensboro, N C.:—Your twenty-day early cantaloupe came upon the market the earliest of all, and I was surprised at the earliness of it. I am an old cantaloupe raiser, and I must have some of your seed for this coming season. Yours is a superior melon in every respect, and the very thing for early truckers.

The Leaksville Woolen Mills, Leaksville, N. C., need no introduction to the public in North Carolina and adjoining States. This is simply to remind you that they are still "in touch" with the people, working up their wool into various forms of finished product at satisfactory prices. A handsome catalogue containing samples of their new and attractive styles of Fancy Cassimeres and All-Wool Flannels, together with all other goods made by them, is sent to any address on application. Besides an interesting article on "Wool on How to Handle It," the catalogue contains full particulars in regard to shipping wool. If these details are carefully followed, we guarantee prompt return of goods.
Write to Hiram Foard, Sec'y, Leaksville, N. C., for catalogue, before disposing of your wool.

The Home Circle.

The Mother's Prayer.

Starting forth on life's rough way,
Father, guide them;
O, we know not what of harm
May betide them;
'Neath the shadow of Thy wing,
Father, hide them;
Walking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to Thee,
Do Thou hear them;
From the stains of sin and shame,
Do Thou clear them;
'Mid the quicksand and the rocks,
Do Thou steer them;
In temptation, trial, grief,
Be Thou near them.

Unto Thee we give them up,
Lord, receive them;
In the world we know must be
Much to grieve them—
Many striving oft and strong
To deceive them;
Trustful in Thy hands of love
We must leave them.
—William Cullen Bryant.

Etiquette for Boys.

Little Horace, his father and his grandfather, were all standing in a row on the lawn the other day, when I drove up in the phaeton with Horace's beautiful young mother, says Margaret E. Sangster in the Interior. As we were helped out, off came the three hats from the three heads, the courtly, gray-haired man doffing his summer wide awake with a grace that was equalled and imitated by the little gentleman of four. This golden-fleeced and blue eyed laddie, who was a baby only the other day, never kisses mamma with his hat on, never forgets to pop up from his little chair and remain standing till she is seated, if his mother enters the room. He has seen his father and his grandfather show this beautiful deference to ladies, in their own home, always, and the little fellow is polite without an effort. He will always lift his cap when he says good morning to a lady; when he opens the door, he will always wait for her to pass out first; when he sees her standing in a street-car, he will rise and offer her a seat; and when she drops a bundle, he will make haste to pick it up. The whole path of good manners has been made smooth and plain for Horace by the gentle training of his nursery.

I am very much surprised to observe how deficient many of the boys, otherwise excellent and admirable, are in the practice of etiquette. They rush into a room, instead of opening the door and walking into it, or still worse, they skulk in, as if ashamed to be seen. A boy should do neither. Head up, hands at his sides, not in his pockets, eyes looking straight before him, tongue ready for a pleasant greeting, a boy should enter a parlor, without forwardness and without clumsiness. Let me tell you a secret, boys. The really graceful man is not thinking about himself. He does the right thing, and he thinks nothing about the effect or impression it is likely to produce.

If you are sent upon an errand, or asked to deliver a message, and you reach a closed door, knock at it. Knock at mother's door, or at sister's, if it is shut and wait to be asked in, before you open it. Always, when dinner is served, stand at your place, and do not seat yourself until your mother, if you are at home, or your hostess, if you are a guest, has taken her seat. Never occupy the most comfortable chair in the room, or on the veranda, if there are ladies or elderly people present. Any chair ought to do for an active boy, but girls and ladies, invalids and aged folk, should have the rockers and the cushioned seats.

Speak in low tones, and do not monopolize the conversation. If you are on a journey, and arrive at dangerous places, which you, as a boy, feel like climbing over, or jumping across, refrain pleasantly from these feats if you see that the ladies of the party are nervous. There may be no real cause for alarm, but if the ladies think there is, you, as a young gentleman, are bound to make them comfortable, even at the cost of some self-denial.

A lady precedes a gentleman, a girl precedes a boy, everywhere, except when he can perform a service by going in advance. Everywhere and always, the stronger is set for the defence of the weaker, and a boy's first impulse should be to protect and defend a girl. He carries the baskets, the fishing-poles, the umbrellas. He lets her lead on the uphill climb, except when he can assist her by going first and giving her his hand. He offers to bring his mother's shawl, to find his sister's book that she left in the arbor, or the fan that she forgot upstairs. First, last, and all the time, he is courteous, gentle and kind.

It goes without saying that a well-mannered boy does not wear his hat in doors at all. He has the habit of taking it off when he enters even his own room. Of course he is particular about his hands and finger-nails, and comes to the table looking clean and sweet. If a strange lady asks him a question in the street, about a direction or an address, he lifts his cap in answering her, and he invariably does so when he meets his mother, or any of her friends out walking, or on the way to church or to market.

Indeed this whole business of managing a hat is a very safe index to the degree of gentlemanliness in manner, the polish to which a boy has attained. A man may be as good as gold in principles, yet be rough and boorish because he has lacked early discipline, has missed refined associations, or has been absent minded and unobserving. In every such case, it is a pity, for gold ore is worth far more when it has been burnished and refined than when it comes from the [illegible]—Watchman.

[illegible] sink into an early grave for [illegible] a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. [illegible] would have saved them.

The Social Game.

"Don't go, girls, don't," said a silver-haired friend of my mother's, who visited us occasionally, when we were talking about attending a card party. "Don't go, girls, don't," she repeated.

"Why, Aunt Mattie," we asked, "why not go? Do you think card playing just for amusement wrong?"

"I think so."

"Why everybody plays now. Just a few evenings ago we were at Professor Ball's; cards were brought, and we all played. The Professor's son and daughter both engaged in the amusement, and all the best families do the same."

"Even if all those you speak of permit and help in card playing, does that alone make it right?"

"No; but if such families think it right, I would not like to set myself up as a pattern of goodness, and refuse their invitations, and thus tell them that I thought their actions wrong, I answered impatiently.

Aunt Mattie's face flushed a little, and I noticed her thin, white hand trembled as she brushed back a silver lock from her forehead. She looked at me a moment with a blending of pain and tenderness; then said:

"Mina, if you will listen, I will tell you something of my past life.

I told her I would be glad to listen, for she was a pleasant talker, and I loved her society. She continued:

"A long time ago I was the mother of a darling little boy. My husband died when my child was but three years of age. After that, all my care, all my ambition was for that boy. I tried to teach him to be manly, to be honest, to do right under every circumstance. I had means sufficient to give him every advantage he needed for education and position. At the age of twenty-one he had graduated in a university of standing, was a large, fine looking man. I looked upon him with feelings of motherly pride and deep affection. I expected to see him rise and fill some honorable and useful position.

"Then, as now, it was the habit of some to play cards for amusement. I tried to persuade Joe not to play, for I always had a strong aversion to that kind of a pastime. For a time he heeded my wishes. But one evening a young lady whose society he loved, and who had a strong influence over him, persuaded him to play his first game with her. What a pity that woman's hand should ever lead astray! He, like many others, thought there was no wrong in it, and that it could never in any way do him any harm. But cards had a strong fascination for him. In those parlor games, where prizes were offered, he was usually successful; that fact stimulated him to play in other places and for money. In less than a year from the time he played his first parlor game he was a confirmed gambler.

"One night, playing, he lost, and lost heavily. He lost not only his own money, but some he held in trust. When the last dollar was gone, being wild from his loss, and heated with wine, he arose from the table, drew a knife, and buried it in the body of his antagonist. He was sent to prison for life. For ten long, dark years I was the mother of a murderer; then a change came. He was taken sick, he tossed on a bed of pain for many long weeks. One night he stepped out from his prison bed, and went into the great unknown future. For long years the grass has been growing upon his grave, but no time can make me forget my great sorrow, nor the cause of it.

"Now, girls, don't go to card-parties. Don't engage in that sort of amusement. Don't be the means of giving to some young boy a knowledge which may lead to ruin. Woman should lead to purity and good. She will never do it by card playing."—Western Advocate.

Knowledge from Experience

Is what we understand when Dr. Spalding, an eminent Baptist divine, of Galveston, Texas, writes "send me two bottles of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein. It is for a friend suffering from consumption. It is a preparation I know from experience to be good.

Hints on Work Hunting.

There is hardly any large establishment, whether it be a newspaper office, a manufactory or a trade establishment, that has not applications constantly from young men who want something to do. It is often painful to see the hopeless look upon the applicants' face as they turn away, disappointed; the more painful because many of them, doubtless, have capacity for remunerative work, and would faithfully attend to it.

The world is slow to take any man entirely on trust. The greatest singers, the greatest painters, the greatest writers have had to convince the world that it had need of them before it was willing to give them a subsistence. It might almost be laid down as an axiom that success is only to be won by a hard struggle. It takes the attrition of poverty to bring out what is brightest in a man.

The question of "getting a position" resolves itself into two grand essentials—first, proficiency of some sort, which stands for dollars and cents in the world's market place, and next, tact to demonstrate this proficiency in a way to attract the world's attention.

It is a mistake to depend on "influence" to get work in a legitimate calling; influence belongs more properly to the domain of politics. It is a mistake to ask or to expect employment on the ground of charity—not that charity and business are incompatible, but that each should stand on its own bottom. The best recommendation is a sample of your work; that, with a frank address and neatness of appearance—for "the apparel oft proclaims the man"—may often prove the "open sesame" to success.

While it is good to have a due appreciation of one's abilities, it is not good to be too exacting as to the field for their display. The distance betwixt the foot of a ladder and the top is but a short span to him who has within himself the power of rising.

The writer heard of a young man, who, being in needy circumstances, went bravely to work at the first thing at hand—trench-digging for a contractor. That was his opportunity. One day his employer—not a well-educated man—needed some one to keep a time roll of the men. The young man volunteered. The contractor took a fancy to him, found him increasingly useful, and the young man is now well up the ladder.

It is another requisite of the successful worker that he shall be in love with his work. If he is a mechanic, he will take pride in his tools; if he is a book-keeper, he will plume himself on the merits of his pen and on the neatness and forwardness of his accounts. As the late Colonel Forney once said to a youthful member of his staff: "A man must work con amore to have his work worth anything."

A young lady who wished a place as type-writer got it in a common-sense way. She wrote out half a dozen "replies," so to speak, brief, business-like and respectful, setting forth her experience, qualifications and ideas as to pay, putting her figures rather above the market rate. Next morning there were four advertisements for type-writers in the Ledger. She promptly mailed her four replies at the main post-office, enclosing a two-cent stamp in each. One of the four was successful. That evening her position came to her.

Finally, it is not necessary that a want should be proclaimed in order to exist. Sometimes it may be anticipated. Sometimes it may even be created. Whoever can create a want for his wares or his work is on the way to masterful success.

There is an impression that opportunities for individual success are being restricted nowadays and overshadowed by corporations. To some extent, and temporarily, this may be true, but corporations in turn are dependent on the intellectual and moral qualities that insure individual success, and these can no more be dispensed with than manual labor can be superseded by the multiplication of machinery.—Phil. Ledger.

The Glory of the Gospel Dispensation.

BY REV. JOHN C. AVERITT OF TEXAS.

2 Cor. 3: 18—"But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

Any information which the Creator may condescend to furnish to his intelligent creatures should be thankfully received and highly appreciated. Everything that God communicates of himself must be of the utmost importance; and therefore to neglect any information which he furnishes respecting his character must be an insult to him and a serious injury to us. The knowledge of his glorious character must be more important than all the theories and discoveries of the most profound philosophers, scientists and metaphysicians; and therefore this knowledge should be earnestly desired by us; and it should be sought with all the intensity which its importance demands. God has revealed himself in his works and in his word. They both manifest God as One, Eternal, Omnipotent, perfectly Wise, and perfectly Good; but the Scriptures go far beyond this, and testify of his character in reference to sin; and reveal those attributes of the divine character which secure the salvation of his people. So far as the works of creation and providence testify, their testimony is in perfect accord with that of the Scriptures. They are both God's witnesses, and hence the one cannot contrapict the other. In the works of creation and providence, God clearly manifests himself in respect to a part of his character, but such is the corruption of human nature that no man, without the aid of divine revelation, has ever learned as much from these witnesses as they proclaim. The works of creation declare the glory of God; but they do not teach the way of salvation nor furnish one gleam of hope to guilty sinners. The gospel alone reveals the glorious plan of salvation; it alone manifests Jehovah as a just God and a Saviour; and it alone shows all the divine attributes completely harmonized in the gracious scheme of redemption. The apostle's object in this chapter is to exhibit the glory of the gospel dispensation in a clearer light by contrasting it with that dispensation with which Moses was connected. He shows that if the ministration of death was so glorious that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance which was only temporary, that the abiding ministration of the Spirit must be far more glorious. He also argues that if the ministration of condemnation was glory, that the ministration of righteousness must exceed in glory; and that the glory of the gospel dispensation was so luminous that it overshadowed the former dispensation. In the text he contrasts the unvailed face of those who are looking in the mirror of the gospel with the vailed face of Moses and the vailed hearts of the Jews. The effect is similar whether the face is vailed or the object to be seen.

In the discussion of the subject I shall first notice those who are looking in the gospel mirror—"We all with unvailed face beholding as in a glass."

In the expression "we all," the apostle evidently includes with himself the church at Corinth and all the saints in all Achaia to whom the epistle was addressed, and it is evident that all the saints in every age and nation are virtually included with those specified. They were all by nature the children of wrath; but they are now the children of God by faith in Christ. They were formerly without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world; but now they are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God. In times past, their minds were so blinded by the god of this world that they could not see the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ; but God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness has shined in their hearts and given the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. They were once condemned because they did not believe in the Son of God; but now being justified by faith they have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. They were dead in trespasses and sins; but having been made alive by the Holy Spirit and having trusted in Christ, they have eternal life. None but those who have been convicted of sin by the Holy Spirit and have experienced repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, can with unvailed face behold the glory of the Lord in the mirror of the gospel.

Secondly, I shall notice the object beheld in the mirror: The glory of the Lord.

What is the glory of the Lord referred to in the text? It is the character of God as manifested in his Son, that is seen in the mirror of the gospel; for the gospel alone reveals the glory of God in the character of his Son. The glory of the Lord which was seen by the eye in every external manifestation of the divine presence before the coming of Christ was only an emblem of this glory. The glory here referred to is a glory of character not to be seen by the eye, but to be seen or perceived by the mind. Here, dear brethren and sisters, we see it only in a mirror, in heaven we shall see it as it is, for we shall there see face to face. This glory is to be seen only in the mirror of the gospel, for there only is the true character of God manifested to the children of men. This face is seen only in the face of Jesus Christ; for God the Father is seen only in his Son, who is the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person. Jesus, therefore, said to his disciples, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh to the Father but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him and have seen him." The Father and Son are different persons; but if to see the Son is virtually to see the Father, they must be the same God. Christ is the image of God, because in human nature he possessed all the divine attributes and manifested them to the children of men. Christ was the same God with the Father from eternity, but it is only as he is incarnate that he can be the image of God. An image must be seen, but men could not see the invisible God only as it is revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ who in the fourth chapter of this epistle and the fourth verse is called the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, in the sixth verse is called the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. From these passages it is clear that the knowledge of the gospel, the knowledge of the Father, and the knowledge of the Son, are all identical; and the glory of Christ is identical with the glory of God; and therefore Christ must be God manifest in the flesh. That the Father and the Son are the same God, and that the Father is seen only in the Son is most clearly seen in the expression, the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. A person is recognized by his face; because his features and countenance distinguish him from every other. The face of Jesus Christ which distinguished him from all others was evidently his character. The glory of God did not shine in his face externally, for thousands saw his face in this sense who did not comprehend his character; but the glory of God did shine most brilliantly in his character. This was most beautifully represented by the glory in the face of Moses, the type of Christ. The glory of God shined externally in the face of Moses; and thus the glory of God, in all the attributes of his character shined most illustriously in the face of Jesus Christ. Here, my dear brethren and sisters, we can see the divine glory; nowhere else can it be seen. In the word of truth, the gospel of our salvation, we may constantly with unvailed face behold the glory of the Lord. Inestimable privilege! Golden opportunity! O, that we could more highly appreciate and more faithfully improve them!

Thirdly, I shall notice the effect of the beheld glory on the beholders; "are changed into the same image from glory to glory."

The glory of the Lord is not only to be seen in the mirror of the gospel; but the beholding of this glory transforms the beholder into the same image. This is a transformation so wonderful that there is nothing in nature that resembles it. No other object changes those looking at it into its own likeness. In the figure chosen in the text to illustrate this truth, there is in this respect no resemblance, but rather a contrariety. The image in a mirror is formed by the object before the mirror; and it is changed or modified as the object is changed or modified; but in the thing to be illustrated the image seen in the mirror gives its own likeness to the one looking at it; and in proportion as the image in the mirror is clearly discerned, the beholder becomes more and more like it. The like conformation between the beholder and the image is seen both in the figure and the thing to be illustrated by it; but the regulating principle of likeness is reversed. In the figure the regulating principle is the object before the mirror; but in the thing to be illustrated, the regulating principle is the image in the mirror. In the mirror there is an image that conforms itself to the object before the mirror; but in the gospel there is an image of Christ that conforms the beholder to itself. The glory on the face of Moses clearly illustrates this subject. When Moses beheld the divine glory, his face became glorious; so when any one beholds Christ in the gospel mirror, he is transformed into the likeness of his glorious character. A very important fact brought to light here is that the children of God must, even in this world, become in some measure like their Heavenly Father; and hence he says to them "Be ye holy, for I am holy." How, dear brethren and sisters, can the children of the prince of this world who have all the features of their father become the children of our Father in heaven? It can be effected only by beholding the glorious character of God as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ in the mirror of the gospel. That the glory of the Lord seen in this mirror is a manifestation of his glorious attributes is evident from the fact that a distinct view of it in the mirror changes the beholder into the same image. It is evident that the contemplation of the divine glory in the mirror produces no external glory, therefore, the image conferred must be an image of character. The first view of the image of the glory of God in Christ leaves its impression on the soul of the beholder. If the gospel is so imperfectly presented to the mind, the image will be clearly discerned, and the impression made will be clear and distinct. By seeing God as he is manifested in Christ in the gospel we are new-created in the image of God in knowledge, in righteousness and in holiness. This gracious transformation is not complete at first; but the conformation to the divine image is a progressive work. It is a progressive assimilation to the image of Christ who is the image of God. This is clearly taught in the text in the expression, "are changed into the same image from glory to glory." If, dear brethren and sisters, it is our high privilege, with unvailed face, to behold the glory of the Lord in the gospel and to be changed into the same image from glory to glory, will it not be injurious to us if we do not daily grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Therefore, we should earnestly strive to obey the precepts and to imitate the example of our blessed Lord and Master, and pray fervently for divine assistance to enable us to labor faithfully and efficiently in his cause.

Fourthly, I shall notice the almighty Agent by whom this gracious transformation is affected, "as by the Spirit of the Lord."

Though the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shines luminously in the face of Jesus Christ, and the gospel clearly displays that glory, yet no one has ever seen it, without the enlightening and life-giving power of the Holy Spirit. If the gospel is light which cannot be seen without being known, and if it contains its own evidence, why do not all see and embrace it? The apostle gives the answer in the next chapter, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ who is the image of God should shine unto them." Why do not the blind see the sun? The blindness of unbelievers is, doubtless, willful blindness, but it is not less intense on this account. The power of the Holy Spirit must attend the word of truth in order to manifest the glory of God in the character of Jesus Christ. It is the province of the Holy Spirit to give both light and life. The eyes of unbelievers are so completely blinded by sin, that unless they are opened by Almighty Power, they will not see the light though it should shine before them with seven-fold intensity. The Holy Spirit through the gospel opens their eyes, enlightens their understandings and renews their minds. One point of the utmost importance in the text is, that it is by contemplating the image of God in Christ in the gospel that men become like him, so it is always by the energy of the Holy Spirit that the gospel has the effect. Human wisdom errs on both sides of this awful truth. Some contend that the Spirit sometimes produces this transformation without the gospel. This is a great and fearful error. The Holy Spirit always effects this gracious change through the instrumentality of the gospel; for the gospel alone exhibits the character of God as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ. Others contend that the word of God alone is sufficient to effect the transformation without the agency of the Holy Spirit. This is a fearful and fatal error. Perhaps, they imagine that they honor the Scriptures, by alleging that they, without the teaching of the Spirit, can effect this change in conversion. This view, however, makes a god of the Scriptures and dishonors the Lord God of the Bible. The word of God is mighty for pulling down strongholds, but it is mighty only through God. The word of God is the sword of the Spirit, but the keenest blade is harmless without a living agent to wield it. There is a difference between the sword and the soldier who wields it; and there is such a difference also between the word of God and the Holy Spirit in the conversion of sinners. Can anything but divine power give life to those who are dead in sin? Did not divine power accompany the command, "Lazarus, come forth?" Does it not require the same power to give spiritual life to those who are spiritually dead? It requires the same power to create anew that created the world; and hence Paul says, "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." If, dear brethren and sisters, we are permitted, with unvailed face, to behold as in a glass the glory of the Lord and to be changed into the same image from glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord, how earnestly and intently should we look into the mirror of the gospel that we may daily become more conformed to his glorious character. Dear brethren in the ministry, if the views which I have presented are Scriptural, it is evident that we cannot cause sinners to see the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ in the mirror of the gospel. This is the work of the Holy Spirit; and it is beyond our ability and outside of our commission. But our blessed Lord and Master who, according to his boundless love and amazing grace, has called us to preach the gospel, does require us to hold up clearly and distinctly before lost sinners the gospel which reveals the glory of God in Christ. How important our work! How fearful and weighty its responsibilities! All human expedients to convert sinners are disgraceful to the gospel of Christ; and are not only useless but exceedingly injurious. It is right for us to denounce the terrors of the law against sinners, to show them their guilt, condemnation and helplessness, and to employ every motive which may influence their minds in order to attract attention to the gospel; but in order that sinners may be converted to God, we must clearly, earnestly and affectionately preach the gospel which manifests the glory of God in Christ, and shows how all the divine attributes, in their highest perfection, harmonize in the glorious scheme of redemption, relying alone on the power of the Holy Spirit for success. For however clearly we may expound the truths of the gospel, and however forcibly and tenderly we may impress them, they will not have the desired effect on the minds and hearts of the hearers, unless accompanied by the energetic, convicting and converting power of the Holy Spirit. My dear brethren and sisters, how our hearts ought to glow with love and gratitude towards our Father in heaven for his matchless love manifested in the gift of his beloved Son to redeem us with his own precious blood; and toward the Son who is the image of the Father, because he has through the Holy Spirit revealed his Father to us. If, dear brethren and sisters, it is our privilege to behold the divine glory in the mirror as the gospel, and to be changed into the same image by the Holy Spirit, how intently should we view that image, and how earnestly should we study his character as it is revealed in the gospel, and how fervently should we pray that the Holy Spirit may illuminate our minds, that we may daily become more and more assimilated to his perfect character. This conformity to the likeness of Christ will not be complete in this world; but it will advance from glory to glory until it finally terminates in an exceeding and eternal weight of glory, when we believed the Holy Spirit sealed us as an earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession to the praise of the glory of divine grace. The Spirit himself bears witness with our spirits that we are the children of God, and in consequence of this relationship we are heirs of God and joint heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ. Oh! boundless love! Amazing grace! O, that we could fully appreciate his love and mercy, and faithfully improve our opportunities! In view of our relation as children of God, the Apostle John says, "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us that we should be called the children of God; therefore the world knoweth us not because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the children of God, and it does not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Dear brethren and sisters, we live among the children of this world and daily associate with them, but they know us not, because they are ignorant of God, and hence they often regard us as fanatics: but the Good Shepherd knows his sheep and they follow him. It does not appear in our state of humiliation and imperfection what we shall be; but we fondly anticipate the time when we shall awake in his likeness. Though now, dear brethren and sisters, as soldiers of the Cross, we are engaged in a sore conflict with the world, the flesh and the devil, we shall not be defeated; for the Holy Spirit is our guide and comforter, and the Lord Jesus Christ is our Captain, and therefore though we may have to pass through many fearful battles, we shall gain a complete victory, for our Captain will surely triumph; and through the greatness of his power and the riches of his grace, he will bring us off more than conquerors. When he shall come in his glory attended by all the holy angels to raise the dead and judge the world in righteousness, then shall he change these bodies of humiliation and fashion them like his own glorious body. Then will our spirits which have been changed into his image from glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord, be reunited to our glorified bodies; and then shall we see him as he is, and the result of the glorious vision will be that we shall be like him. Then in consequence of our relation to him as the bride, the Lamb's wife we shall be exalted above all other created intelligent beings in the universe. Then shall we stand with that innumerable multitude of all nations, and kindred, and people, and tongues, arrayed in robes of spotless purity, with palms of victory in our hands and crowns of glory on our heads, before the throne of God and before the Lamb, and without one discordant sound or one jarring note swell the glorious anthem of praise unto God and unto the Lamb who has redeemed us with his own precious blood, for ever and ever. Amen.

The Ministry Overloaded.

There was a time when the cry of the church to the great Lord of the harvest was, "Send forth more laborers into the vineyard." It is doubtful whether that prayer is needed now. The ministerial market is glutted. The supply has outstripped the demand. At least in the Eastern States there seems to be a preponderance of preachers. A church is no sooner vacant than forty men spring up ready to take the empty pulpit. We hear every day of men of pure character, large experience and fine education who cannot get settlements. It is poor encouragement to study for the ministry when, after long courses of education, so many gifted men fail to find churches to preach to which seems a duty.

The trouble lies largely with ordaining councils and unscrupulous churches that allow the poorer quality to glut the market. A smart insurance agent, or a ready-speaking carpenter, or a gifted house painter thinks he could be useful in the ministry and keep on with his trade, and a foolish church calls a council to ordain him. The work is done, and the man with a glue pot or a paint-brush in one hand and a limp Bible in the other crowds out the man who has had a dozen years of hard study in the academy, the college and the theological seminary. A young man who has never expended a dollar in text books, and who never has been able to earn over a dollar a day in self support, is willing to preach in his way for a small salary, and churches that believe in cheap preaching are willing to accept such a man as pastor, because less money will be needed to square accounts at the end of the year. They may be sure that the quality of the preaching is not just what it ought to be, but they solace themselves with the thought that the preaching is as good as the pay, and are content. Glibness is often mistaken for learning, and a man who knows little, who never had an idea of exegesis or biblical interpretation, is often more glib than a college graduate. He is not hindered by homiletics, nor plagued by exegesis, nor restrained by delicate shades of meaning in the holy word. He can slap and dash, where a theological professor would pause and think. There is no Greek Testament in his way, and he has no sense of the propriety of the thing. He can preach a sermon and make nothing of it. His race is generally short, though there are men, exceptions of course, who stay, and rise to eminence without training or preparation. But they are extraordinary men. They are not examples. The Principal of Louvain said to the son of the Vicar of Wakefield: "You see me, young man; I never learned Greek, and I don't find that I have ever missed it. I have had a doctor's cap and gown without Greek; I have ten thousand florins a year without Greek; I eat heartily without Greek; and in short, I don't know Greek; I do not believe there is any good in it." If a young man says: "There is the Principal of Louvain who got cap, gown and ten thousand florins a year without Greek and I'll eschew Greek," he is a dunce. Adam Clarke once said: "I never study out a sermon until I come to its delivery. Were I before the King or the University I should do the same." A less man than Adam Clarke who should try that would be a simpleton. What Adam Clarke or Charles H. Spurgeon could do, would be blank miserable failure with other men.

But it will be said, if the man with the glue-pot can crowd out the college graduate, let him do it, for he must be "smarter." Ah, that is just the trouble, the man who is able to teach, who would wear like iron, who would prove a workman needing not to be ashamed, does not possess the "smartness." He comes with ability and not show. He is a burning fire and not a skyrocket. The skyrocket eclipses the evening star. The insane ambition of the churches for "smartness," irrespective of what is under it, is the curse of our day and the ruin and death of our churches.

We do not argue that every minister must be educated in a college. We do not say that the "short-cut" is not sometimes commendable. We are well aware that some of our ablest preachers and finest pastors never had a sheepskin. But for all that, and for all the honor we would do that class of men, we protest against overloading the ministry with materials that can only render it permanently and fundamentally weak. An ecclesiastical council has no right before God to ordain a man to the ministry unless he is fitted therefor. It is treason to Christ, disloyalty to the church, and an injury to the candidate. What if the church in Scrubtown say they want him! What if the little 7x9 house was crowded on the Sunday when he was advertised to preach on the "Witch of Endor!" What if his aged father is a pious deacon who would be offended if his son should fail to pass! What if his pastor with church pride begs that he may be ordained! No candidate should be put into the ministry unless he is mentally, morally, and theologically qualified for the work. A council has no more right to do this than it has to alter the terms of salvation or drop out one of the ten commandments.—Christian Inquirer.

If thou seek rest in this life, how wilt thou then attain to the everlasting rest! Set not thyself for much rest, but for much patience. Seek true peace—not in earth, not in heaven; not in men, nor in any other creature, but in God alone.—Thomas à Kempis.

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1893.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

STRAY BAPTISTS.

It is a fact that none can deny that quite a number of our Baptist brethren and sisters are living in different communities who have never connected themselves with the churches near them, and hence, have failed to properly identify themselves with the cause in the communities in which their lot is cast. It is quite common for our preachers, and others, to roundly abuse this class of Baptists, and the editor, as a rule, joins in. In this paper we wish to reason kindly with our brethren and sisters who are thus situated, and in this way, if possible, convince them of duty, instead of using abuse in order to drive them to it. We would not have them or others to suppose that we propose to assume the role of apologist for the course they have pursued; nor would we claim that the severe censure to which they are often subjected is unmerited; but still this censure has been going on so long, and there are still so many "stray Baptists" that persist in the course for which they are blamed, that it has occurred to us that, in this paper at least, we should remember that there is much wisdom in the old motto, "Persuasion is better than force."

It would be well, then, in the outset to inquire into the causes that will account for the fact that so many Baptists can be found in different communities who have never called for their church letters; or if they hold them, have never joined the Baptist churches nearest to them.

One very evident cause is carelessness. Many of our people, when they prepare to move to other sections of country, will make all necessary secular preparation for the journey and for the change; but they seem utterly oblivious to the fact that they ought to make religious preparation also; and this latter kind of preparation involves that of calling for letters of dismission before leaving. If it be wise for a man to adjust his secular affairs for such a change, where is the wisdom of neglecting his religious affairs? His failure to do so generally indicates that he places more value on the seen than on the unseen.

Another cause is to be found in the fact that, although they are going to other sections, they think that the ties that bind them to the old church are so tender as that they cannot sever them. They thus reason: "This is the church of my mother, father, and relatives; here I professed, and here I was baptized, and owing to the dear associations and memories that bind me to this people and church, I cannot sever the relation, I cannot call for my letter," &c. There is some seeming force in this reasoning, dear brethren, and yet, to be candid, there is a great deal of weakness in it. No one blames you for loving the church of your parents and relatives, where you professed and was baptized. It would be strange if you did not, and you should be happy in all the years that follow your leaving your old home when from time to time you are permitted to revisit the scenes that are so dear to you, and to worship again within the walls and under the roof of the dear old building within which God forsooth blessed your own soul; but you ought to remember that in calling for your letter you are not severing spiritual relations between yourself, your old church, and your dear ones. If they are christians, they belong to God's family, and you are one with them, it matters not what particular Baptist church you may join. Baptist doctrines and principles ought to be so dear to you that any Baptist church would be dear to you; and this spirit would lead you to join promptly the church near to you, though it should be much weaker in many respects than the one from which you came. Admit that it is weak, and has many defects that your old church did not have; will you not let this fact dawn upon your soul, that the Lord may have sent you there to make it stronger. Does not the Great Captain of the Lord's hosts know when his line of battle is weak, and where his people are weak? and has he not sent you there you are needed? and yet you hold back and refuse to take hold, dodging duty, and doing the cause harm, by talking about the ties that bind you to your old home church. Brother, play the man, and when the Lord sends you to another field, buckle your armor, fall in with your brethren, weak or strong, and quit you in the battle for right and truth like a man. And remember that you and your friends will [illegible] to your old home church if [illegible] to you and to them that you [illegible] faithful to the Master in the new [illegible] your lot is cast.

Another cause is to be found in the fact that some are actually too stingy to do their duty at home or in the new field to which they go. This we sincerely hope is not true of many of our people who fail to carry their church letters with them and to use them; but we fear it is true of some. Why a man should wish to belong to a church and yet be unwilling to bear some part of the expense of running it, is a mystery that can be explained only on the score of ignorance, or covetousness. If any who read these lines are among the stray Baptists, they should remember that, let their reasons be what they may, they lay themselves open to the suspicion of being considered covetous, or else ignorant. People are apt to think this, especially when our stray brethren are located in a community where our people are struggling to build a new house of worship, or to free themselves from the burden of a debt. And the trouble about some of the stray brethren thus situated is, they neither give at home nor at the place where their lot is cast. Sometimes these men wait until the local struggle is over, the church out of debt, and then they use their church letters, and unite with the church near them, offering some trivial excuse for the long delay. Ah, brethren, if you be not among those who act in this way, then act promptly, and do your duty. That duty is, as a rule, to join promptly the church nearest to you, especially where you are needed, when you go from one section to another. To claim to be a Baptist and refuse to contribute, at home, or where you are, ought to bring the blush of shame to any true man or woman's cheek.

Another cause yet may be mentioned, and that is the desire to be so freed from the restraints of church membership as to be at liberty to indulge in sins that would not be tolerated by the church near them, if they were actual members. Being away from the mother church, and not subject to the discipline of the one near to them, they feel at liberty to so conform to the customs of the world as to bring reproach upon the name of the Master. These stray brethren, that stray for the above reason, are often first at the ball, the theatre, &c., and when they thus begin to drift, it is hard to tell what the end shall be. It is a dangerous thing to thus stray from the fold, and from the shepherd's care, to eat of the forbidden fruitage of sin.

The remedy for all this lies partly with the churches and partly with the brethren of whom we speak. There are some churches, and pastors too, we fear, who, instead of encouraging the members that leave their churches and go elsewhere to call for their letters, rather encourage them not to do so; influenced again partly by the sentimentalism above mentioned about home ties, the mother church, &c. Would it not be better for such churches and pastors to be a little more candid, and add that they sometimes encourage them not to call for their letters, or, which is about the same thing, do not advise them to do so because they still desire their contributions.

Church rolls should be overhauled by competent committees occasionally, and when there are absent members that are living in other communities, especially those that have ceased to do their duty at home, and who have not called for their letters, they should at once be corresponded with and matters righted. The best cure for this trouble, however, is with our people who make the changes mentioned. Let them always, unless under very peculiar circumstances, call for their letters and place them with another church promptly when they reach their new homes.

THE Christian Index of Atlanta, Ga., the most poorly edited Baptist paper in the South, in last week's issue presumes to criticise our use of capitals in the words "Judism" and "christianity." Glancing over his page in which the criticism occurs, a number of mistakes, as usual, presented themselves. We turned the paper over to two of our printers, and in a little while they returned it marked all over, and the entire margin, top and bottom and both sides, were entirely covered with marked errors, and on his editorial page over one hundred errors were marked. Many glaring errors in spelling in his leading editorial—the word "bigotry" was twice spelled "bigoty." Many errors in the use of capitals, errors in rulings, punctuations, and every conceivable thing. But the would-be critic outraged editorial courtesy in his effort to hold up a contemporary to ridicule before his readers by displaying his criticism in leaving out all capitals, and thus printing the name of our paper in small type. One hundred errors on a single page is a hundred times more excusable than a wilful violation of every principle of courtesy. But we are charitable enough to think that it was the work of some irresponsible interloper who wanted to vent some spleen against us.

Georgia affords the best field for a first-class Baptist paper in the South. Isn't it a wonder and a pity that some one does not improve the opportunity?

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....Rev. G. W. Harmon, has been called to the pastoral care of the Baptist church in Weldon, N. C.

....Rev. D. L. Moody, the evangelist, is to commence a meeting in Charlotte, N. C., to day (March 8th.)

....Rev. A. A. Butler of Durham writes that his church is growing more and more hopeful and encouraging.

....Rev. D. M. Austin, pastor of the Olivet Baptist church in Charlotte, N. C., has tendered his resignation.

....Bro. C. R. Scott of Williams' Mills cheered us last Wednesday by a visit with a respectable club of subscribers.

....Dr. Neil McKay of Harnett county, an able Presbyterian minister, died February 28th, aged about eighty years.

....Dr. J. J. Hall gave the hand of fellowship to three persons on Sunday morning last at the Tabernacle church of this city.

....Rev. G. M. Duke of Duke's, N. C., writes: "We have continued bad weather, which is hard on country preachers, but we are doing our very best."

....We learn from the Hickory Press and Carolintan that Rev. Mr. Cashwell of Mocksville is conducting an interesting meeting at the Baptist church in Hickory, N. C.

....Rev. G. H. Church of Bryson City, N. C., has resigned the care of the Baptist at that place, and speaks of coming east of the Ridge. Bro. Church is a good preacher.

....Rev. Jno. H. Couch of Venner, Va., writes that he has been abundantly blessed in his field during the half year that he has been there; has baptized seventy five persons in one of his churches.

....A good many of the preachers of New York, Dr. Judson among them, have taken to using bicycles.—Western Recorder. From the sight of old men on bicycles and old women trying to dance—deliver us.

....Rev. J. L. White, pastor of the First Baptist church, Asheville, N. C., will assist Dr. Mundy in a meeting at the First church, this city, (Greenville), beginning Monday, March 27th.—Baptist (S. C.) Courier.

....Now is the time to send your name to the Corresponding Secretary of the Convention if you wish the Board of Missions to appoint you a delegate to the next session of the Southern Baptist Convention.

....Now is the time to order your Sunday school supplies for the second quarter. You can see in another part of this paper the new statement by our own Supply Store in this city. Write them for all you need.

....An interesting meeting is in progress at the Second Baptist church. The pastor, Rev. G. L. Finch is aided by Rev. T. J. Taylor of Warrenton, who preaches with impressiveness and power.—Goldsboro Headlight.

....Rev. J. H. Lamberth, who has been preaching for the Baptist congregation here during the past month, left Monday to be absent a few weeks. He will return to Greenville by the first of April.—Greenville Reflector, March 1.

....Bro. John M. Stoner of Charlotte, N. C., says: "The RECORDER has been very precious to me the past year: worth to me many times its cost. It is like good company—the more I associate with it the more of its good qualities I imbibe."

...."To carry out the suggestion (Dr. Ellis' for one Board) would be to destroy the Convention."—American Baptist. Few men can so conceal their real object, in a suggestion like the one Dr. Ellis made, that some of the brethren will not find it out.

....The Richmond Dispatch gives an account of the revival at Grace Street (Dr. W. E. Hatcher's church) as being of unusual interest. Large crowds attend the meetings, and a great many go forward to confess Christ. The meetings are conducted by Dr. H. M. Wharton of Baltimore.

....Rev. L. O. Broughton of Winston, N. C., writes: "I give you my hand on that editorial 'City Churches and Pastors.' Can't accommodate the folks Sunday nights of late, with all the chairs and the annex thrown open. We are holding our prayer service. Expect Thomas next Monday."

....Rev. J. J. McLendon of Wolfsville, N. C., says: "Times are hard with us, but we would greatly miss the RECORDER. We have seven children, and we do not use tobacco nor whiskey. We are striving to live peaceable lives, 'in all godliness and honesty.'" You are both prolific and of good habits, brother.

....Rev. D. M. Austin, pastor of Olivet church, Charlotte, baptized six persons last Sunday night and received two others into the fellowship of his church by letter. The success of Bro. Austin and his mission church have been really surprising. It is a demonstration of what can be done by faithful and wise work.

....A special meeting of the Anson Association will be held in the Baptist church of this town on Thursday of next week, March 9th, at 10 o'clock, to decide the question of a union of the churches of Anson and Richmond counties in one Association. It is possible that Dr. Powell of Mexico may be present to speak on missions.—Wadesboro Messenger Intelligencer, March 2.

....Rev. O. L. Stringfield of Wakefield, N. C., expects to preach to his four churches this year, and in addition thereto give one-fourth of his time in aiding pastors and missionaries in protracted meetings. Bro. Stringfield preaches the pure gospel with great freshness and power, and we know of no better help in this State, a pastor desiring such aid could secure. He is to begin a meeting at our West End Mission next Sunday night.

....Dr. W. D. Powell of Mexico was with Dr. Pritchard in Charlotte last Sunday, and passed through Raleigh on Monday on his way to Wake Forest where he was to speak Monday night.

....The Populist chaplain of the Populist Senate of Populist Kansas, opened proceedings with this prayer, a day or two after the Populist defeat: "May God have mercy on this treason infected State. Amen." The Populists understood it one way, the Republicans another. We must await the decision of the Supreme Court for its application.—The Independent.

....In the discussion of the Normal and Industrial School, located at Greensboro, before the House committee in this city, Feb. 21st, 1893, Maj. Finger is reported to have asked: "Why are these gentlemen here interfering with the business of the State?" This he said, referring to the Presidents of the dedominational female colleges of the State. Remember it.

....Rev. I. W. Thomas of Hibriten says: "We have just closed a good meeting of eight days at King's Creek church with ten additions—eight by baptism, one by letter, and one restored. The church was strengthened and united. Many penitents were left. Bro. C. E. Gower was with us first of the meeting, and did good preaching, and greatly endeared himself to the people. Bro. W. B. Beach, a young minister, and member of King's Creek church, aided me last of the meeting."

....Diligence is a most commendable virtue. It lightens our burdens, strengthens our body, quickens our perceptions, enlarges our brain and adds to life's happiness. Richard Burke, after listening to a masterly effort of his brother Edmund, in the parliament of England, was found in deep thought by a friend, who asked him the cause of his sober thinking. He replied, "I have been wondering how Ned has contrived to monopolize all the talents of the Burke family, and I think I have solved the problem: when we were at play, he was always at work." This is an important lesson for our sons and daughters, and it is also important to christians.—Alabama Baptist.

....The progress of the Baptist cause in France is one of the most remarkable religious movements of the present time. Although there are many additions to the Baptist churches by baptism, the chief growth is from another source. A considerable portion of the most evangelical elements in other churches seems to be on the point of coming over bodily to the Baptist ranks. Revulsion from the ritualism and corruptions of the Roman church, and the formalism and liberalism of the State churches has driven many of the most devout minds in France to the Bible, and this has led many to the Baptist position. A body of believers in Toulon and a whole church of one hundred members in Switzerland, with its pastor, have joined the Baptists. Quite a number of pastors from the Free Church have also come over and greatly strengthened the force of Baptist laborers in France. Even in priest-ridden Belgium a little Baptist church of fifteen members has been formed. Two hundred and twenty-two were baptized into the two Baptist churches in Paris the last year, and the outlook for the whole work is exceedingly encouraging.—Boston Watchman.

Important Facts.

The receipts of the Foreign Mission Board at Richmond for the last fiscal year of the Southern Baptist Convention to Feb. 15th, 1892, were $63,598 67, and the total receipts for this year to Feb. 15th, are $91,975.17. This is a gain over last year for the same months of $28,376 40. In addition to this gain for the present year, Bro. A. F. Sellers of Texas has sent a deed to the Board for a house and lot valued at $650 and also his note, payable in two years, with interest, for $2,000, and Bro. James E. Meador of Kentucky has sent a deed for 640 acres of land in Texas valued at $600.

FROM OUR NORTH CAROLINA CHURCHES

the total amount sent to the Board at Richmond to Feb. 15th, 1892, was $3,191.08, and the total amount sent this year to Feb 15th, is $6,714 47. This is a gain from our North Carolina churches for this year over the same months in last year of $3,423 39.

ONLY FIFTY-THREE DAYS

now remain to the close of this fiscal year. The last day of April at twelve o'clock noon the Treasurer of the Foreign Mission Board and the Treasurer of the Home Mission Board will close their books for this year. What is done for these objects must be done soon.

THE FOREIGN BOARD

is now overdrawn in bank $30,000. This is on the regular work, and is the largest debt the Board has ever carried at this season.

THE HOME BOARD

is equally as bad off, and its needs are as important and pressing as the needs of the Foreign Board. We have not, however, the exact figures from the Home Board before us.

AT THE BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION

held in this city in December last, our Board was then due its missionaries on work for the year ending Nov. 1st, 1892, the sum of $2,127.48. Since that time, as you can see by the Treasurer's acknowledgments in this paper, only $682.31 have been received for State Missions. This leaves us still due our State missionaries on work for the year ending Nov. 1st, 1892, $1,445.17. What shall be done? When can these faithful men, who greatly need what is due them, be paid? Our only hope is to look to the churches.

THE FIRST QUARTER

on this Conventional year is passed, and one-fourth of the thirteen thousand dollars appropriated on this year's work ought to have been paid.

TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS

are still due on the Colored Institutes' held last summer. Every pastor in the Convention, by voting for Bro. T. J. Taylor's resolution on this work, thereby promised to take one collection for it during the year. But less than a half dozen churches have sent anything to our Treasurer for this object since the Convention in Goldsboro. What shall we do?

These are the facts. They ought to speak to us all.

to the next session of the Southern Baptist Convention should be appointed at the next meeting of our Board of Missions. If you expect to go and wish to be appointed a delegate, write to me at once. The Convention is to meet this year in Nashville, Tenn., May 12–15. We will give the facts about railroad rates later. C. DURHAM.

An Arrow Head that has Hit.

In reading this week a religious paper—and one that I read with interest—I notice under the heading "Arrow Heads," what I think to be a poisoned arrow head.

At present, however, it is such a convenient fashion in replying to one who objects to anything said, to say, "The dog that howls is the one you hit," or "If the cap fits, wear it," that one with "sore toes" would, or at least should, be afraid to question or object to anything he reads. Yet with exposed toes and wearing the cap so far as it fits me, without waiting for such kind admonition from him who thinks such remarks effective armor either defensive or offensive, I proceed to speak. And even if I die from "trampled toes" and cap-wearing, I shall try to rub that arrow head, if perchance I may rub off at least a little of the poison before it penetrates too deeply. I hope, however, I shall not have a bad case of rabies. Here is the arrow head of which I speak:

"A dollar for the heathen and a kick for the tramp is a bad showing."

This admits of more constructions than one, it is true. And if it mean this, "Our blessings are so many that only a dollar for the heathen is a bad showing," and "Since God has been so kind to us who are miserable sinners, for us to be cruel and unkind to the poor and unfortunate, is a bad showing," then I heartily endorse and impel the shaft, if it will hit as intended and not from a bent point hit amiss. But if it means this, "To turn a professional tramp empty-handed from one's door, and yet give a dollar to the heathen, is a bad showing," then it seems to me to have been dipped deep in the poison, however unintentionally it may have been done. And it is a double pointed arrow from each point of which the poison escapes.

First, it tends to discourage mission giving.

Second, it tends to foster pauperism and tramps.

It is a trite fact that the press largely shapes public manners and morals. Seldom are the readers of any one paper above that paper. Certainly a religious paper ought to lead in this great press work of developing the moral and religious manhood and womanhood of our land. As responsible as are the positions we preachers try to fill, the christian editor has a more responsible position in this respect. Close scrutiny and devout armor should guide the religious pen. That pen makes an atmosphere in which is developed either vigor or weakness. If the family paper is careless of missions, so are the members of that family. If in a family naturally prone to quoting as Scripture, "Charity begins at home," the paper comes and says, "Better give the dollar to a tramp than to the heathen," the next mission collection will not get the dollar from that family. And when such a semi-hostile spirit to missions begins to percolate through some parts of North Carolina, it will require a miracle to prevent the annulling of many noble efforts; and many a penny that now goes to send light to the dark corners of the world will canker in the pocket of the church member and go neither to the heathen nor to the poor (?) tramp. It is hard to build up but easy to pull down.

But aside from its tendency to hurt missions, it contains a positively injurious principle—a principle that does violence to all sound political economy. Teach men to support tramps, and you teach lazy men to become tramps. Encourage men to become tramps, and you encourage the civil, moral, and religious dissolution of your country. Nor is it a violation of charity to turn a professional tramp empty-handed from your door. This is true for North Carolina at any rate. Is a man old and feeble and hence unable to support himself? Where in North Carolina is there not a home provided for such at the public expense? Is it not degrading to become an inmate of such a home? Is it not doubly degrading to become a tramp, and degrading not only to the tramp but also to the community? Is it a poor, unfortunate orphan? And where are our orphan homes? Is it a shiftless wretch trying to beg his way from one city to another? And where is the charity in helping to shift upon an innocent and unoffending community a worthless wretch who cannot or will not live a sober, honest life at home? Is it a poor woman whom misfortune has rendered unable to eke out a miserable existence? And whose foot has ever spurned her as a tramp? Is she a tramp? If so, then she is a fit object for the home provided for such unfortunates at the public expense. Here she can live a more respectable, honest, and satisfactory life than she can as a tramp, in which position she would become a wandering testimony of her own sad condition and a degrading and a poisoning element in the community. What poor, needy person is not provided for without developing a dangerous class of worthless vagabonds? Sound economy demands the suppression of tramps.

Christ in Metaphor—No. 2.

BY HIGHT C. MOORE.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

I am the good shepherd—John x: 14.

A shepherd is tending his flocks among the hills of Palestine. The sheep are grazing around him as he plays on flute or harp. He leads them to the best pastures and by the purest waters. Skilled and faithful, he defends them from every foe. Helpless lambs are tenderly carried in his arms. If one is about to go astray, he brings it into line with the rest. If one is lost, he searches until he finds it. The sheep heed not the voice of the stranger. They know their master. He calls them by name. They love and obey him. Thus the strongest ties exist between a shepherd and his sheep.

With such a scene in mind our Saviour drew this comparison. He saw that the relation between a shepherd and his flock would convey the best possible idea of the relation between himself and his people. So he said, "I am the good shepherd"—"the, as if there were no others; good, as if all others were bad."

Then, behold the great Shepherd guarding his sheep. On land and on sea he attends them. In adversity and in prosperity he is near. He is faithful and will never forsake them. He is powerful and will suppress every foe. He is rich and will supply all of their wants. He is kind; some may be diseased or disobedient, but his tenderness is never unavailing.

In striking contrast are many qualities of the sheep. They are wandering and rebellious. They deserve to perish. They wilfully expose themselves to deadly enemies. They have no just claims upon the shepherd. Yet see his "loving kindness and tender mercy."

1. He purchased them. "Ye are bought with a price." He paid it—a life of trial and a death of agony. Paul wrote of the "church of God which he had purchased with his own blood." Peter says, "Ye know ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ."

It is said that when God conceived the thought of man's creation, he inquired of Justice, Truth, and Mercy, "shall we make man?" Justice replied, "make him not; he will trample upon thy laws" Truth answered, "make him not; he will pollute thy sanctuary." But Mercy dropped on her knees and exclaimed, "O God, make him; I will watch over him through all the dark paths he may have to tread." Then God created man and said to him, "Go, child of Mercy, and deal with thy brother." He went astray. Then began the work of Mercy. Redemption must be effected. Divine justice must be satisfied. Christ, the victim, goes forth. Now, if ever in all eternity, the music of heaven ceases and angels drop their wings in silent grief. The great heart of God is moved. And the purchase of wayward man is made at a cost of the brightest gem in glory.

Mark the career of the celestial victim on earth. He starts in the manger of Bethlehem. There almighty power is robed in helpless infancy. An awful conflict occurs in the wilderness between the prince of darkness and the Son of man, and the enemy of the sheep is vanquished. How he marks out the way for the sheep in his sublime teachings! How effectually he heals them by his mighty miracles! How patiently and submissively he bears their sorrows in the garden of Gethsemane! How willingly he lays down his life for them upon Calvary! He goes into the grave and conquers death in his stronghold. Then he rises from the guarded tomb and ascends to heaven. Thus the price has been paid and the flock has been "redeemed without money."

2. He knows them. "I know my sheep and am known of mine." The knowledge of Christ is infinite. The hairs of no head are unnumbered. No sparrow falls without his notice. "How much more are ye better than the fowls!" The sheep are scattered widely over earth. They are to be found on the icy shores of Greenland and the burning sands of Africa; in sunny Italy, wild Asia, fair America; in every part of the globe. He knows them all. Their every thought and action are penned in his book of remembrance. He knows their griefs and sorrows. He weighs their talents and abilities. He pities their weakness and folly. He fathoms their hearts and explores their inmost souls. "The eyes of the Lord are in every place beholding the evil and the good."

3. He feeds them. "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." He provides the green pastures of his word. There we may always roam and feast and grow strong. There we shall find no poisonous weeds. There no burning sun will strike us down with its fierce rays. Through its pleasant vales and adown its grassy slopes flow crystal streams where we may quench our thirst. In his shadow we may rest. With his own hand our wants shall be supplied. He is ever ready to hear our cries and heed our petitions.

Outside of him there is no nourishment for the soul. The spiritual man turns from the unsatisfying husks of this world and longs for the bread of life. It rejects the frothy cisterns of carnal pleasures and thirsts for the fountain of living waters. It abhors the barren waters of earth and searches for the fair oases of divine favor. Truly happy is he who can sing with the sweet Psalmist of old, "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters."

4. He guides them. The divine hand led Israel through the wilderness. They had the pillow of cloud by day and the pillow of fire by night. Disobedience would have brought death, but they followed the divine leading and reached Canaan in safety. It is supreme folly to live and not be led. We are ignorant of the realities which surround us. We are short-sighted and cannot see into the future. No army treads on hostile and unknown soil without guides. No vessel launches forth on the trackless sea except with compass and chart. The railway locomotive, plunging forward, follows its track of steel. Yet many enter life with no guiding principle; and this accounts for the sad and frequent wrecks of men on hidden shoals and treacherous waves.

The good Shepherd is the wisest and most faithful of all guides. He throws about us the mantle of providence. "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people." His word is our guide. There he warns us of dangers along the way. There he marks out the path we are to pursue. He leads us by his own life. It stands before us in its perfect sublimity as a guiding star. He has left a stainless example and we are told to follow his steps. He guides us by his Spirit. It dwells within us. When temptations assail, it prompts us to cling to the right. The Shepherd is caring for his sheep, and thus he leads them to the fold above.

5. He defends them. The flock has foes. Man, endowed with strength and intelligence, is master of the natural world, but he must face enemies which baffle the highest human skill with unfailing success. They strike at the vitals of the race. They are ruinous to its best interests. They lurk in all the ways of life. There are "fightings within, fears without." There are snares spread for our feet and pits into which we may fall. Dangers beset us on every side. Our enemies are alluring and deceptive. They are powerful. They are skilled in strategy. They are deadly and destructive. They are numerous. Alas, they are oftimes successful.

Shall they forever prevail! Shall the archers of the enemy shoot their poisoned arrows upon our defenceless heads? Shall the wolves of the evil one swoop down upon helpless sheep as their prey? No. We have a refuge in Christ. We have a Shepherd and he will defend us. Hostile forces may be strong and mighty, but he alone can say "all power is given me in heaven and in earth." They may be cunning, but he has infinite knowledge and skill. They may be alluring; Christ is "chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely."

6. He heals them. This is a world of the dying. Disease with tireless industry is ever doing its fatal work. Plagues rob cities of their population. The awful ravages of hereditary and contagious maladies are everywhere sadly known. Physicians rise to meet the emergencies of the day. Medical science and skill are advancing. But here is a problem beyond human solution. Here is a malady which man cannot cure.

The leprosy of sin is raging. It infests and dooms the race. Doubt is a cancerous sore that means the death of all spiritual enjoyment and usefulness. Sorrow, as a sickening vapor, envelops the soul. Physical disease harrows the human heart. Distress and adversity overtake us. Where shall we look for aid? Whither shall we fly for healing? Says Jesus, "Come unto me." He is the great Physician. No applicant is ever turned away. No patient is ever dismissed as incurable. With words of tender consolation he administers the remedy and effects the cure. He is a Shepherd great and true. He knows how to deal with his flock. He understands their nature. He heals their diseases.

7. He seeks the lost. The good Shepherd's mission to earth was clearly stated by himself: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost." Isaiah, glancing at all people in every age, declared, "All we like sheep have gone astray." It is the nature of man to wander away from the path of duty. Moses, the Lawgiver, was guilty of disobedience in the wilderness. David, the king, committed one of the darkest deeds in history. Peter, the apostle, denied his Master with profane emphasis. Going astray, the sheep are exposed to danger. Hungry wolves are waiting for them. The Shepherd knows the evil on hand. What anxiety he feels! How diligent in his search for the lost!

There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold—
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

Ah, none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed;
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through
Ere he found his sheep that was lost,
Out in the desert he heard its cry
Sick and he pless and ready to die.

Then all through the mountains thunder-riven
And up from the rocky steep,
There arose a glad cry to the gate of heaven,
"Rejoice! I have found my sheep!
And the angels echoed around the throne,
"Rejoice! for the Lord brings back his own!"

8. He provides a fold. Absolute rest and protection is not found in this world. Earth is not our eternal abode. It is hostile to the soul. It is an arena of conflict and battle and strife. There is a "better country." There is a fold for the sheep. The Shepherd has declared, "I go to prepare a place for you."

The church militant affords temporary security. Its unity and energy prophesy no good to its foes. They fly before it, while it moves grandly on from victory to victory. But the flock attain ideal safety only by passing the gateway of the tomb. Now the waters of death are crossed. Time is forever past. Judgment is over.

See the great Shepherd lead his flock into the celestial city. The fields of joy lie before them robed in eternal verdure. The tree of life is burdened with its precious fruits. The river of life rolls forth a crystal stream from the throne of God. The sheep are housed from the storms of earth. Enemies all vanquished. Foes all conquered. Safe in the fold. An eternity of bliss before them. No more wandering, hungering, thirsting, sickness, death. What a glorious consummation of life's toils and anxieties!

Rev. Samuel J. Porter, a student now at Wake Forest who will graduate in June, has determined to go as a missionary to Brasil.

Notes Taken of a Sermon.

PREACHED BY DR. A. J. ROWLAND IN FRANKLIN SQUARE BAPTIST CHURCH, BALTIMORE, ON SUNDAY, FEB. 26, 1893.

Text, Gal. 2: 18—"If I build again the things I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor."

First, showing how the text was originally used to rebuke Peter and others for their endeavors to impose upon the Galatians the outworn and displaced observances of Mosaism, Peter and "even" Barnabas being guilty of dissimulation, and that a crisis had been reached in the history of the church which, had it not been met by the clear-headed and nimble-hearted Apostle Paul, would have made christianity a failure and brought immeasurable disaster on the world, he proceeded to point out some tendencies of a like character which appear to day. He said in part:

The same tendencies have always appeared in the history of the world. They are operative now. Even in our day of civil and religious freedom, there are not a few who are insisting upon a return to methods and forms which a more spiritual christianity must look upon as having had their day. There is a drift towards sacramentalism, an attempt to revive the priesthood. Multitudes of people, even in our land, seem inclined to go back again to a reliance on external methods. It is the aim of many to put the robe and service of the priest in the place of the simpler forms of Protestant worship. More than sixty Episcopal churches in this country, we are told, have a daily mass. The old practice of confession is creeping into Protestantism. Reliance upon the church rather than upon Christ is becoming quite prevalent. Individual faith in a personal Redeemer is giving way to dependence upon mere external services. Life is being sacrificed to form.

Those who are taking such a course, or tempted to do so, will do well to remember the words of the text. Such divergences from spiritual christianity are not mere matters of taste. Every man who attempts to build again the things, which the more clearly understood teachings of the gospel have consigned to destruction, is a transgressor. He is sinning against his noble ancestors who, with so much sacrifice, broke the bands of the old time superstitions and sought their way out into the light. He is sinning against humanity because experience has shown that anything but simple faith in Christ ends in spiritual tyrannies and stagnation and death. He is sinning against Christ who meant that his people should stand in direct relation with himself. He is sinning against God because he is standing in the way of God's purposes of grace and salvation to lost men. As a transgressor, he will be judged at the bar of the future and of God.

I wish to speak, however, of one or two things in our national life in which this tendency manifests itself.

One of the things which this land may be said to have destroyed is the old time idea of the relation of Church and State. [Here the speaker explained the old relation of Church and State, and traced the history in this country of the principles of religious liberty, showing how that in Massachusetts and Virginia persecution was common. He made a just discrimination between the religious "toleration" of Maryland and true religious liberty.] In Pennsylvania, there was no promulgation of the principle of religious liberty, but a practical enjoyment of it under the mild rule of the Friends. The germ of true religious liberty was planted in Rhode Island under Roger Williams. He proclaimed absolute freedom to all forms of religion, and defined the sphere of the State as belonging only to the secular realm.

Gradually this idea spread. When the Constitution came to be formed, it gave its negative support by failing to make any provision for a State church. But this was seen to be insufficient. Our fathers saw dangers looming in the distance. So they formed and adopted the first amendment to the Constitution, which says that "Congress shall make no laws respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." It will be observed, however, that this amendment says nothing about the power of the separate States to make laws respecting an establishment of religion. As a matter of fact, several of the States continued their State churches. It was not until 1833 that Massachusetts finally severed the link that bound Church and State together. Still the meaning of this first amendment was plain, and the country at large accepted it, so that now for many years absolute religious liberty has been the law of the land. The old idea of the relation of Church and State was destroyed.

But now in more recent years there seems to be a tendency to build again this destroyed thing. There have been insidious attempts to ally and entangle the Church and the State once more. Appropriations from the treasury of the State have been sought and secured for the support of hospitals, schools, reformatories and other institutions which the church has founded and controls. This is essentially a union of Church and State, as really a union as if the State were to take moneys raised by public taxation for the maintenance of a religious establishment. It is an attempt to build again the old ideas of the relation of these two institutions which our fathers destroyed.

Another danger before us is the attempt now being made to ally the Church and State in education. Covert and more open attacks have been made upon our public schools. Mgr. Satolli seems to have come to this country to arrange, if possible, a modus vivendi, between the State and the parochial schools by which the latter may be adopted into our system of popular education and the Catholic church relieved of the expense of their support. Several propositions have been made looking to that end. It appears now that the whole power of the Roman Catholic church will be exerted, especially in our large cities, to secure a practical alliance of Church and State in education.

Now I wish to say with reference to both these things in the expressive words of the Apostle, "If we build again the things which we destroyed, we make ourselves transgressors." Transgressors against those who won for us by fearful sacrifice the liberty of this land; transgressors against those who are to heir our institutions when we pass on to the future; transgressors against his Son. This we are, whether by actual participation in building "again the things we have destroyed," or by indifference while others are doing it.

This evil can only be forestalled by constitutional enactment. In our present Constitution, even with the first amendment, there is nothing to prevent any State in this Union from creating and maintaining an establishment of religion. The amendment says that Congress shall not make any law which shall make such possible, but it does not say that the State may not do so. There is nothing, for example, so far as the law of the land is concerned, to prevent Maryland from enacting in her legislature that the religion of the State shall be Roman Catholic or Episcopalian, and to punish with fine, imprisonment, or even death, those who refuse to pay taxes for the support of such church or conform to its ordinances and ceremonies.

Dr. Rowland then made an appeal to his audience to support the "League," which is seeking to have passed by Congress a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, so that present evils may be corrected, and those which are worse may be averted, though they may not seem to some to be imminent.

J. F. L.

To My Former Pupils of North Carolina.

Dear Girls:—Again, through the kindness of the dear RECORDER I can speak to you. This is the month dedicated by the Christians in the home land to especial prayer for the conversion of Mexico. How many of you are praying for me this month—that God may bless even my unworthy labors to the conversion of some souls in Doctor Arroyo? You know not—you cannot know—how sorely those of us, cut off from church privileges and Christian influences need your prayers. Many of you know something of what it cost me to come to Mexico. Many of you knew the widowed mother whose tears and entreaties to stay with her had to be resisted: more of you knew and loved the invalid sister, whose dying bedside I left. When the hour of parting with her came, I knelt by her bedside and prayed her forgiveness for what some called my desertion. With her feeble hands clasped around my neck and her streaming eyes lifted to heaven she said: "Sister, go to Mexico and work: I shall lie here and pray for your success, and together in heaven we shall share the harvest." What success I have had as a missionary, is due in a great part to the prayers of my now sainted sister Effie, "though dead, yet speaketh." Who of you, her schoolmates, her dear friends, will take up this part of her unfinished work—the daily praying for her sister?

If you are praying for me, then I am sure you will be interested in hearing from me.

About six months ago we left the large city Matehuala, and, crossing two mountains in a stage coach, came to live in the remote agricultural village which bears the peculiar name, Doctor Arroyo. We feel that the people here were more ready to receive the gospel than those living in the mining city, and the success of the work since our arrival has confirmed that opinion. For the past two months our preaching hall has been so crowded that it must be enlarged to accommodate the increasing congregations.

Seeing the need of a girls' school here, a month ago we secured the services of a graduate of Madero Institute, Saltillo, who wished to do missionary work among her people, and opened school with eight pupils. We have now twenty enrolled and still they come.

Many who do not yet enter the church, listen at the open doors and welcome us when we visit them in their homes, allowing us to read the Bible to and pray with them.

A Christian physician would be of great help to us in our work. Our nearest doctor is thirty-five miles off, and even our slight knowledge of caring for and curing the sick have been of use in gaining us entrance into some homes. The remedies of the people are simple and often mixed with superstition, so that in case of serious illness they are of no use. Mr. Chastain and our little daughter have both been to the brink of the grave with typhoid fever since we have lived here, but the Great Physician listened to our cry and healed our sick ones.

I am greatly encouraged in my work among the women in their homes and in the weekly Bible class. Comparatively few of them can read, but many are attentive to all instruction given. The pupils of the school attend regularly all the church services. Many of them repeat every Sunday several verses from the Bible. God is giving us many visible evidences of his blessing upon our work for him. Would you know the purest joy this wide earth affords? It is feeling that God is using you as the instrument in the conversion of a soul! Try it, and see if you do not agree with me. God has not put it into the hearts of all of you to be foreign missionaries, but he has put it within the reach of each and every one of you to pray for the outpouring of the Spirit upon the work of those who are in foreign lands. The keynote to the evangelization of Mexico lies in the little word of four letters give. Give firstly yourselves, if God has called you to the work; secondly, a liberal portion of your means, and lastly and chiefly, give your prayers for those who are your representatives among the people who know not God.

That a prayer-hearing God may abundantly answer your petitions is the prayer of your sister in Christ,

M. LILLIAN WRIGHT CHASTAIN.

Doctor Arroyo, Mexico, March 1, 1893.

A wise reproof is good for everybody.

That, This, and the Other.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—My "That" has reference to my departure from Beaufort, where on Jan. 29th I closed a three years and three months' pastorate.

When I took charge of the work, my time was divided between Beaufort and Morehead City, and both churches were aided by the Board of Missions. During my first year, both churches concluded that they had "boarded" long enough, and that they would go to "house keeping." The Beaufort church said to me, We will give you $550 per year to preach for us every Sunday; and I said, It's a bargain, and I remained with them until the above mentioned date. During my stay at Beaufort, their church was remodelled and made practically new, and they now boast of one of the neatest wooden buildings in Eastern Carolina. The Beaufort church contains some of the "salt of the earth," and some staunch friends of the RECORDER.

Just here let me digress a little to pull Bro. J. C. C.'s hair. I would like to ask him why it is that he gives Beaufort the "go by," when he gets as near them as Morehead City? He has made at least three trips to the above mentioned City, and has "written up the dear brethren," but did not consider it worth his while to go over to Beaufort. I would advise him to cross over next time, for I think there is some "good money" over there for the RECORDER.

Having received a call from this church (Washington), and a commission from the Board (you see I have gone to "boarding" again), I accepted, and, of course, had to resign Beaufort. The parting was painful, for we had many dear friends both in and out of the church, but as the best of friends must part, we had to say "good bye."

Now we have reached our "This," which is Washington. This is a thriving town of, say, about five thousand inhabitants. There are several large saw-mills, a ship yard or two, a rice mill, and other industries here.

The Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians and Disciples (Campbellites) all have quite strong churches with good buildings. But the Baptists are few and far between, and have a very dilapidated building, which was built before "the war." I have been informed that it is the only church that was not burned by the Federal troops, and it is a great pity they did not burn that, too. The cause here has been greatly neglected in the past, but we are hoping for better things for the future. Our great need is a neat house in which to worship, and my intention is, as soon as spring opens, to start the "building boom," and never let it rest until we have a house of which our friends will not be ashamed. To do this, we will need help, as we are few in numbers and poor in purse.

Upon our arrival here we received a very warm welcome, and were well cared for by Bro. Thomas and his widowed daughter, Mrs. Pilley, until we could secure a suitable house, which we succeeded in doing in about a week. Before we had gotten straight, the members of the church and friends came in upon us with a lot of good things for the sustenance of the body, such as hams, sugar, coffee, meal, canned goods, &c. One wise brother, knowing that such things were not good to eat raw, brought a load of wood.

A very prominent Baptist has moved here with his family, and will unite with us, which will add four to our number.

Now for "the Other." This is not in anyway connected with the above, but I want to say it. I would, with all due deference, say to Bro. J. E. White, that judging from what he has said in regard to "A Call to the Ministry," that he had better go to the S. B. T. S. and study theology under Dr. J. A. Broadus for six or twelve months. Last summer I was called on unexpectedly to preach an ordination sermon, and I used as my text, Jonah 3: 2—"Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." I used the following analysis: 1. God selects the preacher. 2. God selects the place. 3. God selects the theme. Now, if Bro. White is right, I am wrong. Yours in the work,

DUNCAN MCLEOD.

Resolutions Passed by Clement Bap. Church.

WHEREAS, Rev. J. H. Lamberth, having preached for us for seven years and one half, and having resigned his pastorate to go into other fields; and whereas, the church, desiring to express its gratefulness for his efficient labors while with us, resolves:

That in his resignation the church has lost an ardent, diligent and loving pastor.

That we will ever cherish the fond remembrance of his christian work, his untiring energy in the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom.

That our earnest prayers shall follow him in his new home wherever it be, and that we commend him to those among whom he may go, as a zealous servant of Christ, worthy of their confidence and respect.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, a copy sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER and Person County Courier for publication.

Done by order of conference in regular session, Saturday, Feb. 19th, 1893.

J. I. COLTRAIN, Church Clerk.

The Battle of Alamance.

The Rev. Morgan Edwards was a sad Tory. He had much capacity, good learning, keen wit, iron industry, elevated character and unquestioned loyalty to Baptist interests as he understood them. But he was born in England and he could never get over it; he was hostile to every man and movement that looked towards the independence of America. Baptists owe him thanks, especially every student of Baptist history; but we must always read him with a grain of allowance when the question of American independence comes into play. That was his limitation, and no power on earth could remove it.

To gather materials for his history of Baptists in America he made a laborious tour of the American Colonies. If you consider how much was signified by that, and how much of our information about the beginnings of Baptist life in various sections is founded on information contributed by him, you will find it difficult to praise him as highly as he deserves. But his visit to North Carolina fell in an evil time. It was about a twelve month after the battle of Alamance, which was fought on the 16th of May, 1771. The Alamance was the earliest battle of the American Revolution, and Rev. Morgan Edwards could not abide the name of it. The Colonists had risen in a just and righteous rebellion against the exactions and violence of the officers of the Crown, and though they had been defeated they had not been subdued. The air was full of suppressed mutterings, which to a loyalist would be nothing else than marks of treason.

As soon as he approached North Carolina his olfactories experienced great distress; he clapped his fingers to his nose and held them there till he was comfortably beyond the borders on the other side. To his thinking it was "a poor, unhappy Province, where superiors make complaints of the people and the people of their superiors; which complaints, if just, show the body politic to be like that of Israel in the time of Isaiah, 'from the sole of the foot to crown of the head without any soundness, but wounds and bruises and putrifying sores.'" His prejudices against North Carolina were strong and unreasonable; her people stood on the side of patriotism and against the English government.

The representations of a historian whose bias was so uncontrolable could not be expected to be reliable, and yet, strange to say, the authority of Morgan Edwards regarding Baptist affairs in North Carolina has been followed hitherto almost without criticism. As a Tory he was very solicitous that the North Carolina Baptists should be cleared of all kind of connection with the battle of Alamance. It was unindurably painful to his sensibilities that one of his brethren should ever be found in the ranks of American patriots. Accordingly he has shaped his account in such a way as to represent that the Baptists had little or no connection with the war of the Regulators.

In giving an account to his government, Tryon, the royal Governor, who was on the spot, and therefore greatly better informed than Mr. Edwards, had described the Regulators "as a faction of Quakers and Baptists, who aimed at overturning the church of England." This position, which is most likely correct, except perhaps as regards the motives attributed by the Governor, is vigorously contested by our Tory historian, and in striving to remove this supposed stigma from the Baptist name he has gone far to rob our people of one of their brightest laurels.

Edwards affirms that among the four thousand who stood against the Governor at Alamance were found only seven Baptists. But the place was situated in a country where the Baptists were by far the most numerous element of the population; and when the battle fell out unfavorably nearly all Baptist churches in the region were desolated by the removal into other parts of members who had been compromised by connection with the movement. What is probably true in the representation of Mr. Edwards is that only seven of the Baptists held prominent offices in the army of the Regulators, and he sets forth in glowing terms how one of these, Capt. Merrill, was hanged. It has not been unusual for Baptists to form the main body of military organizations while the officers would be captured by men of other denominations.

Another argument advanced by Mr. Edwards in support of his opinion is that Sandy Creek Association, within whose limits the battle occurred, had passed a resolution in October, 1769, as follows: "If any of our members shall take up arms against the legal authority, or aid and abet them that do so, he shall be excommunicated." I shall not undertake to deny that the Association ever enacted any resolution couched in these terms, notwithstanding the fact that no proof exists for it except the prejudiced account of our Tory historian. But it was passed, if at all, in October, 1769, and in view of the stirring changes of the times might easily have become a dead letter before the month of May, 1771. Indeed the ink could hardly have been dry that recorded it, before the Regulators paid a visit to the Association in armed force, if Edwards speaks truly, to inquire if such action had been taken and to threaten them for taking it. In short, if there ever was any serious resistance made by Sandy Creek Association, its effect must have been neutralized many months before the battle of Alamance took place.

New evidence on this subject has just been supplied by Rev. N. B. Cobb in that excellent publication extitled The North Carolina Baptist Almanac for the year 1893. On pp. 12–14 of that work is printed a copy of Rev. Morgan Edwards' history of Sandy Creek and New River churches. In connection with the latter he sets down an item that bears on the subject. Mr. Edwards says: "Arrived on the last Saturday in November [illegible] to excommunicate any that [illegible] the Regulators. (Samuel) [illegible] and mob—took many rifles. [illegible] threatened with thirty lashes a month till he consented to join the Regulators."

Here is testimony furnished by Edwards against himself, and in its way it is almost as conclusive as that supplied above by Governor Tryon against him. He must have been aware of this occurrence and possibly of others like unto it, when he endeavored to strip the Baptists of North Carolina of one of their most worthy honors, merely to gratify his Tory tastes as to the fitness of things.

What is the value of such a disquisition as this? It lies in the circumstance that the battle of Alamance is regularly made one of the most brilliant pages in the history of the Presbyterians of North Carolina. If you are at pains to read over their version you will find that the first battle of the American Revolution reflects imperishable luster upon their progenitors alone. You would never get a hint that either a Baptist or a Quaker was within many leagues of the consecrated spot. The Presbyterians are heartily welcome to every laurel they have fairly earned. I am sure I wish them well in every right enterprise. But I must insist that the laurels of Alamance, by the representation of the most competent contemporary authority, belong to "the faction of Quakers and Baptists."

Capt. Merrill, the Baptist officer who was hanged for his part in the earliest battle of the Revolution, has endured the obloquy heaped upon him by the Rev. Morgan Edwards quite long enough. I respectfully appeal to the Baptist Historical Society of North Carolina to set on foot some kind of expedient to vindicate the memory of this excellent patriot and Baptist. It is possible he may still have descendants in the North State who would be gratified to have an unjust stigma at last removed from his name. And while this is being done let us beg that they will also advance the just claim that Baptists formed the most important contingent in the forces that assembled to resist tyranny at Alamance, and insist with emphasis that the chief glory of that event belongs to us.—Wm. H. Whitsitt, D. D., in The Baptist Courier, S. C.

Persons afflicted with chilblains, so troublesome to many, will find a pleasant and permanent cure in Salvation Oil. 25c.

The best way to kill a preacher's influence is to criticise him freely. Of course, no preacher is perfect, none are above criticism, but when you begin to pick out the faults of the preacher, you place yourself in a position in which you are not able to do him justice, and you influence the minds of others against him. The best thing to do is to pray for him, and if you find any fault with him, tell it "between him and thee alone."—Central Baptist.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

What of the Centennial?

This subject has been discussed by conventions, associations, committees, sub committees, editors, et al., till by this time it is an unwelcome gratuity for one of low degree to attempt to engage the ear of the great Baptist household upon a topic made luminous by the most brilliant lights in our Baptist Zion. But suffer just a word on a practical phase of the Centennial movement.

NORTH CAROLINA'S QUOTA.

Our State has been asked to raise fifteen thousand dollars of the two hundred and fifty thousand proposed by the Southern Baptist Convention. Now I confess that it was not very refreshing to see how daintily the Baptist State Convention took hold of this fifteen thousand dollars, and after the "cyclonic" effort of Dr. W. D. Powell, when things had somewhat subsided, we had only about one-half of our quota pledged. I just here bethink myself, it is not criticism (for we had an abundance of that) but it is hearty co operation that is needed in raising this amount.

The West Chowan Association pledged one thousand dollars at the Convention in Raleigh. This was thought to be a fair proportion of the fifteen thousand asked of the entire State. This pledge was made on the assumption that North Carolina would pledge and try to raise her full quota, but the fifteen thousand dollars has not been pledged.

Brethren of the West Chowan, what shall be done?

This seems to be about "where we are at." We must either make an honest effort to redeem our pledge or submit to reproach and chagrin. I believe that with the proper effort the pledge can be raised, though it may require some sacrifice and a little extension of time. Now, I rise to move that the pastors and as many of the lay brethren as possible meet at some central point in our Association at an early day and apportion our pledge among the churches and thereby show that we mean what we say.

If there is a Centennial Committee in the West Chowan Association, I ask pardon for thus intruding upon their prerogatives, but still renew my motion—what say you, brethren? I would not disparage a single agency now in the field, nor criticise any member of our Centennial Committees, but would humbly suggest that the Centennial offering will not be raised by sweet meat-methods, neither can the women and children alone raise it, but this grand movement must challenge the effort and thought of the pastors and churches. Men, women and children, and all, must help a little. I have faith in the pastors and churches of the West Chowan Association, and firmly believe when we get so we want this thing done it will be done.

Very truly yours,

L. M. CURTIS.

A Grand and Glorious Entertainment.

A grand and glorious entertainment has been given by the young ladies of Wake Forest in the interest of the Wake Forest Athletic Association that delighted the eye, charmed the ear, and inspired the soul. As a witness of the occasion, and it is now midnight, and with four hard recitations to prepare for the morrow, and one at that under Prof. Carlyle in intermediate Latin, and one under Prof. Royall in Greek, yet I cannot refrain from expressing my sincerest thanks for the grand and glorious entertainment. How can earth lose its charms or life its inspiration when under the influence of such an entertainment? I indeed forgot the bleakness of winter, the monotony of college life, and in imagination's fancy soared in the realms of the sweet beyond, when the bell tapped and the curtain was drawn and revealed Jacob's dream. The reward of the christian clinging to the cross was so beautifully and magnificently illustrated in a tableaux seen clinging to the cross. While my whole being was completely charmed with the different scenes and recitation, I forgot the vain, fleeting things beneath this veil of tears and thought of the reward of christian when the time should come, when he should close his eyes to the unseemly scenes of this life and wake in the eternal light of God. Neither pen nor pencil can describe the glory and magnificence of the entertainment. Words cannot express the pleasure that it afforded. It is to be known and felt, and yet it is beyond all description. That night will ever be an oasis in my memory. No clouds can obscure its brightness, no sorrow can dim its pleasures, no tears can drive it from my memory.

For it will be a rose to scent the evening air,
A garden of flowers to cheer me when life shall despair;
And when fever shall try to make me insane,
Jacob's dream will be an angel train.

Too Busy to Pray.

Jesus appears to have devoted himself specially to prayer, at times when his life was unusually full of work and excitement. His was a very busy life; there were nearly always "many coming and going" about him. Sometimes, however, there was such a congestion of thronging objects that he scarcely had time to eat. But even then he found time to pray. Indeed, these appear to have been with him seasons of more prolonged prayer than usual. Thus we read: "So much the more went there a fame abroad of him, and great multitudes came together to hear and be healed by him of their infirmities, but he withdrew himself into the wilderness and prayed."

Many in our days know what this congestion of occupation is—they are swept off their feet with their engagements, and can scarcely find time to eat. We make this a reason for not praying. Jesus made it a reason for praying. Is there any doubt which is the better course? Many of the wisest have in this respect done as Jesus did. When Luther had a specially busy and exciting day, he allowed himself a longer time than usual for prayer before hand. A wise man once said he was too busy to be in a hurry; he meant that if he allowed himself to become hurried, he could not do all he had to do. There is nothing like prayer for producing this calm self-possession. When the dust of business so fills your room that it threatens to choke you, sprinkle it with the water of prayer, and then you can cleanse it out with comfort and expedition. —James Stalker, in Episcopal Methodist.

To the Preachers of the Raleigh Association.

Brethren:—The time for our Centennial work is very short, and probably it is not possible to make a personal canvass of the churches. But the opportunity of making an offering must not go unimproved. We have decided, therefore, to ask each preacher in the Raleigh Association to bring this matter up at once, and to take a collection in each church he serves. Do not worry yourself nor your churches about the several different objects to which it can be appropriated. Take it for "the Centennial of Missions." Let it be the offering of each church towards celebrating the great Centennial year. Do not delegate it to the sisters, nor to the Sunday-schools (unless between your appointments they can see and solicit something from every member). But the time is so short that unless something is done at once, some churches will fail to have a part in this work.

Brethren, make the appeal yourselves. Give all necessary explanations. Let this offering be entirely separate from the regular work of the church. And by or before the third Sunday in April, see that each church is reported with its Centennial collection to Bro. J. D Boushall, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C. Now, brethren, to the work, and do not fail to have each church included.

REV. SYLVESTER HASSELL

Good-Night.

There is a tender sweetness about some of our common phrases of affectionate greeting, simple and unobtrusive as they are, which falls like dew upon the heart. Good-night! The little one lisps it as, gowned in white, with shining face and hands, and prayers said, she toddles off to bed. Sisters and brothers exchange the wish; parents and children; friends and friends. Familiar use has robbed it of its significance to some of us; we repeat it automatically without much thought. But consider. We are, as voyagers, putting off from time to time upon an unexplored sea. Our barques of life set sail and go onward into the darkness; and we, asleep on our pillows, take no such care as we do when awake and journeying by daylight. Of the perils of the night, whatever they may be, we take no heed. An unsleeping vigilance of one stronger and wiser than we, who is the Eternal Good. Good and God spring from the same root, are the same in meaning. "Good-by" is only "God be with you." "Good-night" is really "God-night," or "God guard the night."

It would be a churlish household in which these gentle forms of speech were ignored or did not exist. Alike the happy and the sorrowful, day by day, may say "Good-night."—Harper's Bazar.

The Spirit of the Pew.

Don't let the children hear you criticise the sermons as too long, too profound, too discursive, too anything. Don't suffer any one, friend, neighbor or comrade, to criticise the pastor unfavorably in your presence. Don't say the prayers are wearisome, too long, too slow. It is to be remarked that they who carry a devout heart to church seldom find the prayers too long, and usually discover in the sermon some word of comfort, instruction or help which was specially meant for themselves.

It is to be feared that we often lose much of the good we ought to receive in the house of God because we enter it with the pressure of our secular affairs weighing us down, the thoughts of our earthly cares and ambitions following hard after us as we take our places in the pew. Were the pew ever in true love and sympathy with the pulpit, how the latter would be reinforced; how surely to the world-weary, the indifferent, the discouraged, the antagonistic and the men and women of little faith, how surely to all of these would the blessing come from above!—Selected.

Intermediate Quarterly.

Mrs. M. G. Kennedy, the well-known Sunday-school writer, continues in charge of The Intermediate Quarterly, published by the American Baptist Publication Society, her facile pen having acquired still greater skill by years of use in that particular sphere. No school can afford to be without this Intermediate Quarterly. Subscription price, since the reduction, is only 2½ cents per copy. The circulation of this valuable quarterly is over a quarter million copies per quarter.

There may be such a thing as unpopular preaching by preaching the truth. Sometimes good meaning people request their pastor not to say much about certain indiscretions, or sins, common among the members. Of course the preacher, if he is called of God, goes fearlessly on, doing his whole duty. Sometimes you find members of the church engaging in the dance, the game of cards, and other amusements that are not in keeping with christianity. Now of course these members would not have their pastors say anything against their sins. It reminds us of an anecdote, told of an old negro preacher in slavery times. His master said to him one day: "Pompey, I hear you are a great preacher." "Yes, massa, de Lord do help me powerful sometimes." "Well, Pompey, don't you think the negroes steal little things on the plantation?" "I's mighty 'fraid they does, massa." "Then, Pompey, I want you to preach a sermon to the negroes against stealing." After a few moments given to solemn thought on the subject, Pompey replied, "You see, massa, dat wouldn't never do, 'cause it would trow such a coldness over de meetin'." And so it is with church members; when the minister begins to denounce and condemn vices that are common among his members, it makes the "meetin'" very cold.—Alabama Baptist.

Missions in the Southern States.

OUR CITIES.

According to the census of 1880, there were in the South three cities with over 200,000 inhabitants, three with over 100,000, three with over 50,000, thirteen with over 25,000, and twenty-four with over 10,000. There are many counties in Texas, Florida, Louisiana and Maryland without a Baptist preacher or church. The country and the villages should be supplied with faithful preaching, but the greatest need is in the cities. There are few country districts in which the people could not, if they would, go to some evangelical church; while in our large cities there are not sittings for half the population. Baltimore is considered a church-going city, and yet, if everybody should decide to go to church at once, there would be at least 200,000 people crowded out, after deducting 100,000 for the sick and infants. The larger the city, the greater the destitution. Two of our largest cities, Baltimore and New Orleans, are the strongholds of Romanism in America, and should receive special attention, for they are small now compared with what they will be in a few years. The time, indeed, is not distant, when the small towns of the South will have grown into large cities. This is an age of city building. "The world is moving to town," and there is no reason to believe that the South will be an exception to the rule. A recent newspaper caricature represented a man with a four horse plow carefully running a furrow. "Is this your farm?" asked a traveler. "Farm!" replied the plowman, "this is a city, and the place where you now stand is the corner of Commerce and Emporium streets." This caricature on Southern progress was suggested by fact. Cities are growing in some places as if by magic, and in these growing cities is the place to put men and money. Every one of them is to be an heart center, receiving and sending out its pure and vicious blood. We all agree that it is easier to impress a growing child than a mature man. Let us of the South take for Christ our growing cities, while they are young, before the evil days shall come, when the devil, infidelity, liquor and Romanism have taken possession.

A DANGER.

This increase of wealth and population has its perils. To be rich and not religious is a calamity. The religion of most men can stand the strain of poverty better than wealth. Rowland Hill once read the following notice from his pulpit: "The prayers of this congregation are earnestly requested for a man who is growing rich." There was a reason for prayer. The time of getting rich is usually the crisis in which it is settled whether a man shall own his money or his money shall own him. If he decides to be a steward for God, he will be master of his wealth, and will use it wisely; but if he decides that he is the proprietor, his wealth will master him. The South in her poverty has cried unto God, and he has heard her prayer by adding to the church thousands of the saved. What God will do for her in her prosperity depends largely upon the faithfulness with which the churches at this crisis meet their responsibilities.—A. C. Dixon.

CUTICURA BABY

This beautiful baby boy, the son of Geo. B. and Janetta Harris, Webster, Ind., is one of thousands completely cured by the CUTICURA REMEDIES of a torturing and disfiguring skin disease, after many doctors and remedies had wholly failed. The marvelous cures daily performed by these great remedies have astonished all familiar with them. None but mothers realize how these little ones suffer when their tender skins are literally on fire with itching and burning eczemas, and other itching, scaly, blotchy and pimply skin and scalp diseases. To know that a single application of the CUTICURA REMEDIES will afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a permanent and economical (because most speedy) cure, and not to use them, is to fail in your duty. Parents, think of the mental and physical suffering to be endured in years to come from neglected skin, scalp and blood diseases. Cures made in infancy and childhood are almost invariably permanent.

Endorsement.

The St. Louis Trade Review and Export Journal in its issue of February 7th, 1893, has this to say:

EDWARDS & BROUGHTON.

One of the leading enterprises of its character in the entire South is the extensive printing and binding establishment, owned and conducted by the firm of Edwards & Broughton, and located at the corner of Hargett and Salisbury streets, Raleigh, N. C. The gentlemen constituting this firm, Mr. C. B. Edwards and Mr. N. B Broughton, are and have been for many years among Raleigh's prominent and substantial business men and citizens. Mr. Edwards is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Franklin county, and has made this city his home for the past quarter of a century, while Mr. Broughton, also a native of North Carolina, was born in Wake county, and has resided in Raleigh since 1858. They began their present co-partnership about twenty-two years ago. The plant is one of the finest in the South, equipped with the best of presses, etc., and with every improvement and convenience. They do a general printing business in all its branches, and carry in stock a fine line of stationery, letter heads, bill heads, statements, fine wedding stationery, etc., and at prices that no house can discount, quality considered. Catalogues, posters, circulars, etc., will be furnished upon the shortest possible notice. They also conduct a general binding business, manufacturing everything in the line of blank books. With their extraordinary facilities and employing only the best skilled workmen, they are enabled to produce a grade of goods that cannot be surpassed by the product of any firm in the country, no matter where located. Prices, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application either personally or by mail, and all orders will receive prompt and careful attention. They have a large trade from outside the city, and parties residing at surrounding points will save money and receive the very best of satisfaction by giving this firm the benefit of their patronage.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Rev. J. H. Layton Dead.

After spending seventy two years and five days in this life, another one of God's servants passed away to his reward. Friday night last, after singing his favorite hymn until his strength was exhausted, Bro. Jeptha H. Layton fell asleep in death. This intelligence will bring sadness to many hearts, for he was well-known in parts of Wake, his native county, Granville, Durham and Person. Having preached in these counties, he sowed the seed from which grew many of the churches that are now standing as monuments of his labors. He also preached several years in Virginia, but his greatest efforts were put forth here in North Carolina.

Bro. Layton was a great revivalist. He had but few equals among the masses while in the vigor of manhood. Very often while holding such meetings, he had only a brush arbor or small log school house for his covering, and from day to day he would proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to fallen humanity with such power that men and women would fall down and cry out, "What must I do to be saved?" His delight was to go out in the highways and hedges and tell the story to the poor offcast and degraded ones. His surroundings had but little to do with his preaching. A soul from the hut was worth as much in his estimation as a soul from the palace. It was the same gospel to all with him.

To such men as Jeptha Layton do we owe much, for their unfeigned love, arduous labor, and great sacrifices while our cause was in its infancy; and for their work's sake we ought to reverence and respect them more, and support them better while living. They laid the foundation on which we are trying to build. To their names and the name of our Master may the praise be given.

Bro. Layton delighted much in music. It had a charm to him. It was delightful to many to hear him sing, and he was always ready to sing, even for the children who would gather about him. I think we will hear his voice among the angel throng when we get to heaven, not as it was here, but sweeter by far.

He was not a literary aspirant by any means, yet he was a friend to education. His educational advantages were very poor; only attended school but very little. I think he told me he never studied English Grammar a day in his life, yet he was very accurate in his expression. I don't remember ever to have heard him make a mistake. He was a self made man, and was ever ready to help those over difficulties he had to wade through himself, so far as he was able.

He was ever ready to help in his church work, for he seemed to delight in it.

He was a constant reader of the RECORDER when he was able to subscribe for it. His scanty means and constant afflictions deprived him of many such privileges and pleasures. He was a poor man as to this world's goods, yet he seemed to be contented with his condition.

But his work is ended, and he is no more.

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

Soldier of Christ, well done,
Praise be thy new employ;
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Saviour's joy."

Queries.

1. If an ordained Free-Will, Anti-Mission, or Campbellite Baptist preacher be received into the fellowship of a Baptist church in North Carolina, should he be ordained by our own brethren before becoming pastor of a Baptist church?

2. Should a preacher who at will, as opportunity offers, becomes pastor of Free-Will Baptist churches, or of our own churches, be recognized among us as a Baptist preacher in good standing?

Letter from Burlington.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Our people had a rare treat last evening. Rev. J. J. Hall, D. D., pastor of the Tabernacle church of your city, was with us and delivered a lecture in our church—subject, "London, and Life in London." It has never been the privilege of this scribe to hear a lecture that excelled the one referred to above. In the beginning, we (the audience) found ourselves in the Metropolis of the world; and, with the lecturer as our guide, we made an imaginary visit to a few (comparatively) of the many places of especial interest, and we were enabled to see this immense city as we had never seen it before.

Dr. Hall made a very fine impression on our people. He showed himself to be a lecturer of unusual ability.

Our house of worship was filled—its seating capacity was tried. Although the train [illegible] time, which kept the audience [illegible] and a half for Dr. Hall, yet, through the entire time, the people listened with the best of attention. This is a favorable comment upon lecture; and also it shows that our people know how to appreciate a good thing.

A few words about our church. While the weather has been very unfavorable for church work since I have been here, we have made some progress. We have received six by letter, and two for baptism. There have been two professions of conversion, and there are many enquiring the way of life. There is considerable revival spirit in our congregation. We expect many accessions in the near future. Our prospects are bright. I might add, the contributions to the various objects of the Convention are reasonably large, and increasing.

Fraternally,
JOHN C. HOCUTT.

County Names for Associations.

Who started them anyway? Can we not find names as expressive and as pretty without borrowing from the counties in naming our Associations? This habit into which we have fallen has worked harm, and will be much more harmful as our Associations multiply.

Here is the Robeson. It is a grand body, but it completely overshadows its little sister, the Richmond, and one or two of the very best churches of the Richmond have left her because the county line runs between them and their Association, and although Robeson has plenty and to spare, not a church within her borders will come over into the Richmond because it aint Robeson.

County pride ought not to circumscribe the usefulness of our churches, but it does; and this spirit of county pride is rife in every Association that bears a county name. How much better and broader the old historic names Pee Dee, Cape Fear, and the like. But these old names will soon be superseded by Currituck and Gates and Catawba and Lincoln and New Hanover Then, when the custom becomes universal, look out for factions and fusses and divisions and petty rivalries to no end. The Anson and Richmond meet in a day or two to consolidate. Why not center on some grand name that is bigger and better and broader than Anson or Richmond, either or both?

New Spring Dress Goods.

Among the new Dress Goods for the Spring wil be noticed some distinct changes, both as to colors and styles, from those of the past season.

Our advance lines of Dress Fabrics for this season are already on sale, and embraces the newest shades and textures in Plain Materials, as well as the latest ideas in the handsomer French Novelties.

This year, Cotton Dress Fabrics will be shown in many dainty effects, and our present exhibit of these is the most extensive we have ever made.

We suggest to our patrons to buy early, as most of these goods are our own importations, consequently many styles once so'd cannot be duplicated.

Requests for samples should indicate something as to colors, and about what price goods are desired.

Cash with the order, of $5.00 and over, goods will be delivered free (except furniture and crockery) to the nearest Express Office or Railroad station.

No Conflict Between Christ and Bible Writers.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Neither you, nor Bro. J. R. Pace, nor Bro. T. S. Andrews, refer to the following sentence in Bro. John E. White's article, "The Missionary Call":

"If any one suggests that Paul provided another way, we would reply that we are followers of Christ."

In this sentence Bro. White virtually pits Paul against Christ; and the point raised is not as to whether we should follow Christ's example rather than Paul's, but Christ's sayings rather than Paul's writings as we have them.

Now for a christian to intimate that there is real conflict between Christ and any one of the inspired writers, is, in my judgment, a grave fault. J. J. McLENDON.

Shoe Factory vs. Brewery.

Walruff's brewery in Lawrence, Kansas, was a valuable piece of property. Prohibition made it useless for that purpose, and the owner sold the building and left the State. This turned the twelve men he had employed out of that into some other industry.

Some men called it a business calamity to lose that brewery and the wages of the twelve men it had employed. But soon the big building was put to use again as a shoe factory, and now, with about the same capital the brewery had, it employs one hundred sober operatives.

Supposing the brewer's twelve men were all sober citizens, let us compare the business record of the brewery and the shoe factory, allowing that the men have the same wages which we will put at an average of ten dollars a week.

The brewer's men had their $120 a week, or $6,240 a year, to expend in house-rent or homes, food, clothing, and household needs. The one hundred shoemakers have $1,000 a week, or $52,000 a year to expend in the same way. The brewery men rented, at the most, twelve cottages. The factory men must have one hundred cottages or lodgings.

And so the builders, bakers, butchers, grocers, clothiers, etc., all have one hundred customers in place of the twelve they lost besides a large amount of money from other customers that formerly went for beer. More than eight times as much money goes from that factory alone into the tills of the traders and workers of that town as used to go from the brewery.

The shoes turned out harm no one. They serve a useful purpose, preserve health, and give comfort and pleasure. They are one of the necessities of civilized life. There is not an oath, a theft, a wife-beating, a fight, or a crime in a thousand pairs of these shoes.

Not so with beer. That hurt, more or less, all who used it. Every barrel had in it curses, blights, diseases, lies, abuse and crimes. It made bad debts, and sooner or later created pauperism, filth, and rags, wherever it went. It turned good citizens into tramps and thieves, and made a business of seducing and debauching innocent boys and girls.

The brewery needed a jail, police court, poor house, lunatic asylum, and watchman. Not even twenty shoe factories would ever need any one of these where there is no brewery nor grog-shop.

There are about 2,300 breweries in this country. Supposing they now employ twelve men on an average. If converted into factories they would give employment to eight times as many men, and pay out annually in wages about one hundred millions of dollars against the twelve millions now paid out in the breweries. Which will you have?—Juniata (Neb.) Herald.

DIED.

JONES—Died, Saturday morning, Feb. 25th, in Chattanooga, Tennessee, Rosa, infant daughter of C. G. and Rosa E. Jones, aged two months and two days. COM.

EDWARDS—On Saturday, February 25th, Mrs. Bettie Edwards, the wife of Rev. W. H. Edwards, breathed her last at Wake Forest. She was thirty-eight years old, and had been a consistent member of the Baptist church for twenty-five years. Gentle, quiet, unobtrusive in her acts of charity, faithful in all the relations of life, she exemplified in her conduct and conversation the teachings and spirit of her blessed Master. I have never seen any one so thoroughly imbued with the missionary spirit. With her the giving of the gospel to the heathen was not only a duty, a desire—it was a passion. A short while before her death her husband noticed a sweet smile on her features, and in response to his inquiry she murmured, "Pretty land, pretty land!" and told her sister that she was going to that beautiful land. May a kind Father strengthen the loving husband and motherless children, and may they all meet her in that "beautiful land." J. B. CARLYLE.

SMITH—Sister H. L. Smith, wife of Bro. Calvin Smith, died on Oct. 2, 1892, at her home in Abbottsburgh, N. C., in the fifty-ninth year of her age. Sister Smith united with the Baptist church at Beaver Dam, Bladen county, N. C., at the age of twenty years. She was the mother of a large family of children, some of whom preceded her to the spirit land; but ten of them—grown men and women—still live. Sister Smith was paralyzed sixteen years prior to her death, and remained sitting in an easy chair the greater part of that long period of time attended by a faithful husband and dutiful children. She retained her right mind until a short time prior to her death, when it seemed her ideas became confused. For several years she was a constant reader of the BIBLICAL RECORDER, and it still comes to this office to her address to cheer and brighten the lonely fireside. But mother is not there now—that chair is vacant, and the home is sad. But though dead, she still lives in the hearts of her children and husband and friends, and the holy, gentle and loving life that she lived, together with that living faith in Christ, which she practiced impresses us that she has gone to live with Christ and his holy angels, where she will be forever free from that body of pain and anguish, and at rest in God's paradise above.

A FRIEND.

Tributes of Respect.

Solomon Denny, born March 19th, 1869, made a profession of religion Dec. 2d, 1886, and united with Landmark Baptist church in December, 1886; was married to Miss Susie Blevins on March 22d, 1891. He was removed from his earthly trials Feb. 18th, 1893. He told his mother two days before his death he was willing to die. The morning of his death he called on Rev. Elihu Tucker to pray with him that he might have more dying grace, and that he might live to serve his maker better than he ever had. Be it Resolved 1. That we, the members of Landmark church, do sincerely lament the death of our dear brother.

2. That we do sincerely sympathize with the widow and friends of the deceased.

3. That the church sustains a heavy loss in the death of their brother, but our loss is his eternal gain. His seat is vacated, but may this call to our minds that we too will soon have to go, and may we all be prepared to go and meet Bro. Solomon, where parting is no more.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be transcribed on our church book, and a copy be forwarded to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

Done by order of Landmark Baptist church Feb. 25th, 1893.

M. L. PORTER, Ch. Clerk.

We, the members of the Third Baptist church of Durham, desire to pay a suitable tribute of respect to the memory of Rev. J. H. Layton, one of our members, who died Feb. 11th, 1893, at the advanced age of seventy-two years. He was well known in parts of Wake, his native county, Granville, Durham and Person. Having preached in those counties, he sowed the seed from which grew many of the churches that are now standing as monuments to his labors. He was a great revivalist. The Lord blessed his labors by giving him many souls for his hire. He was very fond of singing. In his dying hours, he sang as long as he had strength to speak. Blessed thought! He has gone to join the heavenly choir to be with those who ever sing the great Redeemer's praise.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our beloved brother, we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well; therefore be it

Resolved 1. That in the death of our brother, our church has lost a consecrated, faithful, and devoted member.

Resolved 2. That we extend to his bereaved children our heart-felt sympathy in this their hour of sadness.

Resolved 3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the record of the church, and that a copy be sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

KING'S Royal Germetuer CURES

LA GRIPPE.

Rev. W. G. E Cunningham, editor Sunday-school literature M. E. Church, South, says: "The 'grippe' attacked me the second time last spring. One bottle of Germetuer relieved me, as it did before. I feel entirely free from all symptoms of 'la grippe' at present."

RHEUMATISM.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 30, 1892.

We are happy to testify to the value of King's Royal Germetuer, which we have found most efficacious in all rheumatic affections.

The Home Circle.

Alone With God.

Into my closet fleeing, as the dove
Doth homeward flee,
I haste away to ponder o'er Thy love
Alone with Thee.

In the dim wood, by human ear unheard,
Joyous and free,
Lord, I adore Thee, feasting on Thy word
Alone with Thee.

Amidst the busy city, thronged and gay,
But One I see,
Tasting sweet peace, as unobserved I pray
Alone with Thee.

O happy life! Life hid with Christ in God!
So making me,
At home, and by the wayside, and abroad,
Alone with Thee.

—Mrs. Prentiss.

The Little Red Crutch.

'The worst of it is,' said Nanette, 'that there isn't any garret to this house.'

Nanette was leaning on the parlor window, pulling the lace curtains very much awry, and looking disconsolately out into the wet street.

'I don't mind rainy days in story books,' continued the small philosopher, 'because there are always garrets in story books, always, and little girls find the loveliest things in them when it rains—old laces, and skeletons, and other things.'

'Skeletons!' ejaculated the listener at the other window. 'My, Nan! should you like to find a skeleton! I'm rather glad we haven't any garret, if skeletons live in garrets. But, I tell you what,' lowering her voice mysteriously, and coming over to stand on the same long-suffering curtain that Nan was abusing, 'there is a little shut up place in this house that must have something awful in it.'

The 'little shut up place' was a closet in the third story back room. A gabled roof made irregularities in the room, and one of them developed into a very dark closet.

'But it's locked,' objected Nanette.

'No, it isn't. I pulled it open one day, just a very little way.'

'And what was inside?'

'Nothing,' confessed the discoverer, 'except dust and darkness. But I didn't go in, you know. I wouldn't for anything.'

The next minute two slim figures might have been seen—they could not be heard—stealing up the Queen Anne stairway. Tiptoeing, and covering up laughing lips, and pinching each other, they reached the third story back room, and stood before the closed door. But it was not an obstinate door, and the small, cunning fingers soon had it open. Darkness and dust, indeed, plenty of both and nothing else to be seen.

'Would you be afraid to go in there, Nan?'

'No, indeed; 'fraid of what?'

'Would you go away back to the very darkest end?'

Nan insisted that she would.

'Well, then, do it," dared the other, and sturdy Nan plunged into total eclipse. She came back to the cheerful light of day with great alacrity, covered with dust, of course—eyes full, nose and mouth ditto, apron looking like Cinderella's, and something in her hand. Winking her dusty lashes, she held up her discovery. It was a little red crutch.

Downstairs they clattered, with noise enough to make up for their silent ascent, the little crutch bobbing along each step as they flew down to grandmother's room.

The look that came into grandma's eye's when the crutch was held up, was very much the look Anita would have shown if the skeleton had been found indeed, or a ghost.

There was clearly something to tell, and a story on this wet day would be even more delightful than finding a skeleton. The dear old lady was at once put in a state of seige, the crutch and two little girls sitting down very obstinately before her.

'One breezy fall day,' said grandma, surrendering at discretion, 'a little girl went out to the barn to swing.'

'What is a barn, Grandma?'

'This barn,' she answered, 'was the most delightful place in the whole world. It was none of your fine Northern barns, with stained glass windows, but a great high-roofed, dark raftered place, where cobwebs had leave to sleep, where the breeze wandered in and out all day, and the sunshine played about, as the children did hunting eggs. It was full of sweet ordors from the hay field on one side, and the apple orchard on the other; and the little Virginian girl, whose swing dangled from one of the lower beams, had no idea that anybody in the world had a higher claim on it than she had.'

'What was her name, grandma?'

'Her name,' said the old lay, looking startled, 'her name was Nancy, of course.'

'And went out to swing one day,' prompted the listener.

'She went out to swing one day, determined to 'work up' till she touched the beam. She was very strong and very skillful; she put her little bare feet on the board seat, seized the rope high up, gave a tilt this side and that, and was off. Do you know how to 'work up?' How to bend the knees, and straighten them again, with a jerk that sends the obedient swing through the air? Nancy came so near the beam that its cobwebby dust sifted down in her eyes (not the beam she was hanging to, you know, but another.) So close, and yet not to touch! Ambitious little goose! She suddenly threw out her hand, and struck the beam with her [illegible]. But the [illegible] rope swung away [illegible] board tilted, she hung by one [illegible] in the air, and soon the impetus [illegible] swing jerked that hold loose, and she [illegible]

'[illegible] cried the little girls with a sob of [illegible] grandma! was she killed?'

[illegible] killed; but sometimes in the long winter months that followed, when she was weary and racked with pain, she wished that she had been killed. Then this little crutch was made for her at the carpenter's shop on the plantation, and padded on top, and'—

'Painted red!' interrupted Anita.

'No, not then; nobody had ever heard of painting a crutch red; but one rainy day like this, when poor little Nancy felt so tired and sad, and had no hope to cheer her, but lay on the couch and counted how many long months must pass before she could run and walk again, her mother came and knelt down by her—dear, sweet, angelic mother"—what made grandma's voic sound so queer, they wondered—'and said, 'Mother would do anything in the world to please her little daughter.' 'Would you, mother!' cried Nancy, starting up from her pillow; 'would you let me read in your diary?'

'The mother turned red for a minute, while the little cripple watched her eagerly; then she got up and went to the old fashioned secretary with sliding doors, and brought back a large red morocco book, with a brass clasp, and put it in Nancy's hands. It had been the dream of the child's life to read what mother wrote every night in this book; I do not think she counted her fall too high a price to pay for it.

'You may read that red book yourself some day, my darlings, and find out how your blessed great grandmother lived and loved. But one page in it made a difference in that little reader's whole life; it said, 'Our Nancy is bearing her pain like a hero; when I see her smooth the little twitching face, and smile up at me, I thank God for her brave spirit, and take her for my teacher. I shall be a better woman all my life for watching her.'

'After that rainy day and after reading that brass bound morroco book, Nancy was never sad or dreary again. She actually had the little crutch painted red, in token of her gay spirits; and whenever its tip tap was heard (and it sounded on those floors for almost two years) a merry sound of laughter and chatter was pretty sure to follow—so sweet was it to the child to win such dear praise, and to know that mother counted her a blessing for which to thank God.'

The story was ended, and in a twinkling the little crutch fell, resounding, to the floor, while two pair of soft arms held grandmother in a tight embrace.

'O granny, dear! we've caught you now. You were little Nancy, and the crutch was yours.'—The Sunday school Times.

A Noble Boy.

Well! I saw a little boy do something the other day that made me feel good for a week. Indeed it makes my heart fill with tenderness and good feeling even now as I write about it. But let me tell you what it was. As I was going down the street I saw an old man who seemed to be blind walking along without any one to lead him. He went very slowly, feeling with his cane.

"He's walking straight to the highest part of the curbstone," said I to myself. "And it's very high, too; I wonder if some one won't tell him, and start him in the right direction?"

Just then a boy, about fourteen years old, who was playing near the corner, left his playmates, ran up to the old man, put his hand through the man's arm, and said, "Let me lead you across the street." By this time there were three or four others watching the boy. He not only helped him over one crossing, but led him over another to the lower side of the street. Then he ran back to his play.

Now this boy thought he had only done the man a kindness, while I knew that he had made three other persons feel happy, and better, and more careful to do little kindnesses to those about them. The three or four persons who had stopped to watch the boy turned away with a tender smile on their faces, ready to follow the noble example he had set them. I know that I felt more gentle and forgiving toward every one many days afterward.

Another one that was made happy was the boy himself; for it is impossible for us to do a kind act, or to make any one else happy, without being better or happier ourselves. To be good, and to do good, is to be happy.—Youth's Temperance Banner.

Passing Things On.

The old saying is, "keep a thing seven years, and you will find a use for it;" but there are limits in the keeping of things beyond which it is not well to go. On this point the American Cultivator has a few suggestions worth noting:

The most pernicious habit in the world is the habit of saving every article, and scrap, and piece, and bit of stuff in general, with the feeling that sometime and somewhere and somehow it may be of use. By virtue of fidelity to this undefined conviction, drawers, and closets, and attics become filled with old rubbish and accumulations and trash and stuff that are of no earthly use to a human being; that attract moths and mice, and all the domestic pests; that are a burden and a weariness to handle and sort over, every now and then, and are, indeed, simply worse than useless.

The true way is to apportion. The moment a certain thing is unfit for a specific use let it be given to the person who can use it. There are always to be found people who have the time and the patience to mend, and make over, and repair, and who must make this time and handicraft serve in lieu of money; and to those persons should go all such wares. For people whose time has a value beyond that of repairing and refitting it is worse than folly for them to waste it in such a way. Where life is on a fairly well-to do scale, it is always better to buy new and give the old to those to whom it may be of service while it is yet good enough to be of service.

To hoard things against a possible time of their being wanted is idle. The time will never come. Fabrics go out of fashion, or they are cut in a way to make changes impossible, or they cannot be matched with new material, or they are not worth putting with new material. The same truths apply more or less to all household articles. It is idle and useles to store them. Passing things on is the law of life.—Selected.

Rev. W. E. Penn, author of the popular song-book, "Harvest Bells," makes the following statement:

I am an evangelist (Baptist) well known in the Southern and Western States. I was rapidly getting deaf from catarrh. When in Covington, Ky., five years ago, holding meetings in the First Baptist church, I happened to learn of Dr. J. H. Moore's treatment of catarrh while at the house of a friend. I saw in a moment it was the very thing I needed, and at once got it, and in three months my hearing was perfectly restored. Since that time I have recommended this treatment wherever I have been, and know of several bad cases of lung trouble that were cured by its use.

Several years ago I met a minister on the train who had been compelled to give up his charge on account of lung trouble. I advised him to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment; he did so, and in three months was back at his work, fully restored. All the leading physicians here endorse this treatment to the public, hoping it will be the means of bringing similar relief to many others.

Sermon Preparation.

RECENTLY READ BEFORE THE SOMERSET (KY.) PASTORS' CONFERENCE BY REV. W. J. WARD.

The preparation of a sermon should always begin with the preparation of the heart. A sermon is not wholly the product of the intellect. The heart must enter largely into it. Otherwise the hearer's intellect may be instructed and gratified while his heart will be untouched. In order to put much spiritual power into a sermon, the preacher should be much engaged in prayer at the beginning and during its preparation. Thus God's blessing is secured, thought is quickened and spiritual life is given to the whole discourse. In fact, the sermon should be born of the Holy Spirit amid earnest study and faithful prayer. When a sermon is thus prepared, the preacher prays not in vain for divine help in its delivery.

Having secured divine guidance, he is then ready to select his subject. The late Dr. Phillips Brooks once remarked to a friend that he knew nothing of the worry which many preachers experience in selecting themes to preach from. However, the average preacher finds this a very difficult part of his work. And yet I am convinced that the preacher who lives in close touch with God and with his congregation will seldom lack for subjects to preach on. The Word of God was given to meet the spiritual needs of human souls. And the minister who makes himself familiar with the Bible and with the needs of his congregation will find subjects crowding upon him. His own experience with the truth will be very suggestive. For what will do his own soul good will under the same circumstances do others good. But however his selection may be made, let him be thoroughly impressed with its importance. He should feel that much depends upon its appropriateness. In selecting his theme he has the earnest purpose of accomplishing something for God, and that something should be clearly defined in his mind to begin with. A sermon prepared and preached for the beauty of the subject as furnishing an occasion for oratory, for the simple entertainment of the people, or for the purpose of filling in time, can never accomplish holy results. A sermon should never be prepared and preached for its own sake. The preacher who can afford to do this has a very poor conception of his sacred calling.

The happy choice of a text has much to do both with the preparation and delivery of a sermon. A strained connection between the text and the theme, or unnatural divisions will impress the preacher with a sense of incongruity which will cripple his whole effort in preparation and delivery. When the text has been chosen, it will often be found that the mind is sluggish and refuses to act readily. In this case, it will be found very helpful to take up some book which has in it the properties of mental stimulus and read for a while. Here his mind comes in contact with another mind which was wrought up to intense activity at the time of writing, and his mind catches fire, and he is ready to take up his subject and forces all his powers of thought upon it.

The text should receive the most careful and painstaking study. Otherwise what is the significance of taking a text? The preacher should penetrate to the very heart of the text, and by the light of the Holy Spirit take his bearings. Let him work from within outwards, instead of gathering his materials from other quarters and dumping them down upon the text; he will thus get much of the materials for the sermon out of the text. Surface materials are easily gathered and therefore easily exhausted. This is why I insist on the penetrating study of the text. This delving into the text opens rich mines of truth not to be found elsewhere. Here we discover the relation of the truths involved in the text to other related truths. A close and discriminative study of these relations conduce to freshness of style, and suggest lines of thought replete with interest for other sermons. A sermon should be evolved out of the text, and made to glow by the touch of a soul on fire with love to God. Such a sermon has power in it to move souls nearer to God. It is not attached to the text by an imaginary nexus, but grows naturally out of it and reveals its meaning and power. Let the text be studied in its own proper setting. The reflection from the jewels of truth about it often clothes it with a different hue, and frequently invests it with a new meaning to us. This may lead to the necessity of hunting a new text, or it may lead to a rich train of thought wholly different from that contemplated.

This is the telescopic view of the text which "takes in the wider sweep of the whole firmament of truth."

Nor should the preacher be content to study the text in the English if he has even a smattering knowledge of the original language. A professor of New Testament Greek recently said that "a preacher who knows anything about Greek and runs out of something to preach about ought to be ashamed of himself." I am firmly convinced that the text should be studied in the original where it is at all possible. Those passages which have become commonplaces to us are, in the light of the original, often clothed with new life and beauty. The devout student of the original receives valuable impressions and suggestions which he would fail to get from any translation. These often furnish rich material for sermons. Ideas are never fully expressed in words. "For words, like nature, half reveal and half conceal the soul within." And as thought is greater than language, so language is always greater in its original tongue. Hence it pays in the preparation of a sermon to toil over the text in the original, though one should have a very limited knowledge of it.

The preacher should bring all his powers of analysis to bear on the subject in hand. It should be taken apart and polished piece by piece. Let it be thoroughly thought through and through. Until this is done, any effort at synthesis or sermon construction will be awkward and difficult. And it should be remembered that clear thinking here will guarantee clear expression in the delivery of the sermon. No man can make a thing clear to others which has not first been made clear to himself.

Having analyzed his subject, he wishes to begin to build his sermon. First of all, he must have the frame-work. He needs natural and clear cut divisions. These he should get without aid of note or commentary. Consultation of note or comment before this will often confuse the ideas which he has gotten pure and simple from his own independent and devout study of God's word. Dr. John McNeil of London says: "The true preacher prays and meditates on the Scriptures until he has a vision, and he never preaches till he gets the vision." He beholds the outline of his discourse, which, like the outlines of a great painting, needs to be filled out. He now addresses himself to this part of the work. He selects such materials as appropriately enter into the sermon, and the sermon grows until it comes to the finish and is ready for delivery. The Bible, of course, is the chief source of materials for a sermon. However, the true preacher lays all his store of knowledge under tribute as sermon materials, and the larger a man's supply of knowledge is the more useful he may be. But whatever else may be introduced into a sermon, it should be for the sole purpose of illustrating, applying and enforcing the truths of God's word. "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation."

Many a sermon fails of its highest good because the introduction and conclusion have been left to the inspiration of the moment. These should be prepared with especial care since it is necessary to make a good impression at the beginning of the sermon in order to attract and rivet the attention. Then the interest which is awakened in the beginning should rise higher and higher till it reaches its climax at the conclusion. This is not likely to be the case if the conclusion is left to the inspiration of the moment. Both of these will often grow naturally out of the body of the discourse. At other times the circumstances may furnish materials for the introduction while a vigorous application of the sermon forms a fit conclusion.

After all, whatever suggestions we may get by studying sermon preparation, a man's gifts and circumstances will largely mould his theory and practice of sermon making. And the same thing is true as to delivery. But whatever methods of preparation and delivery one may follow, the burning purpose which should thread every sermon should be to save souls, build up christian character and glorify God.

The Preaching of the Day.

"As dull as a sermon" has passed into a proverb. Yet there is no necessary connection between the pulpit and platitude. Even in our own days, when the influence of the press is supposed to overshadow the preacher, we can point to not a few whose words have won the attention and gained the hearts of multitudes who hung spell bound on their lips. There may be many who in their sermons "aim at nothing and hit it," but the man who is mastered by his theme and declares the whole counsel of God has never failed to command an audience.

Nor is there any reason why the pulpit should ever cease to maintain its proper place or to exercise its peculiar power. So long as the preacher is true to his mission and faithful in proclaiming the gospel of God, he holds a position second to none. For in this world, where sin riots, and its curse has captured the very heart of man, he who worthily fills the pulpit is the messenger of divine mercy and the harbinger of heavenly bliss. There is no higher message, no holier ministry, than his.

Nevertheless, it were folly to deny that many sermons are wholly lacking in worth. Without "grace, grit, or gumption," they fail to reach either the understanding or the heart. Containing no divine message, and wholly devoid of spiritual power, they effect no change in the faith or life of those who hear them. Now, surely, the purpose of a sermon ought to be the conversion of sinners or the "building up" of believers. The true function of the preacher is to persuade, not to please. Yet nowadays this is not seldom forgotten. The orator too often is mainly anxious to display his gifts, and win the applause of the groundlings. Provided he can satisfy himself and his hearers, he is too often well content. Thus lightly does he fail to use the vantage ground assigned him, and he both forgets and forfeits the high and holy privilege with which he has been entrusted. Sermons, however eloquent or profound, ranging over the whole field of literature, while carefully avoiding all reference to the gospel, are a disgrace to preacher and hearer alike.

Evidently, if the pulpit is to remain true to itself, it must allow only and always the the exposition and enforcement of the truths contained in the Word. In other places and at other times it may be lawful to deal with the "burning questions" of the hour; but when the congregation meets on the Lord's day, the one question demanding an instant answer is, "What saith the Scripture?" People who believe that God has given us a rule to direct us how we may glorify and enjoy him, care very little about the thoughts or opinions of the man who speaks; they are only anxious to learn and love the true sayings of God. It is worse than impertinence merely to amuse or interest an audience when its one real concern and need is to be saved and sanctified by the truth of God.

One of the highest compliments ever paid to a preacher by a king was addressed to Massillon by the ruler of France. "When I listen to other preachers, I go away pleased with the preacher; but after listening to you, I depart displeased with myself." The reason is not far to seek. While others cared only to tickle the royal ear, the more faithful priest was anxious to awaken the sleeping conscience and to make some impression on the hardened heart. The weight and worth of a sermon are alone determined by its effect. When preaching sends truth to the heart by the power of the Holy Ghost, sinners are saved and saints are edified. And it is by "manifestation of the truth" that the genuine preacher commends himself "to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

There are two qualities essential to success in winning souls. Fitly are they thus indicated in a recent address from the president of the Congregational Union of London:

"There are two things which a preacher must ever keep in himself: love of Christ and his gospel, which ensures personal piety—the one thing which one cannot learn from another, and which is not transmitable; and the love of men and their eternal welfare, which makes him a true Christian philanthropist. These two, if watched and fed, will make a living interesting, if not an eloquent preacher. Ineffective preachers, as a rule, are lacking in one or two things—in real personal religious conviction, or in sincere interest in the welfare here and hereafter of their fellow-men. And if you question the fact that there are preachers without any interest in their fellowmen, read the advertisements where church livings are offered for sale. The last recommendation often dwelt upon, after describing the pleasant scenery, the spacious vicarage, the salmon pool, and the almost total absence of Dissenters, is that there are only so many inhabitants in the parish. Yes, 'a recommendation' that there are no people to take trouble with. No people to be loved, saved and edified; and the living is bought with avidity.

"What better can be done with a preacher if human beings with their trials and eternal destinies are nothing but trouble to him, than to bury him alive in a district without people?

"But let me quote a sentence of quite another spirit by Dr. Arnold: 'That which we know and love we cannot but communicate.' If we would be living preachers we must be loving ones; we must idealize our congregations, and see in the men and women and children around us those for whom Christ gave himself, and the glorious characters he can make them to be. What Emerson says of eloquence is not only true but very suggestive: 'It is the best speech of the best soul.' What additional powers, what increase of influence is opened before each one of us by making our preaching the best speech, full of the tenderest persuasion, the outflow of great love, and ourself the 'best soul,' telling upon our thoughts, words, and the very tones of our voice. What 'land to be possessed' is opened before us, in new and legitimate influence, on the one side and the other—'the best speech of the best soul!'"—The Preachers' Magazine.

Some people measure their duty to their fellowmen by the benefits that they have received from them. Frequently such people are narrow minded and inefficient. We must measure our obligations to others by what Christ has done for us. This is the plan upon which the most useful of Christ's servants have always worked.—Central Baptist.

A Rejoinder to Bro. White.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I wish to set myself straight with Bro. Jno. E. White, then I am done. I am glad I have enough of the milk of human kindness in my heart to love and honor Bro. White, or any other brother for honestly holding on to an opinion, though his opinion, in my judgment, is not correct. I have great respect for the honesty of Bro. White, but mighty little for his opinion in regard to a call to the ministry.

Bro. W. says I did not deal fairly with his article by leaving out the phrase, "With its attendant theatricals, scenes, visions, &c." What he means by the "&c.," I can't tell. I left that out because I did not wish to oppose a thing about which I knew nothing. The whole passage is as follows: "We no longer subscribe to the doctrine of apostolic succession. Why? Because it is neither scriptural nor reasonable. Besides, it tends to religious oligarchy. And the sooner we rid ourselves of the other and companion error of a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry, with its attendant theatrials of scenes, visions, &c., nearer will we accord with truth, Scripture and common sense." Bro. W. ingeniously arranges his assertion, viz: that God does not interpose personally in the calling of men into the ministry by putting it in a capsule. On one side he places the assertion that he don't believe in apostolic succession, and on the other that he don't believe in theatricals of scenes, visions, &c. I can say as readily as Bro. W. that I do not believe in "apostolic succession," nor in "the theatricals of scenes and visions," but I do believe in the personal interposition of God in calling men into the ministry. I don't know whether I believe in his "&c." or not. His capsule was too big for me to swallow, so I took only its contents. Bro. W. ought not to have offered that great big thing to be swallowed. Such big portions can best be taken in broken doses.

If he will read my article carefully, I think he will see that I did not base the call to preach and regeneration on the same passage, but used it only as a simile, showing that the impressions made upon the heart, calling one to preach, is made by the same spirit and in the same way as in regeneration. But if I had based the two on the same passage, I hardly think it would have been a later development in theology than his doctrine that men should preach without a call.

Again he says: "The call to preach, the impression made by the Spirit, urging one to lay aside worldly ambition, in my opinion is no more miraculous and special than the impression made by the Spirit urging a man to do a certain act of charity." Certainly nothing can be more true. The only difference in the impressions made upon the two persons is that the one is impressed to engage in a work for life, while the other is impressed to do a single act. This, in my opinion, is all that is meant by a call to the ministry. It is not accompanied by any theatricals of scenes and visions. Now, I maintain that unless one feels these impressions of the spirit to "lay aside worldly ambitions" and engage in the public ministry, he has no right to preach. Will the brother admit this? If so, how shall we reconcile with this his assertion that "How he shall serve Him is determined entirely by his own judgment of his talent and fitness?"

Paul says, in Romans 12: 4-8, "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having, then, gifts differing according to the grace that is given unto us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation. He that giveth let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth with diligence; he that showeth mercy with cheerfulness." Now, he who feels impressed by the Spirit to engage in teaching, or exhortation, or the ministry, is called to do that special work. I think there are some whose duty it is to engage in making money to carry on the Lord's work. It would not be wrong to say that they are called to do that work. Some who give money are doing as acceptable service for their Master as those who give their time and talent to preaching His gospel. God does not, we think, call a man to any of these departments of His work unless he is qualified, but the man is not left to be the judge of his qualifications. If God call him He has a place adopted to his qualifications. He may not be adapted to the work in the city, but there is a work for him in the village or country. But Bro. W. does not seem to recognize the different departments of the Lord's work. He seems to make the mistake of classing all Christian work under the head of preaching. He says: "I still earnestly believe that if the growth of grace were persisted in, that every truly converted person could not, as the supreme importance of the gospel forced itself upon his heart, but go preach it to his friends, to strangers, everywhere, as did these members of the Jerusalem Church. If such was the case, who would do the other Christian work?

There is a great difference in propagating the gospel and preaching it officially. Preaching is only one way of propagating it. All other ways and methods are just as honorable as preaching. 1 Cor., 12: 21-22: "And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again, the head to the feet I have no need of you; nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary." I agree with the brother that too much of the work has been left for the ministers to do. I think persons are just as imperatively called to other branches of the work as to the ministry.

The position taken is a work for every man, and every man to his work. Read Mark 13: 34.

If, as Bro. W. maintains, no special call to the ministry is necessary, why the custom of examining ministers, before ordination, on their call to the work. If there is no authority for it, then it must be wrong to require any evidence of a call when there is none. Is it possible that all the Baptist host, and other denominations, too, have been going blindly in this matter? It is possible, but not probable. Bro. White must be in the hopeless minority of Baptists, at least.

With the kindest feeling for all who may differ in opinion, I leave the subject with them.

Thoughts By the Way.

In my rambles among the churches, I sometimes find that the church-members seem to worship their pastor more than their God; or it looks so to a spectator. Is this best for the pastor and congregation? Preachers are human beings liable to err like other people. If a preacher is a good man, he is as good and no better than a good layman. The adulation shown him sometimes makes him worship himself and dislike all those who do not worship him or sound his praises.

I think the pastor ought to be always spoken well of—hold up his hands and help him forward in all good works.

Some churches pay their pastors so little, that they almost starve them; and in that case I can't see how the pastor can love or respect them as he should (no pastor worship there). Surely the people who will not pay a fair salary don't respect him enough.

Again, I think some churches pay their pastors more than is necessary for his support; and this I think they do sometimes to worship themselves—to say, we pay our preacher so many thousand dollars a year; it would be a disgrace to us to pay less; we would be retrograding.

I think it is the duty of all working in a civilized country to pay liberally to churches, orphan asylums and all worthy charitable objects; and if it is, we ought not to cause one preacher to live in luxury, and our next-door neighbor preacher, who does as much or more work, to nearly starve. I believe in being consistent in church work as well as in other things, and think a church should be run on common sense as much so as a farmer's or a merchant's business. Further, I believe churches are rather anxious for rich men to join them, whether converted or not; and if the man thought to be rich (and they don't know that he can pay his debts, though he seems to be rich) does not pay very liberally, the members generally begin to talk about how stingy and mean he is, and thereby cultivate an unbrotherly feeling in the church. The reputed rich man will hear of such remarks, and will think if the poorer members had worked more and talked less, they, too, might have been worth more. Hence, it may not be best to make a special effort to get the rich in the churches unless surely converted. "There is none good, no not one," the Bible says; and if we are saved, it will only be through the mercy of God. This fact clearly shows that we should overlook the failings of others as much as we can, as we all have our faults, whether others know of them or not. So let us do all we can to help our erring brethren.

The RECORDER grows better and better as it increases in age.

JUSTICE.

Depreciating Other People.

Some men have a habit of depreciating others. They can always see the faults of their neighbors much quicker than their good qualities. Where no real fault exists they either imagine one, or by innuendo suggest to other people that so and so is not what he is generally supposed to be. The true inwardness of this evil habit of speaking depreciatingly of others, is an effort to elevate one's self in the estimate of the person addressed. When a man has no strong points to commend him, he seeks to appear important by ingeniously reflecting on his contemporaries. The spirit that will do this is little, narrow, selfish. Such conduct deserves the unqualified condemnation of all honorable persons. The man or woman who is betrayed into this ignoble practice will surely come to grief. Nothing is truer than that the world will ultimately measure us at about our true worth. He who for a time gains a fictitious merit by pulling down others, is destined to exposure. His methods will be found out, and there will come a time when without genuine worth upon which to base his claim for respect and confidence, and having forfeited the love of those who were once his friends by insinuations against them, he will be pitiable indeed. Don't go through life reflecting on other people. Let your good works and kind speeches commend you and you will always have friends.—Epworth Methodist.

The Biblical Recorder.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1893.

REV. C. T. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
J. C. CADDELL, AGENT AND CORRESPONDENT.

A STRIKING CASE OF SELFISHNESS.

If one will study carefully the conduct of Jonah, as recorded especially in the fourth chapter of his prophecy, he will find a first-class case of selfishness. God, in the first place, spoke to Jonah, commanding him to arise and go to Nineveh, and "cry against" that city, for their wickedness had come up before him. Prompted by reasons that appear especially in the fourth chapter, Jonah went to Joppa, and took ship for Tarshish. God, by a miraculous interposition of his providence, arrested Jonah in his foolish and perverse attempt to flee from the path of duty, and when he was again cast on dry land he was willing enough to heed the Divine command, "Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." So Jonah entered the city and cried as he passed along: "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." The King and all the people put on sackcloth, heartily repented of their evil-doing and cried mightily unto God for deliverance. God heard, and spared the wicked city.

But now comes the surprising part of the record. When Jonah saw that God had spared the city, instead of destroying it, we are told that it "displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry." The remainder of the chapter, in which we find these words, is taken up in showing how God dealt with Jonah, in order to show him how unreasonable and foolish he had been in showing anger, wishing to die, &c., simply because he was disappointed, because the God who commanded him to go to Nineveh and who put words of prophecy in his mouth, saw proper to spare the city and reverse the prophecy. The case of Jonah furnishes some useful lessons to modern Christians, one or two of which we wish to notice here. We have, then—

1. A striking proof that the patriarchs and prophets of old were not perfect men; and that the Bible does not hide their faults. A great many people when they read the lives of distinguished men and women who figured in Bible history imagine that some of them, at least, were perfect characters, and that modern Christians cannot hope to attain unto the high standards of spiritual growth that they reached. But such a notion is manifestly incorrect, because they were indeed men with like passions and with the same weaknesses that we possess, and it is possible for a Christian now to become as strong spiritually as any of them. We cannot say we are glad that they made mistakes and committed blunders and sins before God, but since they did, we are glad that they are recorded. It is one proof that the Bible emanates from a just God, and we find in the record great encouragement to persevere ourselves in the battle against sin, as it attacks us from the world, the flesh and the devil, when we remember that some men distinguished in the Bible erred more or less grievously, and yet repented and found favor with God, and that God had not forsaken them, even when they had gone astray. God had not forsaken Jonah when he took ship for Tarshish, or when swallowed by the great fish.

2. But a second lesson impressed upon us by the case of Jonah, and to which we wish to call special attention is, that even a good man may, under some circumstances, be very blind and selfish. We do not know Jonah's age when God commanded him to "arise and go to Nineveh," but it is quite reasonable to suppose that he had both age and experience, and hence a man acquainted with the ways of righteousness and experienced in the service of God. God would hardly have sent any other kind of man on such an important mission. Be that as it may, he was a prophet of God, and His word came unto Jonah just as truly as unto Isaiah or Ezekiel. Yet we find this good man, this prophet of God, so blinded by passion, prejudice and intense selfishness, that he was willing to see a great city overthrown and destroyed, rather than have it said: "Aha! your prophecy has failed; where, now, is the word of your threatening? You are not such a pet with heaven as you thought you were."

There are plenty of people in this world who are ready to pin their faith to the coat of another man. When they come to decide the important question, "What church shall I join?" they reason thus: "Bro A. or sister X. is a member of this church, and a great many like them. They are good people; I know their piety by their life and walk; they are not mistaken; they must be right; I'll join that church." They seem to think that it is impossible for good people to be blinded by passion or prejudice, or to hold erroneous doctrines, and hence they must be right, and they follow them rather than Christ. Just here we Baptist think quite a serious mistake is made by our brethren of other creeds on the great command to be baptized. We are willing to admit that there are thousands of good men and women who have never been immersed; and yet, if the truth were known, the fact that a good many good people have never received immersion (or baptism) is largely the cause why so many others, when they come to obey this command, are content, as we honestly believe, to substitute something else for it. Does not the case of Jonah furnish all, interested on this and kindred subjects, much food for thought? Jonah's moral code became terribly mixed when God stayed His hand and did not destroy Nineveh. He verily thought the thing ought to be done, or else he ought to die. It mattered not though there was a whole city full of people calling for mercy; though there were thousands of dumb beasts clothed in sackcloth and calling with dumb lips for mercy; though there were more than six score thousand of little ones, not able to discern between their right hand and their left; yet destruction must come upon all, because Jonah had said it.

Ah, what blindness, what folly, and withal, what a want of mercy! Can you not see here, reader, the strongest proof of the folly of adopting a thing simply because some good man (as you suppose) holds it? Don't pin your faith to any man. In all matters of faith and practice, it is not what man says, but what God says. We take no pleasure in being so iconoclastic as thus to shatter your idols; but if any man, except Christ, is your idol, or even ideal, you are guilty of a species of idolatry, and the sooner your idol is shattered the better for you. It is indeed passing strange that with the open Bible before them, and God's commands couched in plain and simple terms, so many men, even men of intelligence, will not read and do just what God says, but will the rather run after other men and do as they say, because, forsooth, they think they are good men, and hence right. Jonah was a good man, but was he right in wishing that Nineveh should fall?

It would be interesting to know just how much of Jonah's conduct can be accounted for on the score of personal disappointment. Did he not expect "great things" for himself in the overthrow of Nineveh? Was a prophet utterly unselfish and free from unholy ambition? Nay, verily. Baruch was not (though the scribe of a prophet); Elijah was not, and certainly Jonah was not. It is a noticeable fact that those who depart more or less from the plain teachings of the Bible and the primitive simplicity of Christianity, multiply offices, emoluments, and temporal rewards, because they know what a mighty appeal these things are to the unsanctified ambition of men; and what powerful factors they are in retaining those who are considered talented and good men in their service. It is but natural that men thus rewarded with offices, for which there is really no scripture warrant, become the most zealous advocates of that system which enables them, through the smooth gradations of church authority, to hold such places as that coveted by Diotrephes of old. Hence we find, for instance, the Papal system sustained by a multiplicity of rewards, offices, emoluments, &c., as if faithfulness to Christ deserved temporal rewards and emoluments. And we fear that Rome has a good many imitators in this and other respects. We are to serve the Lord and labor for the upbuilding of His kingdom, because we love the Saviour and wish to see His Kingdom established.

Again, we say, good men may be mistaken; they may sometimes be intensely selfish, and what passes for zeal and piety may, at times, be but the outcome of a selfish desire to perpetuate a system, which owes much of its strength to the free distribution of temporal rewards and honors that satisfy the ambition, if they do not promote the piety of those who receive them.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Our Legislature, upon the whole, was above the average; it contained some men of eminent ability, and some very weak men, as is always the case. They entitled themselves to the credit of being a good working body. They did a great deal of work, and some wise legislation.

But we have some things against them; they entirely drained the treasury and appropriated more money than will be forthcoming for the next two years. They appropriated to everything for which money was asked, and, with few exceptions, all that was asked. But how could they help it? Every institution, educational, charitable, penal and patriotic, in the State asked for increased appropriations, and to obtain them they resorted to every species of lobbyism. There were a greater crowd of lobbyists and a greater variety of them than had ever been known here at any previous session. Among them were regular professionals, hired lobbyists, men and women, retiring officers, one of whom became so intensely interested that he could not leave, and was bound to remain through the entire session and several days after the Legislature had adjourned.

Our educational institutions are never satisfied; they continually cry, give, give. And still some of our people are constantly clamoring for new ones. Thoughful, sensible men ought to be able to see the result of this increasing multiplication of enterprises that can never be satisfied. These schools will continually come up for help at every recurring Legislature. Some will want more land, some new buildings, for this and that new emergency, some new departments, and so on. This is a natural result; it has always been so and will continue to be so. The more they get the more they need. For instance, the Chicago University with its $10,000,000 in property and endowment cries more lustily than ever for more. And the mammoth Leland Stanford University, of California, with its $20,000,000 endowment is not satisfied. And we may never expect to satisfy our numerous State schools. When one looks on calmly at the flowing current the impression is involuntarily forced into the mind that it is but a rushing flow towards paternalism, when every man, woman and child will expect to be a beneficiary upon the State's bounty.

Is there no help for this deplorable lobbying of our Legislatures? It ought to be talked against, written against, until public sentiment becomes strong enough to frown it down and drive it out of existence.

In our session just closed the lobby was so strong that every member was individually talked with on every individual measure; hence we cannot so severely censure the legislators for their liberal expenditures, as we should, nor as we do those selfish lobbyists, who, for their paltry pelf, would cause grievous burdens to be laid upon the honest, toiling citizenship of a whole State.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS

....Rev. W. B. Oliver begins his pastorate with the First church, Wilmington, this week.

....Rev. G. L. Merrell of Franklinville, N. C., and Miss Nannie Murchison of Gulf, N. C., were married the 7th inst.

....Rev. H. A. Bagby, of Suffolk, Va., has been called to the Venable Street Church, of Richmond, Va.

....Mrs. J. W. M. Williams, wife of Dr. J. W. M. Williams, of Baltimore, died on Sunday, the 5th inst.

....Brother John Cain, of Cypress Creek, writes: "After a trial of forty years, I find the RECORDER indispensable."

....Rev. J. M. White, of Edgefield, S. C., says: "I hope to see you in the summer, as I hope to spend a month in North Carolina then."

....Rev. G. W. Harman has accepted the care of Weldon and Sharon churches, and requests his correspondents to address him at Weldon, N. C.

....Rev. J. O. Alderman is making progress at Concord, and our cause is looking up there. We look for steady progress in our cause at Concord.

....Rev. D. L. Moody commenced his meeting in Charlotte, N. C., last Wednesday. Large audiences have attended the meetings. He goes to Wilmington next.

....Rev. Dr. T. H. Pritchard of Charlotte has received notification of his appointment as a member of the examining board of Crozer Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa.

....Rev. O. F. Flippo, D. D., has resigned the pastoral care of the First Baptist Church of Roanoke, Va. Dr. Flippo has gone to Florida, and will lecture for the Florida Chautauqua.

....There are only four Roman Catholics in the new United States Senate, viz., Murphy of New York, White of California, Caffrey of Louisiana, and Smith of New Jersey.—Western Recorder.

....An interesting revival is in progress at the Broad Street church in Winston, N. C. Converts are reported at every meeting. Pastor Broughton is aided by Rev. C. A. G. Thomas of Greensboro, N. C.

....The Centennial meetings will be held in Richmond, Va., the 18–20th of March. The programme begins with the meeting of the Centennial Committee of the Foreign Mission Board, on Saturday the 18th.

....The world will be disgusted into infidelity sooner by the silly ceremonies of the church of St Turveydrop than by the grammarless harangues of the zealous evangelists.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

....Rev. O. L. Stringfield, on Sunday night last, commenced a series of meetings at the West End Mission, Raleigh. A good audience greeted him at his first services, and he starts out with favorable prospects.

....We learn from the Monroe Enquirer that Rev. M. A. Adams, the new pastor of the Monroe Baptist church, has received a pounding from his people. As usual, it was gotten up at the instance of the sisters.

....We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to the Annual Public Debate of the Broadus Literary Society of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, in the parlors of Broadway Baptist Church, Louisville, Ky., Tuesday evening, March 14, 1893.

....Brother C. S. Walters, who had recently started out as Colporteur under the direction of the Tabernacle Church, died Thursday, the 9th inst., of pneumonia. Brother Walters was a licensed preacher. He leaves a wife and four children.

....Pastor P. T. Hale, of the South Side Church, Birmingham, Ala., aided Dr. R. J. Willingham, pastor First Church, Memphis, Tenn., in a meeting for twelve days, in which there were eighty-two additions to the church and a large number of professions of faith.

....The Anson and Richmond Associations met by delegates with the Wadesboro Baptist church Thursday, March 9th, and united the two Associations in one body, giving it the name of the Pee Dee Association. Further notice will be given next week.

....Brother W. C. Pulliam, of Woodburn, N. C., writes: "We are much pleased with Bro. Watson; think he will fill Bro. Lamberth's place in the pulpit and in our hearts. Was sorry to miss Bro. Caddell's in last RECORDER. I must say that I think your recent editorials just splendid."

....Rev. G. M. Webb of Randleman, N. C., writes: "I think the old RECORDER gets better and better. All quiet along the lines. The weather has been so bad up to now that the work on the old Deep river has been at a stand-still. Rev. Mr. Stringfield has promised to help me in a meeting at Ashboro the second Sunday in April."

....The Mt. Airy News says: "The Baptists here have organized a mission Sunday-school in the lower part of town, near Hamburg Mills. The school begins under very favorable auspices with sixty two members. It is intended at an early date to build a church and organize a congregation. A church will be a great convenience to members living in that part of town."

....Evangelical meetings have been in progress at the Baptist church since last Sunday morning. Rev. G. H. Church of Bryson City is conducting them. Mr. Church's methods and speech are very simple. He magnifies the word, preaches it in its simplicity, and relies on the Spirit, rather than upon any plan, for effects and results. So far there have been nine additions to the church through letters, reclamation, and confession. The meeting closed Tuesday night.—Gastonia Gazette, March 9.

....Doctor Henson of Chicago has been preaching in Boston, and he told of a man who gave his life to the study of Greek accents. Finding an accent his theory would not explain, he worried over it for weeks and then took it to an old scholar who showed that it was only a fly speck. Dr. Henson applied this story to some aspects of the "Higher Criticism." Had the man taken the accent to an "advanced" scholar, he could have learned that it was the work of a "redactor." These redactors are very convenient. Give us enough of them and we can make any document mean anything.—Western Recorder.

....We have read somewhere of neglected family prayer. An avaricious farmer, pressed with business, decided to forego family prayer. His good wife expostulated to no purpose. The men went to work one morning before breakfast, but no horn called them at the usual time. Angrily the husband went to the house and saw his wife quietly knitting, but no signs of breakfast. "What does this mean?" he said. "Why are not the men called?" "I thought you had no time to eat." "Do you think we can live without eating?" "As well as without praying," she said. "Well, get breakfast, and we will have prayers every morning." That was a very convincing sermon from the Christian wife. It takes severe rebuke sometimes to call men to duty.—Alabama Baptist.

Construction of Bro. J. E. White's Position.

Recent criticisms upon it have led me to re-read Bro. John E. White's first article on "The Call to Missionary Work." I am inclined to think that he has been misunderstood by some of his reviewers because of his failure to draw the line sharply between the duty of all Christians to "preach" as they have opportunity, and the duty of some to give themselves entirely to the work of the ministry.

If I understand him aright, there are three main points in his article.

First. "Let him that heareth say, Come." "The propagation of the gospel is left, not to a few, but to all the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ. According to the measure of grace intrusted to him by the Holy Spirit, each man is bound to minister in his day and generation, both to the church and among unbelievers."

Second. A protest against any "miraculous" element in a call to the work of a bishop. Bro. White says that the call is the work of the Holy Spirit, but urges that the Spirit does not override, but co operates with the ordinary processes of intellectual action. He does not violate, but utilizes the laws of our mental and spiritual constitution. And incidentally, Bro. White protests against the idea that a bishop is hedged in with any peculiar sacerdotal divinity.

Third. When a man has once consecrated himself, under the leading of the spirit of God, to the full work of the ministry, he is to decide where God would have him labor, not from any "miraculous" disclosure of the divine will, but from the exercise of enlightened conscience and judgment. The Holy Spirit will lead, but it will do so by making clear a course of study. This will reveal itself in consciousness. At the last analysis, we can only say: "Bro. Yates felt that it was his duty to go to China." "Bro. Brown feels it to be his duty to remain in Winston." "Dr. Royall felt that it was his duty to teach as well as preach," &c. Where the sense of duty is resisted or collides violently with natural inclination, the temperature of feeling will be raised, and there will be more of a struggle than when one feels that duty calls him along the line of least resistance.

If the above represents fully Bro. White's views, I agree with him, and think that all the brethren will do so. I am not sorry that he has opened the question. It is an important one, and discussion can do no harm. The line between Faith and Fanaticism is, in some cases, very narrow. In order not to overpass it, there is needed careful and reverent study of God's word, and close scrutiny of the phenomena of human nature and actual Christian experience.

Bro. Pace Replies to Bro. White.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Bro. J. E. White claims that Bro. Andrews and myself "did not deal fairly with his article," because we left out the phrase, "with its attendant theatricals of seasons, visions," &c. Now let us look at the whole sentence and see if we have been unfair. The sentence is: "And the sooner we rid ourselves of the other and companion error of a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry, with its attendant theatricals of seasons, visions and visitations of angels, nearer will we accord with truth, Scripture and common sense, and the sooner will the Master be commended to all hearts." Bro. White condemns a belief in "a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry" and calls it an "error." He also uses the phrase, "with its attendant theatricals of seasons, visions and visitations of angels" as accompanying errors. I do not believe it is an "error" to believe in "a personal and miraculous interposition of God in the calling of men into the ministry," but I do believe it is an "error" in these days, to believe in "theatricals of seasons, visions and visitations of angels." That is the reason why I did not use that phrase in my article.

Bro. White says: "If Bro. Pace does not believe in the "audible voice and miraculous interposition, it is difficult for an ordinary mind to see the appositeness of his citation of Moses and the Bush, Samuel and Jonah as scriptural proof that God does now call men into the ministry by personal and miraculous interposition." The brother quotes me wrong in the above quotation. In my article I did not connect "audible voice" with "miraculous interposition." The brother will see by referring to my article that I was proving that God does call men into the ministry by a personal and miraculous interposition. Consider my question in my other article: "Is it not 'a miraculous interposition of God' that causes men to live a life of self-denial, and often a life of poverty for the sake of the gospel?" I do contend in the language of the editor: "That kind of work was so important in Christ's time that he called and specially trained men to do it. It is just as important now; and hence he calls men to do that work now by exerting upon them a spiritual influence not exerted upon those not thus called, though they may be converted. Bro. White says: "And I still believe that the call to do the 'official' work is determined by the man's own judgment, enlightened by impressions and convictions of his fitness and talents." The man who determines by his "own judgment" that he has the "talent and fitness" to preach the gospel certainly has an exalted opinion of himself. "Every one that exalteth himself shall be abased." It does seem to me that any man having a true conception of the weakness of human nature and the responsibility of preaching the gospel, is bound to feel "Who is sufficient for these things?" 2 Cor. 2:15–18. To enter the "official work of the ministry" is not determined by "a man's own judgment of his fitness and talent," but the Spirit of the Lord decides for him, and he only has to yield to the powerful influence of the Spirit. And then he is reminded that "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." If our Bro. White is right in his interposition of Acts, eighth chapter, that all the members of the church at Jerusalem preached "publicly," then he has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that women have a right to preach "publicly from pulpit or rostrum the word of salvation." Does it mean that all the members were "scattered abroad?" or does it mean that just the "official" part of the membership? The third verse shows that the "unofficial," or those who did not preach were at their homes until Saul committed them to prison. "As for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison." Acts 8:3. The fourth verse—"Therefore they that were scattered abroad (the official class) went everywhere preaching the word." The words "Therefore they that were scattered abroad" imply a part of the membership, do they not?

Bro. White says: "Even Stephen and Philip, who not only preached but baptised, were not ordained to preach but to 'serve tables' as deacons." Brother, please tell us where is it recorded in the Bible that Stephen "baptized?" How does the brother know that Philip was not ordained to the gospel ministry? We have men now in the ministry who were ordained first as deacons, and then afterwards to the gospel ministry.

Rev. Dr. —— who is one of the most prominent Baptist ministers of the State wrote to me to "Stand fast you are on the solid rock—God's word."

If Rev. Dr. ——, the editor of the RECORDER, T. S. Andrews, and myself are all wrong, I do most earnestly insist that the brethren assist Bro. White in removing the "mental hallucinations" from our minds.

J. R. PACE.

Whitakers, March 7, 1893.

Rev. J. T. Jenkins of Wilmington, N. C., has commenced the publication of a monthly church paper, called the Brooklyn Baptist, a copy of which is before us.

To the Missionary Society of the C. B. F. Institute.

My Dear Young Friends:—How I wish I knew you, each and all! I do not feel, however, that I am writing to entire strangers; a few of you know me personally; I am sure that you all possess, in common with me, a genuine love for the dear old Institute; and many of us have the still closer bond of love and service for a common Lord and Master.

As I write this evening, you do not seem far away, and I do hope that, in this short letter, I may be able to bring the people and the work in this Eastern land a little nearer to you. I remember that, as a child, I thought all the heathen must live in a tropical climate—the idea being due, I suppose, to having read and heard of mission work in India and Burmah only. If any of you have a similar idea, you would soon have it dispelled could you be in Shanghai now. We are having the coldest weather recorded within the last twenty years. This morning the mercury indicated eight degrees above zero. I have kept the coal piled on the grate in my room all day, and yet the temperature in that part of the room most distant from the grate, has not reached forty degrees and I have had to resort to various and sundry Yankee devices to keep my little ones from straying away from the warmth of the fire. It is severe weather for the Chinese; they have no fires in their dwellings, and the great majority of their homes can boast of nothing better than a dirt floor, while the wind penetrates through many a crack and crevice in the walls. They pile on their wadded garments until you wonder how they ever manage to use their hands and feet. Our native pastor, who is a very spare man, looks as if he might weigh about 200. Mr. Tatum's personal teacher has not been here for four days, the cold being to his mind quite sufficient excuse for his non appearance.

Notwithstanding the severity of the weather, there has been a remarkably good attendance of our native Christians at a series of revival and evangelistic meetings, which are now being held, between one and two hundred being present at each service. These meetings were begun some ten days ago and are to continue, once or twice a day, for at least a month. The missionaries and native Christians meet first for three quarters of an hour of prayer and praise; then, the doors are thrown open for the heathen public. Several hymns are sung. It would do you good to hear these native Christians sing with fervor,

"O happy day that fixed my choice,
On thee, my Saviour and my God," and

"I do believe, I must believe That Jesus died for me."

Then several speakers, sometimes a foreigner, sometimes a native, present as simple as possible the gospel message. God is blessing this effort; our native believers have been revived and some of the heathen have professed faith in Christ. These meetings are held in different localities that as large a number as possible may be reached.

Since I last wrote you, there have been many changes in our mission. Mr. and Mrs. Herring went home to America, and then so soon came the sad, sad news of dear Mrs. Herring's death. It was she who received me into her home, when I first came to Shanghai, and during our association together, she bound me to her by continual acts of love and kindness. Her death has brought grief to all our hearts, but "we sorrow not as those who have no hope." It is blessed to know we shall meet her—not in this land of continual parting, but where good byes are unknown. We feel confident, too, that the Lord of the harvest will send laborers to take up and continue the work from which he saw fit to release her.

In November, Mr. and Mrs. Bryan came from Chinkiang to be associated with us in the Shanghai work. They came as old friends, and we were glad to welcome them as our fellow-laborers, and trust that God will bless our united efforts to hasten the coming of his kingdom.

Mrs. Yates has left us for a year's sojourn in America. How we do and shall miss her cheerful visits and her helpful counsel! I trust it may be the good fortune of some of you to meet her while she is in the Old North State.

Since Mr. Bryan came, we have been able to enlarge our work somewhat, and have opened a street chapel at the East Gate of the city. There are many who listen attentively to the gospel message, and we do hope that some who hear, yea, many may believe to the saving of their souls. We plant and water, but it is God who must give the increase. The waiting seems long at times, and we are prone to forget the promise that "in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

My dear young friends, I wish you could realize how much we missionaries need your prayers. Do pray for us, and pray in faith. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Do you want to know what to pray for? Pray that God may give us missionaries patience; that he will keep us in daily and hourly touch with himself; that the cold, dead mass of heathenism may not paralyze our spiritual energies; and pray that the Holy Spirit may convince these Chinese men and women, boys and girls, that they are sinners and that Jesus Christ says to them, "Come unto me * * * and I will give you rest." Oh, how these poor, blinded, heart-sick and hopeless ones do need rest! and need it all the more because they do not realize that spiritually they are "wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked."

Then, do not forget the native Christians. They have so much to contend with that it does not seem strange that they sometimes get cold-hearted. One of our Christians has just lost a much-needed situation, simply because he refused to work on the Lord's day. It costs the Chinese something to follow the Master.

My own work at present is much circumscribed by home duties. I have charge of one day school, am trying to teach the women among our membership in the Sunday-school, and have begun a little work among the heathen women at the East Gate. My work seems very small and insignificant to me, but it is all my home duties will admit of, and so I try to be content and hope that the future may bring enlarged opportunities for usefulness.

There is much more I would like to write about, but my letter is getting long, and I do not want to weary you. I should so delight to hear from the Institute occasionally. If any of you find time to write me a letter, you may be sure it will be appreciated.

With Christian love,

ALICE M. TATUM.

How is This?

Editor Recorder:—In the New York Mail and Express of March 1st I see the following telegram:—

"TO RESCUE A MISSIONARY.

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 28.—Rev. W. T. D. Clemm, at the meeting of the Methodist Annual Conference, which will begin to-morrow at Hagerstown, will ask for the appointment of a committee to visit President-elect Cleveland, Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Satolli, and urge them to use their influence in behalf of Rev. Mr. Nelson, a Methodist missionary, now imprisoned in Brazil. His arrest and imprisonment were caused, it is said, by statements in his sermons concerning the patron saint of Brazil, which were offensive to the authorities."

To a lawyer, this is a queer proceeding to effect the release of an American citizen unjustly imprisoned. I know Cleveland is President, Gibbons is a Cardinal Prince of the Romish church, and Satolli is the "Little American Pope" from Italy. But how do Gibbons' and Satolli's names become connected with Mr. Cleveland's? How has it become necessary that these two Roman Catholic hierarchs must be visited by a committee of Methodist ministers to get their brother minister out of a Brazilian jail? Can you turn on any light? and by so doing oblige

A METHODIST.

We have no light on the subject.—ED

From Smyrna, N. C.

Dear Recorder:—I took charge of this field the first of October and found the churches in good trim under the excellent management of Rev. B. W. Spilman, now of the Theological Seminary at Louisville. His earnest labors of love will not be lost on the desert air, but will bring forth a hundred fold to the glory of God. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

The church at Smyrna is progressing finely. We contemplate enlarging the house in order to accommodate the people.

One hopeful feature of the work here is that nearly everybody takes a deal of interest in religious worship. "They will go to meetin'."

The good brethren just across "Jarott's Bay" (Davis' Shore) is falling in line with the great mission movement as well as other departments of church work.

Some of the most refreshing meetings that we have at Smyrna and Davis' Store is on Sunday night at our monthly missionary meetings, when we talk about the various fields of the world. We have these meetings as regular as the sun rises and sets. We are all poor people down on the coast, but each member of the Society pays ten cents per month; besides we have regular collections. The people are learning that they can worship God as well by giving money as we can by singing or preaching.

We have a noble band of Christians at Woodville (five miles from Beaufort), who are up with the times on church work. But like the Missionary Baptist churches on this coast, they have a great many isms to fight.

We are trying to organize and build a Baptist church at Marshalberg, a town four miles northwest of Cape Lookout. The Baptists as this point are very weak, and it will be a hard struggle to build a house. They have a great deal of faith. But they have learnt that faith without works is dead, being alone in building a house for God.

A Baptist church is needed at Hunting Quarters, twelve miles east of Smyrna. We are trying to lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes down here in Carteret. Brethren, the fields are white unto harvest. The Baptists of the State have neglected this field so long that the Northern and the M. E. Church, South, have four churches to our one. The Baptists have let the Methodists get the biggest share of the persimmons. The people in general prefer to be Missionary, but before the Baptists got their eyes open to this field, a great many of the people fell in line with the good Methodist brethren. But there is a heritage here yet for the Baptists.

Our good brother, Rev. H. C. Moore, and myself have been exchanging pulpits with the good Methodist brethren in order to get the people in harmony with each other and closer to God. The results were good.

Cordially yours,

B. H. MATTHEWS.

Ministerial Education.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I am an old, uneducated fogy of a preacher, just ready to be laid upon the shelf. Nevertheless, I think I am a true friend to ministerial education. I have heard all sorts of ideas advanced about the education of preachers. Some say it gives them the big head, and makes them lazy; and others say they use such high language and big words that common people can't understand them; while still others say that educated preachers depend too much upon their education and ignore the teachings of the Spirit.

As to the first objection, I consider a man's education lamentably incomplete, while he is afflicted with either the big head or laziness. And secondly, that preacher that uses such language that the people can't understand it, is less than half educated, and ought to be sent to school a long time to a teacher whose business it is to teach human littleness and plainness. Dr. Broadus is undoubtedly an educated man, and when I heard him preach, I was satisfied that the scholarly and refined were edified and instructed; while the whole sermon was so very plain that I thought surely no illiterate darkey could fail to understand it. Thirdly, the man who would be truly and properly educated should learn early in life what a fool he is, and how helpless and sinful he is. Having learned this, it will not be difficult for him to recognize his dependence upon the Holy Spirit.

I advocate that kind of education that will make the preacher wiser, more humble, better and plainer than he otherwise possibly could be. I am glad to say that this is the very type of preachers that come out of Wake Forest and our Seminary with very few exceptions. Surely no one but an incorrigible ignoramus will dare to oppose the education I have endeavored to describe. This is an age of progression and of literary and intellectual development with a sad neglect of heart culture; consequently, the enemies of Christ oppose us with more force than in former years. Hence, the necessity of a ministry competent to the task before us. God has given us our talents to improve them. Awful indeed will be the reckoning. The duty and privilege of helping our young preachers at the College and in the Seminary is of paramount importance. It should be promptly attended to even at a great sacrifice. We owe this to those struggling young men, to ourselves, to our country, and to the precious cause they propose to be the standard bearers of.

A Word to Bro. McLendon.

Dear Recorder—For the benefit of Bro. McLendon let me say that I had no thought of pitting Paul against Christ. I have never thought or designedly intimated that there was or could be any conflict between them. I merely said that if any one suggested that Paul provided any way contrary to Christ's way, that Christ must be the pre eminent authority for me. Thereby meaning only that disposition was to follow Him in all things. I do not believe that Paul provided any way that limited the operation of God's Holy Spirit to any favored class in bidding his followers to go and preach salvation. I believe in the fear of God that the command spoken then in the Word and now by the spirit, is to all converted followers, some through their fitness as prescribed by Paul in I Timothy, 3: 1, 2, to do the official work, and all others to do the plain, simple preaching of the Gospel, no matter where, and to Bro. McLeod say, that however much I might value "six or twelve months" under Dr. Broadus in theology, I do not need even the infinitesimal part of a month there to enable me to read with some degree of intelligence the clear and undisputed account in the New Testament of the spirit and convictions which animated the followers of Christ and which led them to preach the word everywhere and at all opportunities.

Yours,

JNO. E. WHITE.

What Paul Wrote.

In Galations, 6: 2, Paul says: "Bear ye one another's burdens." This thing of bearing one another's burdens is a matter that Christians would do well to give more attention to, and we fear that it is often overlooked. I would like to call the attention of my brethren and sisters to the fact that one excellent way by which they can comply with this important command is to give of their means to lighten the burdens that press upon our aged and needy ministers, or the widows of those that are dead. We are grateful for the contributions received since the meeting of our State Convention. We are pleased to notice that a large number of our churches and pastors are becoming interested in our work. We are especially pleased to notice that some of our godly women are taking hold of it. Yet we are sorry to say that the amounts received are not sufficient to meet our current expenses. We have had but one board meeting since the Convention.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us hear from you. Christ will say to those on hand on "that day," "I was hungry, and ye gave me meat." We can be sure that we are fulfilling this scripture when we give to feed Christ's aged and needy veterans, at the humble homes where they abide, waiting for their summons to that country where they "hunger no more."

Aid Solicited.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—The Baptist Church here, after worshiping in the house built during the pastorate of Rev. A. M. Poindexter, about fifty years ago, have felt the necessity of a new and more commodious house of worship, and are working to accomplish it. Having commenced our house last summer, we are working to get in it this summer. We have decided to make the effort to put in memorial windows of Revs. A. M. Poindexter and William A. Tyree, two faithful pastors, who rest now from their labors. We cannot accomplish this without aid, therefore appeal to the friends and admirers of these two noble brethren to assist us in this tribute of love. Such a tribute bespeaks their worth and the high esteem in which they were held by those who knew them. Will you help us to accomplish this laudable undertaking? The beauty of the memorial will be in proportion to the amount received.

Send contributions to the undersigned at Houston, Halifax county, Va.

High Point Female College.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Please allow me space to say that High Point Female College is in excellent working order and that there will be three months of the present session from the 28th inst. to the close, June the 20th.

Special classes will be arranged for any who may enter, and specially low prices will be given to all that may come.

Facilities for special instruction to teachers are excellent, while Music, Art, Elocution and Physical Culture are taught by the very best teachers.

The facilities for practice and instruction are most excellent.

This scholastic year closes June 20th, which gives three months from March 28th.

Write to me for the prices, which you will find very low.

Yours fraternally,

J. N. STALLINGS.

Rev. M. A. Adams.

To the Jonesboro Baptist church:—Your committee appointed for that purpose beg leave to submit the following report:

Whereas, Rev. M. A. Adams has accepted a call as pastor of the Baptist church at Monroe, N. C., thereby declining the indefinite call to remain pastor of the Jonesboro Baptist church, which he has so faithfully served since January, 1892; therefore

Resolved, That we commend Bro. Adams to the people of Monroe, as a worthy and faithful minister of the Lord Jesus Christ, and wish him abundant success wherever his lot may be cast. This token of our esteem we place on record, without the knowledge of Bro. Adams, directing the Clerk of the church to certify a copy of the same to Bro. Adams, and also to the Baptist and Reflector and BIBLICAL RECORDER for publication.

Eastern Baptist Sunday-school Association.

The next annual session of the Eastern Baptist Sunday-school Association will be held at Warsaw on Friday, Saturday and 5th Sunday, in April. Every Baptist Sunday-school within the bounds of the Eastern Association is cordially invited to send delegates and will receive a hearty welcome by the Warsaw people. The two Unions have adjourned over for that purpose.

Program will be duly announced. We expect a good time. Come.

The North Carolina exhibit at the World's Fair will be very handsomely and effectively "installed," as the slang is. The exhibition will occupy 7,100 feet of floor space, and it will cost $15,000 to install it. The showcases and all the wood-work will be of the most beautiful kind; of quarter-sawed oak, hand-carved and polished to the highest degree. All the designs are special and have been approved by the World's Fair authorities. There is space in five buildings in which this State makes displays. The ores, minerals and gems will be beautifully shown and the State has never had such fine specimens. The display along this line, as indeed along all the others, will surprise all North Carolinians. It will show them what money, effort and taste can and will do. No North Carolinian who goes to the World's Fair will be otherwise than gratified at the show his State makes. In 1876 the question was often heard, "Where is the North Carolina exhibit?" The positions assigned the State in the various departments are prominent and entirely satisfactory.—From Raleigh letter in Wilmington Messenger.

Literary.

Reasons for Believing in Christianity. Addressed to Busy People. A course of lectures delivered at St. Paul's cathedral, at the request of the dean and chapter, by the Rev. C. A. Row, M.A., Prebendary of St. Paul's and Bampton Lecturer. [New York: Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House.] New edition: price, 25 cents.

This book deserves a review rather than a mere notice, which is all, however, our space will allow. We do not hesitate to pronounce it the strongest presentation of the claims of Christianity that this age, so fruitful in strong books, has produced. Strong, not merely in the arguments advanced, but in the way in which they are put.

The author is not writing for learned scholars, but for those persons of practical common sense who, not having leisure to pursue original investigations, would have their faith based on rational conviction, and are unwilling to let others do their thinking for them. Those desiring a fuller and more scientific discussion of the subject are referred to the author's Bampton lectures, of which this little book may be termed a popular edition. Any one reading it will be benefited, and more ready to give an answer to him that asketh a reason for the hope that is within him. Buy it, read it, and then if you have a friend who is not a believer ask him to read it also. This new edition is well printed and exceedingly cheap in price, being only 25 cents per copy.

The principal appropriations made by the Legislature for the various public institutions and other appropriations were as follows: Insane Asylum, Western, $96,000; Raleigh, $80,000; Eastern, $42,000, total, $218,000; State University, $20,000 regular; $10,000 for repairs and improvements; Deaf and Dumb institution, $40,000 regular; institution for the Blind, $40,000 and $5,000 for improvements; Agricultural and Mechanical College, white, $17,500; colored, $7,500; Greensboro Normal and Industrial School, $12,500 regular; $4,500 to pay half the debt; colored normal schools, $6,000; normal school at Cullowhee, white, $1,500; colored normal school at Durham, $1,200; to establish a quarantine station at the mouth of the Cape Fear, $20,000; Confederate monument, $10,000; to pay for the purchase of the steamer Lillie, $6,500; to put vault in Treasurer's office, $2,500; colored orphan asylum at Oxford, $2,900; for finishing and furnishing the Governor's Mansion, $4,000. The act of the General Assembly of 1891 appropriating $35,000 to the World's Fair was ratified, but no new appropriation was made.

Letter from Blaine, N. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Please allow me space in the dear old RECORDER to say a few things. We see much in the RECORDER that is cheering, and some things that make us feel sad; the news from the White House, from the legislative halls, from city, town and village, and including the country churches. We see confusion, upheaval and division. Then we begin to search for the cause, and we find that it is the lack of more love and sympathy for suffering humanity, and in view of all this we are made to wonder why it is that God continues to pour out his blessings upon such a rebellious people. Oh yes, he tells us that he loves his own, and will love them to the end; and where there are two or three gathered together in his name that he will be in their midst to own and bless. Again he says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." Who are his sheep? says one. The faithful followers of Christ. Show me one. Brother A or sister B. How do you know that they are his? Because the life they are living is laid down in the New Testament. Christ sets forth a pattern of a model Christian, and if you want to know who are Christians know the New Testament. Well, the report says he has enemies. How is it? It is so; because the New Testament tells us that he would be hated if he lived a godly life. Here are some of the things that the world dislike him for: He says that nothing but heartfelt religion will do; that this one-seventh professed Christians or Sunday religion won't do; that a true penitent baptized believer in Christ has a sure promise; that evangelical repentance effect a deep sorrow for sin, even unto death to sin and a newness to life; that the Christian faith consists in living a new, practical life, in accordance with Christ's precepts and examples laid down in the New Testament; that scriptural baptism is the immersion of a penitent believer in water; that those who fail to feel these changes and to perform these duties shall fall short of the promises in God's word; that the sin of omission is a heinous sin; he who fails to attend his or her church meeting without a scriptural excuse proves non Christian, or refuse to pay their quota as the Lord hath prospered them in paying their pastor or missions proves non-Christian; or to give one-tenth of a certain income to the Lord's cause and the remaining nine-tenths to the whiskey cause, keeping a hidden jug for breakfast, dinner and supper drink, proves non-Christian; or to have anything to do with the making, buying or selling, or giving it to little children, training them up to be drunkards, proves non Caristian; and it cannot be denied that such is the condition among church members. He who knows these things to be so is looking out every day for new troubles. If it were not for the biblical knowledge and incentive movements he would surely faint.

Brethren in Christ, are we grateful enough to God for the many blessings we receive from the Lord daily on every hand and in so many ways? Think about so many rich gospel sermons we hear through the RECORDER, and the able arguments on the Scripture that is so much needed all over this land, receiving every week a letter of instruction from the brethren here and there, telling us what they are doing, and what the Lord is doing for them—tell us things that we could not know otherwise. What a blessing this is. Let us as we go along thank the Lord for the RECORDER, and for the good that is being done through it, and for the faithful editor that is trying to cram every column full of something good. How could we get along without it, or take it and not pay for it? God bless the RECORDER.

G. W. HENDERSON.

Further Testimony as to the Work in Cuba.

LETTER FROM REV. DR. R. B. MONTGOMERY, WHO BAPTIZED DIAZ.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Teh years ago last October I was privileged to baptize Miss Minnie Diaz, then a member of my Sunday-school. One month later, November 26th, I baptized Alberto J. Diaz, her brother, now the apostle to Cuba. Their experiences of the saving grace of God, though told in very broken English, were most satisfactory to all who heard them. They were lovingly received into fellowship.

Shortly after his baptism, Bro. Diaz desired to return to Cuba. Not more earnestly did Paul desire and pray for the salvation of his brethren after the flesh than did Bro. Diaz those of his native land. The truest, holiest, patriot is he who prays for and seeks to bestow the greatest good, the most lasting good, to the land of his birth. Such a patriot was Diaz, such a patriot is Diaz. He is willing "to spend and be spent" in the uplifting of his own people into the light and liberty of Jesus Christ.

As a church we have always had a deep and abiding interest in Bro. Diaz and his work. We have rejoiced at every evidence of the presence and power of the Master with him. We have greedily read all the news concerning him and his work. So deeply have we been impressed with his work that we have had a large missionary organization of young people in our church known as "The Diaz Mission Association," for years. Diaz has been a household word among us.

But much as we have heard and read, our late visit revealed the fact that "the half had not been told." How modest, how very modest, all the reports of our brother have been. When seen, how much mightier the work than we had ever dreamed possible. I endorse the assertion that no mission since Pentecostal day has made more rapid progress, or has created a deeper and profounder impression in any land than has that of the Diaz mission in Cuba. Not more astonished was Barnabas at what he saw of "the grace of God" in Antioch than was the American delegation at what they saw in Havana. The one feeling pervading that delegation was: "Thou art the God that doest wonders: thou hast declared thy strength amongst thy people."

And what honor God has heaped upon the heads of the Southern Baptists in this work! That magnificent house in the very heart of Havana, purchased and paid for by them, is one of the most far seeing, far-reaching acts. It has given position, influence, and power to the Baptists on that island as would otherwise have been impossible. Too often Baptists have erred, blundered, acted "penny wise and pound foolish" in building insignificant houses in obscure places; but in this case wisdom and enterprise have been to the front. That magnificent building, with its crowded audiences, its apostolic preacher and leader, commands the attention of a million and a half of Cuban people, and is a center from which is sounding out the word of the Lord, which is waking up the old city of Havana from the slumber of centuries, and echoing among the lonely hills and vales of the whole island of Cuba. How manifestly the whole work is of God!

Allow me, as an humble representative from the North, who, in company with the worthy secretaries, wise editors, an honored governor, consecrated pastors, and godly men and women of the Southern churches, saw the wonderful work of God in Cuba, to thank God for such men, such women, and such work.

Brooklyn, Feb. 23, 1893.

Need of Good Air.

Some of us keep our houses much too warm, and what is worse, sit in rooms in which there is no arrangement for admitting fresh air. We are careful to "list" our doors and windows that no crack may be left for the cold to come through. I am always glad to see plants thriving in a sitting-room, for then I know there must be good air for human beings to breathe. You cannot make potted plants grow well in a close room. I am inclined to think that more lives are lost for want of draughts in a room than are lost because of colds caused by draughts. We are often "shivery" and "chilly" when we have been too long in a hot, close room. We are starving for oxygen, and a brisk walk out of doors will furnish the blood with what it needs—good temper, too, is quite dependent on good air. —Ladies' Home Journal.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

"Paradise" for Sale.

This desirable place is in sight of the ocean and enjoys the delightful sea breeze; five miles from Morehead City, N. C.; bounded on the South by Bogue Sound, on the North by Newport river, both navigable streams; and lawful fences. The Atlantic and North Carolina railroad runs through the centre of the farm and in full view of the residence, with a station near by. The water pure and healthy. The farm contains several different kinds of soil and is adapted to any kind of crops grown in the State. Game, fish, clams, oysters, escallops, etc., are abundant. This place is adapted to trucking, fishing, stock raising, or any other occupation one can follow in the country. "Paradise" contains about five hundred acres, and can be bought for three thousand dollars. This is a rare chance to get a place with so many advantages and no disadvantages, and at so low a price. Our Next-Door Neighbor, Mexico.

The rippling waters of the Rio Grande separate Mexico from our own fair land.

No ocean billows roll between us and them; but railways—strong arms of union—connect our capitals.

Truly these are our neighbors, and we should be interested in them, and desire to know more about their country, climate and people.

Mexico is about one-fourth as large as the United States, and possesses every variety of soil from the desert wastes of the north, and the barren hillsides of the east and west, to the inexhaustibly fertile plains of the valley of Mexico. By no country in the world is she surpassed for variety of climate, beauty of scenery and abundant resources.

She is the leading silver producing country in the world; also stands front rank in yielding precious woods and gems, tobacco and coffee.

Mexicans are of a mixed-blooded race, varying in color from black, through every shade of brown to white. Some of them speak English and French.

Probably six million of them have never looked inside of a Bible. Sunday is the Devil's day. The people go to mass in the morning and afterwards attend theaters, bull-fights, chicken fights, and profane God's holy law.

Crosses, rosaries and images are their idols. The priests sell the sacrament, and raffle for the release of the souls from purgatory. Blasphemous Romanism is the appalling cobweb which the gaudy spider, Rome, has spun over their hearts, minds and temple doors, which shrouds the people in awful night and excludes the light, the only light, the beautiful light of God.

Are our lamps trimmed and burning? Are we not sleeping? Let us arise, fill our vessels with oil—our hearts with love. Trim our lamps, place them on candle sticks (of prayer) that we may reflect the light of the Sun of Righteousness upon our neighbors in Mexico. "Ye are the light of the world." Eleven millions of our neighbors have fallen by the wayside. They need spiritual wine and oil for their wounds.

Let no cramped soul say "Am I my brother's keeper?" Shall we be Levites and priests, or good Samaritans?

Mr. McCormick says, "Nine shepherds to a million sheep is how we stand to day. No pent up Utica this! Will you not "come"?

God promised Israel all the land they could measure off with their feet. The presence of the foot was the proof of faith. May he give us faith to measure off the goodly land of Mexico for Christ and his church.

Mexico needs our money and our prayers. "Money without prayer is dross; prayer without giving is mockery." Let us give as God has prospered us, and pray without ceasing. MRS. LILA D. HENRY.

Prayer for the Centennial Effort.

At the suggestion of Miss Fannie Heck, President of Woman's Missionary Union, the request goes forth to all Woman's Mission Societies that the March meetings be characterized as seasons of special prayer for the success of the Centennial collections.

The appeal of the Secretary, W. M. U., has been read throughout the South, stating the exact condition of the home and foreign board treasuries to dates of January 1st and 15th. The summary is here repeated for easy reference: The home board asks for the year for its Centennial and regular work, $375,000; in eight months it has received $89,726. At this pace, will $235,000 be collected in four months? The foreign board asks for its regular and Centennial work $365,000. In eight and a half months, it reports $77,707. At this same pace, we ask again, will the foreign board receive $288,000 in three and a half months!

Unless the men and women composing the churches represented by the Southern Baptist Convention are quickened by the spirit of God to appreciate the present position of affairs, and to determine, like the discouraged Jews of Nehemiah's day, to arise and build each man his part of the wall, we shall inevitably meet a dismal failure at the end of the year's hopes. The failure will not only mean a loss of the actual money to the Boards, with which to prosecute the work so greatly needed in both departments—this will indeed be a great loss, but a greater is involved. It means that the largest body of Baptists in the world, though proposing to itself to do the smallest thing as the Centennial's memorial, will quietly and ignominiously consent to descend still lower and fail of their low aim. It means more—it inaugurates the next hundred years of missions with a humiliating defeat, which will cast its baleful shadow upon subsequnt endeavors, fortifying the logic of obstructionists to future efforts, by this signal and notorious failure.

Joshua, Zerubbabel, Haggai, Zachariah and Nehemiah found out where to seek help in the face of threatened disasters possibly not more momentous than ours. Let the Sunday-school lessons of the present quarter speak to us and send us to God in earnest prayer for His guidance and assistance, and to work with the consciousness of His presence with his directed workers. Nehemiah succeeded in building the walls of Jerusalem in fifty-two days. We have about the same time in which to complete the Centennial fund. ALICE ARMSTRONG.

The Opinion of the Boxes.

The Missionary Society was appointed to meet on Thursday afternoon at Mrs. Lovell's. The ladies were all requested to bring their thankful boxes, and the contents would be given for increasing the Centennial fund for Foreign Missions. "We have been blessed in so many ways during the year," said the President, "that I am sure your boxes must be well filled."

Thursday proved to be a charming day, and by five o'clock the pretty parlors at Mrs. Lovell's were quite filled with happy ladies, who were sewing a little and chatting a great deal. In the dressing-rooms upstairs the boxes were laid upon bureaus and tables until the owners should open them after supper.

On each was the motto, "Giving thanks for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

After the last lady had laid aside her wraps and gone downstairs there was a little jingling and clinking heard in one of the boxes.

"Well," said a coin, hitting his neighbor, "I'll be glad to get out of this prison, I was the first one put into this box, and I'd be glad to be the first one out."

"Why were you dropped in?" asked a voice, with a merry twinkle of silver, from the table. "I've been making quite a study of this subject of thankfulness, and I'd like to know what your owner was thankful for."

"Oh, my mistress was so thankful that she hadn't spoiled her angel-cake in the baking!" replied the coin.

"Then she's a cook, is she?"

"No, indeed!" was the indignant reply.

"She's a lady of fashion and wealth, but didn't want to waste a dozen eggs for nothing."

"Are there many of you in there?" asked another box.

"Fifty or sixty of us, I should think," replied the coin, crossly. "What makes you ask so many questions?"

"Oh, no reason in particular—only I was anxious to know how many blessings a 'lady of fashion and wealth' had received during the year," replied the box, with a pleasant, mild jingle in its tone.

"Well, how did you come into your box?" asked the coin, somewhat mollified by the pleasant voice.

"I was dropped in first, because my sweet little mistress had a loving letter from a friend who, she was afraid, had forgotten her. We are almost bending each other out of shape, we're so full in here."

"What does your owner find to be so thankful for?" asked a sulky voice from the other end of the bureau.

"Oh, she's thankful for a bright day, she's grateful for a pleasant word, she is thankful for a good sermon, she's glad for all the good thoughts she gets in prayer-meeting, and," jingling softly, "she's so thankful that she is a child of God, that she keeps dropping us in."

"Well, now, isn't that carrying it a little too far?" asked the sulky voice. "My owner is thankful for practical benefits, of course. She dropped in a dime when she was rescued from a railroad accident, and she put in a quarter when her lawyer recovered ten thousand dollars for damages."

"She did!" said a merry chorus of voices with a sarcastic ring; "do you think she'll miss it?"

"Hush! hush!" cried a pleasant voice. "I am almost choked in here, but I'll stay here forever if you are going to quarrel."

"Why don't you tinkle a little if you're so very full?" asked the merry silver coin.

"I can't; I've nothing to jingle; but I've a sweet story to tell," replied the dollar bill, which was on top of many others.

"My dear mistress wanted her boy to love the Saviour, and she prayed about it a great deal. One day, when her prayer was answered, she told a friend how happy she was, and she said: "I'm so thankful I hardly know how to express my gratitude.'

'Couldn't you express it best by helping some other lost soul to find Him?' 'In what way?' 'By letting the sweet story be told by some missionary who is longing to go to the rescue, but hasn't the means.'

'Would money be of any comfort to you to-day if your boy met death unexpectedly and unprepared?' 'Oh, no! no!' 'What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?' I thank you for the good thought, and my gratitude to God shall be proved by my prayers and my giving that comfort to others."

"That's a good story," said the boxes, after a little pause; "Who'll tell us another?"

"My mistress hasn't large means," said a timid little voice, "but she's sincerely grateful to God for all her blessings, and she keeps dropping us in here, with a prayer for each one of us to do good, when she really needs us herself."

"That is a beautiful spirit," said the silver voice, "it is—

'Not what we give,
But what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare.'"

"I don't want to be ungracious," said the copper coin again, "but aren't you making too much of this? My mistress is generous; she drops us in continuously. When her little boy was injured by falling from his bicycle she even dropped in a dollar."

"Yes. I heard her say she would give a thousand dollars if he were not lame for life," said a five cent piece. "I was in her purse at the time."

"Was he lame?" "Did he recover?" asked many coins all at once.

"No; he wasn't lame at all; he recovered all right," answered the copper cent.

"Did she give the thousand dollars?" asked the inquisitive boxes.

"No; she didn't really mean it, I suppose."

"Oh I'm so sorry!" said the sweet voice of the silver coin with a sad tone. "She would have given that to an earthly physician, but the Divine Healer, the Great Physician, so often is unpaid."

"That reminds me of something I heard my good little mistress say," said the box with five-cent pieces. "She was telling a friend that when people say 'I'm so thankful' she often wished that a little bird would jump out and say 'how thankful?' just like the bird out of the cuckoo clock. She thinks it would make them more thoughtful and practical in their thankfulness. Why, one day she preached quite a sermon to a railroad king! He was telling her how thankful he was that he had put his great road through to a certain point. She said, 'how thankful are you?' He looked a little puzzled and said, 'how thankful?' 'Yes,' was the smiling reply, 'if that road is worth millions of dollars to you can't you take a few of those dollars to show your thankfulness?' 'Surely I can,' he said, 'you know I mean to be generous with my money, but I'm forgetful of opportunities; set me on the right track.' And she did, and a tired, discouraged missionary in India received a gift of money that built his little chapel and made his heart glad over and over that some one was thinking of him and his necessities."

"'Forgetful of opportunities,' that's just it," said the other boxes. "Our motto is, 'Give thanks for all things,' but our dear owners have simply forgotten that each blessing is an opportunity, each happy day, each sad day, if Christ be in it, each day of sight, of hearing, of health, of sanity of mind, of work or of pleasure. The days are full of blessings. Shall we ask Edison to put that bird into the next supply of boxes, to remind them?"

"No, no," said a sweet voice, "God will steal into their hearts, and his lovely voice will remind them of all the blessings on the way. They have been careless simply by want of thought, not by lack of heart."

Was it true?

HELPING HAND.

To the Preachers of the Raleigh Association.

Brethren:—The time for our Centennial work is very short, and probably it is not possible to make a personal canvass of the churches. But the opportunity of making an offering must not go unimproved. We have decided, therefore, to ask each preacher in the Raleigh Association to bring this matter up at once, and to take a collection in each church he serves. Do not worry yourself nor your churches about the several different objects to which it can be appropriated. Take it for "the Centennial of Missions." Let it be the offering of each church towards celebrating the great Centennial year. Do not delegate it to the sisters, nor to the Sunday-schools (unless between your appointments they can see and solicit something from every member). But the time is so short that unless something is done at once, some churches will fail to have a part in this work.

Brethren, make the appeal yourselves. Give all necessary explanations. Let this offering be entirely separate from the regular work of the church. And by or before the third Sunday in April, see that each church is reported with its Centennial collection to Bro. J. D. Boushall, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C. Now, brethren, to the work, and do not fail to have each church included.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

EDWARDS & BROUGHTON.

One of the leading enterprises of its character in the entire South is the extensive printing and binding establishment, owned and conducted by the firm of Edwards & Broughton, and located at the corner of Hargett and Salisbury streets, Raleigh, N C. The gentlemen constituting this firm, Mr. C. B. Edwards and Mr. N. B Broughton, are and have been for many years among Raleigh's prominent and substantial business men and citizens. Mr. Edwards is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Franklin county, and has made this city his home for the past quarter of a century, while Mr. Broughton, also a native of North Carolina, was born in Wake county, and has resided in Raleigh since 1856. They began their present co-partnership about twenty-two years ago. The plant is one of the finest in the South, equipped with the best of presses, etc., and with every improvement and convenience. They do a general printing business in all its branches, and carry in stock a fine line of stationery, letter heads, bill heads, statements, fine wedding stationery, etc., and at prices that no house can discount, quality considered. Catalogues, posters, circulars, etc., will be furnished upon the shortest possible notice. They also conduct a general binding business, manufacturing everything in the line of blank books. With their extraordinary facilities and employing only the best skilled workmen, they are enabled to produce a grade of goods that cannot be surpassed by the product of any firm in the country, no matter where located. Prices, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application either personally or by mail, and all orders will receive prompt and careful attention. They have a large trade from outside the city, and parties residing at surrounding points will save money and receive the very best of satisfaction by giving this firm the benefit of their patronage.

New Spring Dress Goods.

Among the new Dress Goods for the Spring will be noticed some distinct changes, both as to colors and styles, from those of the past season.

Our advance lines of Dress Fabrics for this season are already on sale, and embraces the newest shades and textures in Plain Materials, as well as the latest ideas in the handsomer French Novelties.

This year, Cotton Dress Fabrics will be shown in many dainty effects, and our present exhibit of these is the most extensive we have ever made.

We suggest to our patrons to buy early, as most of these goods are our own importations, consequently many styles once sold cannot be duplicated.

Requests for samples should indicate something as to colors, and about what price goods are desired.

Cash with the order, of $5.00 and over, goods will be delivered free (except furniture and crockery) to the nearest Express Office or Railroad station.

A CHANCE

OF A LIFE-TIME.

Here is your opportunity. I am in a great struggle to raise the money to pay off the indebtedness on Walnut Cove and Ruffin churches. You can help me and help yourself. I have made an arrangement with R. H. Woodward & Co. of Baltimore to furnish the Life, Wit and Wisdom of Charles H. Spurgeon, a book of nearly 600 pages, and written with Spurgeon's approval before his death, and also a six months' membership in R. H. Woodward's Book Buyers Bureau, by which you can buy any book at Wholesale Prices. Book finely bound in cloth and certificate of membership in Bureau sent, postpaid, for $1.25.

Also, I will furnish the Holman Self-Pronouncing Bible, which has all the Oxford helps, and bound with elegant binding—French Seal, Persian Seal, Palestine Levant, and Levant, at a discount of 25 per cent. This is the best Bible published. Address,

A Chatham Miracle.

DR. CARL VERRINDER'S VICISSITUDES OF TORTURE AND OF HEALTH.

HE SURVIVES THEM ALL, AND RECOUNTS HIS WONDERFUL DELIVERANCE FROM POVERTY AND DEATH, AND HIS RESTORATION TO PROSPERITY AND VIGOR OF MIND AND BODY—GOOD WORDS FOR THE A. O. U. W.

(Chatham Planet.)

In a Raleigh street residence there lives with wife and one child—a little ten-year-old daughter—a musician known throughout Ontario, if not the whole Dominion, as a prince among organists and choir masters—a veritable maestro and "Wizard of the Ivory Keys," and no one who has ever listened to his manipulation of the great organ in the Park Street Methodist church, or heard him evoke "magic music's mystic melody" from the magnificent Decker Grand in his own drawing-room but will declare that his eminence is well deserved, and his peers can be but few among the professors of Divine Art. The door plate bears the following inscription:—

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.
DR. CARL LEO VERRINDER,
Director.

To sit, as did a Planet reporter a few days ago, in a very atmosphere of sweet harmony, created by Dr. Verrinder's magician-like touch was an experience that might well be envied, and one calculated to inspire the most sentimental reveries. But sentimental moods finally vanish and leaving one facing the sober and practical side of life. The music ceased and the conversation took a turn leading to the real object of the reporter's call.

"There are stories abroad," said the newspaper man, "regarding some extraordinary deliverance from death, which you have met with recently, doctor. Would you object to state what foundation there is for them, and, if any, furnish me with the true facts for publication." Dr. Verrinder shrugged his shoulders and laughed. "I have not," he replied, "been given to seeking newspaper notoriety, and at fifty-five years of age it is not likely I shall begin, and yet," said the professor after thinking a moment and consulting Mrs. Verrinder, "perhaps it is best that I should give you the circumstances for use in The Planet. The story of my rescue from the grave might fittingly be prefaced by a little of my early history. We resided in England, where though I was a professor of music, I was not dependant on my art, as I had acquired a competence. My wife was an heiress, having £50,000, in her own right. Through the rascality of a broker she was robbed almost of all her fortune, while by the Bank of Glasgow failure, my money vanished forever. It became necessary for me then to return to my profession in order to live. I do not speak of it boastingly, but I stood well among the musicians of that day in the old land. My fees were a guinea a lesson, and it was no uncommon thing for me to give twenty in a day. We came to America, landing in Quebec, where I anticipated getting an engagement as organist in the cathedral, but was disappointed. Subsequently we moved to St. Catharines, in which city I procured an organ and choir and soon had a large clientele. Later, in order as I thought to better my fortune, I took up my residence in London, first filling an engagement with a Methodist church and afterwards accepting the position of organist in St. Peter's Cathedral. In those cities I made many warm friends, and their tributes and gifts I shall ever retain as among the most precious of my possessions. It was while living in London and pursuing my art with much earnestness and labor that I received a stroke of paralysis. Perhaps,"—here the speaker rose and stretched himself to his full height, thus displaying his well-built and well-nourished frame—"I do not look like a paralytic. But the truth is I have had three strokes—yes, sir, first, second and third, and they say the third is fatal, ninety-nine times out of one hundred. Yet here you see before you a three-stroke victim, and a man who feels, both in body and mind, as vigorous as he ever did in his life. My ultimate cure I attribute to my testing the virtues of a medicine whose praise I shall never cease sounding as long as I live, and which I shall recommend to suffering humanity as I am now constantly doing, while I know of a case and can reach the ear of the patient. After removing to Chatham I had not long been here when my health further began to give way. Gradually I noted the change. I felt it first and most strongly in a stomach affection which produced constant and distressing nausea. It grew worse and worse, I myself attributed it to bad water poisoning my system. One doctor said it was catarrh of the stomach. Another pronounced it diabetes, still another a different diagnosis. I kept on doctoring, but getting no relief. I tried one medicine after another, but it was no use. Grippe attacked me and added to my pain, discomfort and weakness. At last I took my bed and it seemed that I was never going to get well. Nothing of a nourishing nature would remain on my stomach. No drugs seemed to have a counter-acting influence on the disease which was dragging me down to death. My wife would sit at my bedside and moisten my lips with diluted spirits which was all that could be done to relieve me. Besides three local doctors who gave me up, I had doctors from London and Kingston whose skill I believed in and to whom I paid heavy fees, but without receiving any help or encouragement. It is true that a stomach pump operation afforded temporary relief, but yet I felt that my peculiar case needed some special and particular compound or remedial agent which I knew not of. But, at last, thank God, I discovered it. I had been for eighteen months a miserable wreck, unable to work, unable to eat or to sleep properly. My means were becoming exhausted. My poor wife was worn out in body and spirit. Suddenly the deliverer came! Pink Pills! Yes sir! Pink Pills—God bless their inventor or discoverer!—have rescued me from the jaws of death and miraculously made me what you see me to-day, hearty, happy, with a splendid appetite, a clear brain, a capacity for work and an ability to sleep sound and refreshing sleep—a boon that only a man who has experienced the terrors of insomnia can rightly appreciate. Bear in mind, my friend, I am no wild enthusiast over the supposed merits of this medicine. I have tested the virtues of Pink Pills and am ready to take oath to their efficacy. No one could shake my faith in them; because what a man has thoroughly proved in his own experience, and what he has had confirmed in the experience of others—I have prescribed the pills to other sick persons and know what extraordinary good they have effected in their cases—he ought to be convinced is so. I shall tell you how I came to try them. A fellow member of the A. O. U. W., the brethren of which order had been more than kind to me during my illness, recommended Pink Pills. I knew nothing about what they were or what they could accomplish. In fact, I am rather a skeptic on what are termed "proprietary remedies." But I started to take Pink Pills for Pale People, made by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville. From the very first, one at a dose, I began to mend and before I had taken more than a box or two I knew that I had found the right remedy and that to the Pink Pills I owed my life. In nine months I have taken twelve boxes—just six dollars worth. Think of it my friend! Hundreds of dollars for other treatment, and only six dollars for what has made a man of me and set me again on the highway of health and prosperity. There is some subtle, life giving principle in Pink Pills which I do not attempt to fathom. I only know, like the blind man of old: "Once I was blind; now I can see!" God, in the mystery of his providence, directed my brother of the A. O. U. W. to me. I took it. I live and rejoice in my health and strength. I have no physical malady, save a slight stiffness in my leg due to grippe. I feel as well as in my palmiest days. My prospects are good. All this I gratefully attribute to the virtues of Pink Pills for Pale People, and now my story is done! "as the nursery ballad runs. If anybody should ask confirmation of this tale of mine let him write to me and I shall cheerfully furnish it. The Pink Pills were my rescuer and I'll be their friend and advocate while I live!"

The reporter finally took his leave of Dr. Verrinder, but not without the professor entertaining him to another piano treat, a symphony played with faultless execution and soulful interpretation of the composer's thought.

Calling upon Messrs. A. E Pilkey & Co., the well known druggists, the reporter ascertained Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have an enormous sale in Chatham, and that from all quarters come glowing reports of the excellent results following their use. In fact Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are recognized as one of the greatest modern medicines—a perfect blood builder and nerve restorer—curing such diseases as rheumatism, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus' dance, nervous headache, nervous prostration and the tired feeling resulting therefrom, diseases depending upon humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. Pink Pills restore pale and sallow complexions to the glow of health, and are a specific for all the troubles peculiar to the female sex, while in the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature.

These Pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company from either address. The price at which these pills are sold make a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

Dr. Taylor says: "Baptist boys and girls for Baptist colleges."

We say, Baptist colleges for Baptist boys and girls, and for all others who will attend them.

In the Northern States rich men and women have founded and endowed many colleges called denominational; but these have such a horror of sectarianism that in some cases more than half of the professors belong to other denominations, and to no denomination. Some of the Northern penitentiaries and reformatories teach a more definite religion than is taught in some of the so-called colleges. For the same reason the Baptist orphan-houses in the Northern States are few and very small.

A professor in a Northern college called on us to explain, in a public meeting, why so much attention was paid to orphans in North Carolina.

The colleges are numerous enough, but their denominationalism is drifting out to sea and fading away from mortal sight.

Southern colleges have less hero worship, fewer days to celebrate, and more time to teach and practice a definite religion. Our trouble is that so many who ought to be in school are growing up in ignorance. We have too many distractions to lead the young away from the pure love of learning—Charity and Children.

President Harrison's little scheme to aggrandize his administration just before going out of office seems to be a failure. The annexation idea looks worse and worse the more it is looked at. It is said that "if the Democrats fail to take speedy action toward annexing the Hawaiian Islands it will be the last chance the United States will ever have to get them. England is playing a smart diplomatic game. She knows that to enter a protest would precipitate annexation only, but England stands ready to act at a moment's notice." When England undertakes that job it will be time enough for us to be frightened by the threat. We don't need the Hawaiian Islands. There is no little just sarcasm in the saying of the Vineyard Herald, which indulges itself thus:

"Stealing an island from a poor old colored woman is not a great national achievement. It belongs to the cheat your-wash-woman style of diplomacy."

The stealing of the Sandwich Islands simply because we are able to steal, or to keep England from stealing, is not a kind of statemanship that is worthy of honor. It is the kind that is leading us to break a solemn treaty with China.—Christian Inquirer.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys are carefully made of clear tough glass; they fit, and get the utmost light from the lamp, and they last until some accident breaks them.

PICKARD—SALMON—On Feb. 23, 1893, at the residence of the bride's father in Egypt, Chatham county, N. C., by Rev. L. R. Dixon, Mr. Charles F. Pickard of Moore county and Miss Mary E. Salmon of Chatham county.

MERRELL—MURCHISON—On March 7, 1893, at the Presbyterian church, Gulf, Chatham county, N. C., by Rev L. R. Dixon, assisted by Rev. W. F. Thom, Rev. G. L. Merrell of Franklinville, Randolph county, N. C., and Miss Nannie J. Murchison, daughter of Rev. D. C. Murchison of Gulf, Chatham county, N. C.

DIED.

CLARK—At his residence near Advance, Bro. William Clark died in his seventy-ninth year. For a long time he was a great, but patient sufferer. He was a consistent member of Fork Baptist Church. His aged wife, and descendants, with a large circle of friends, feel sensibly their great loss. We weep not as those who have no hope. "Requiescat in pace."

RATTS—Bro. H. C. Ratts died at his home, Fork Church, N. C., March 2, 1893, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. He had been in feeble health for some time, but was not confined to his home. Death came suddenly and took the indulgent father, faithful husband, and true friend. He was a true member of Fork Baptist Church. J. B. NEWTON.

ROBERTSON—James Vance Robertson, son of Dr. J. B. Robertson, was born May 4th, 1868, and died very suddenly at his father's home in Clayton, in Johnston county, N. C., March 1, 1893, aged nearly twenty-five years. He professed faith in Christ October, 1879, during a meeting conducted by the Rev. Mr. Butts, a Methodist revivalist, and soon after united with Clayton Baptist Church, where his membership remained until the family moved to Winston, N. C. His funeral was preached by the writer March 2—text, Prov. 27: 1—to a large congregation. May the God of all grace comfort the sorrow-stricken hearts of the parents, brothers, sisters and other relatives of the one so hurriedly called away from them.

Tributes of Respect.

At the February conference of Florence Avenue Baptist church in Granville county, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted;

WHEREAS, It hath pleased our Heavenly Father to call, from this to the upper and brighter world, our beloved brother, Timothy S. Wilkerson; therefore Resolved 1. That in the death of our brother and co-worker in the cause of Christ, the church has lost one of its most active and zealous members, the community a useful citizen, and his family a kind husband and father.

2. That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved companion and children of our deceased brother, and commend them to the care and keeping of him who knoweth what is best for us all.

3. That these resolutions be spread upon the church record, a copy sent for publication to the BIBLICAL RECORDER, and a copy given to the family of the deceased.

Bro. Wilkerson was fifty-six years and three months old, and at the time of his death a deacon in the church and superintendent of the Sunday-school. CHURCH CLERK.

"Fear Not."

How oft inclined we are to fear
And act as though no God was near,
To help us on our way!
We fear the loss of present store,
Without the hope of getting more,
To last beyond to day.

We fear that friends may leave us lone,
Unfeeling as a heartless stone,
And cheerless in our grief,
But what though human friends forsake
And briefly cause our hearts to ache,
Is there no sweet relief?

Yes, there is a great and loving friend
On whom we always may depend,
In every way, in every spot.
Though poor we be and great our ills

Music in the Home.

I want to call the attention of mothers to the importance of music in the home. Busy mothers are too apt to "hush" their children when they sing or whistle. It is just as natural for some children to sing as it is for the birds, and it seems to me almost wicked to hush their little voices. To be sure, one does get tired of hearing street songs all the time, such as "Annie Rooney," "Ta-ra-ra-boom de ay," etc., but we should have patience and teach the little ones other songs, with pretty airs and easy words; then they will soon stop the street music.

I know of a mother who has kept her children in the kindergarten until they were nine years old merely to have them learn the attractive songs which are taught there. These children go to a primary school in the afternoon. This mother will not engage a nursemaid who cannot sing and read; yet she says her children are not naturally musical, and one of them cannot sing a note correctly, but she allows him to think that he can, because he truly loves music, and some day he may learn. They have no piano in the house, because they cannot afford one, and cannot spare the funds necessary to employ a music teacher. Neither father nor mother can play on any musical instrument; yet, should you listen some rainy day at the nursery door, you would say, "Oh! what a musical family; how well those little children sing." Yes, they sing from their hearts, because they are happy, and because they have never been "hushed up." When they attempted a new song they were encouraged, and so were kept bright and pleasant by music. If the baby falls, they do not allow it to cry, but pick it up and sing to it. When the tired little feet come pattering in, after a long day's run, mamma or nurse wash the little faces and hands, and they all sit down and sing sweet songs together, while waiting for their supper.

When these children are men and women, how pleasant it will be for them to remember their nursery songs. Rich and poor should have music in their homes; it is a great safeguard against much that is evil. We do not need to be skilled musicians in order to make children happy.—The Mother's Nursery Guide.

Coming to a Halt.

"I cannot imagine why I am so tired all the time. It seems to me that I do very little," said a woman, dragging herself to a chair and sitting down wearily.

"How many times a day do you go up and down stairs?" inquired a friend. The house was in the city, high and narrow, with four long stairways, three of which intervened between the kitchen and the mother's "own room."

"Why, not very often; I don't know. I have a good many errands about the house, here and there, and my impulse is usually to wait on myself. I suppose I spend a good deal of strength on the stairs, now that I think of it."

"And, pardon the suggestion, but you are always looking out for others so much and so generously, that others ought to look out for you; have you ever thought how often you are interrupted in the progress of a day? The ordering of the house is the first thing, but some trifle is forgotten, pepper or salt, flavor or seasoning, and you are consulted about that. Then your big boy comes to you with his necktie and his cuffs, and your four year-old has pinched his finger, and needs comforting; your daughters have no end of affairs in which you must be the counsellor, and your husband leaves the weight of his perplexities and the irritability that grows out of his overwork on your ever-ready strength. Dear it is not wonderful that you are tired! The wonder is that you rest so soon, after a nap, or a little time by yourself, coming out to the family made over again."

"But what can I do? All that you mention forms part of the every-day duty of a woman like myself, whose main work in the world is to keep her home happy and comfortable."

"Once in a while you might call a halt. You should pack a little bag, and run away for a three days' visit, leaving the housekeeping to the young shoulder, which will find it only a slight burden. It is an imperative duty, occasionally, to take care of one's capital, if one be a wife and mother." In the interest of the rest, for the sake of the days that are coming, a matron must be provident of her own health, not suffering herself to drift into nervous prostration or chronic invalidism.

There are graves not a few, over which the inscription might be written: "Here lies Mary ——, the beloved wife of Theodore ——, died to death." And in most cases the fault is not Theodore's, but Mary's who should have called a halt in time.

A Sailor's Burial.

A GRAPHIC ACCOUNT OF A BURIAL AT SEA.

When maritime Jack dies he is buried without undue ceremony. A brief prayer, a shotted hammock, the lee rail, and all is over. But on board a ship of war a sailor's funeral is pathetic in its dignified simplicity. No muster of the ship's company is, naturally, so sad as this, and you can see it on the faces of all when the subdued shrilling of the bo'sw'n's whistle is followed by the long drawn out and modulated call of "All hands to bury the dead!" The men come aft quickly and take their allotted stations. To leeward, if it be at sea, or upon the port side of the quarter-deck if in port, the seamen are ranged in the front rank; behind them are the ordinary seamen; and in rear of both, the apprentices and the landsmen. In the gangway forward of the mainmast, on such ships as still have sail power, senior petty officers stand at attention. Around the coffin, folded in the jack or national ensign, are grouped the pallbearers, selected usually from the dead man's mess or gun division, and close at hand, resting on arms, the marine guard is paraded. Nearest the coffin are the chaplain and the captain, and then in order of their rank stretch aft the other officers of the ship.

The ensign at the peak or staff flutters tremblingly at half mast, and from overhead the yard and stay tackles swing lazily, ready to lift the coffin outboard. When the weather permits the way of the ship is stopped, and, it may be, little flickers of idling steam curl upward and leeward like incense, and the wind in the backed and fretting topsails murmurs a dirge. The order to "uncover" is passed gently, and while the beautiful words of the burial service are being read the hush of the living is accentuated by the low accompaniments of sea sounds—by the rumble of eager waters eddying sternward, and by the surging of the breeze in the hollows of the canvas and through the rigging and gear. When the closing prayer is said, the last blessing given, the tackles are manned, the coffin is stripped of its flags and slung in straps, and slowly, reverently, is hoisted above the rail and clear of the ship, until it is poised above the billows. The marines load, aim, fire, in all three volleys, that awaken rattling echoes in the hidden space of the ship; the bugle sounds "taps" tenderly and sweetly, with a newer meaning of sleep and rest; the coffin swings further out, and is lowered gently until the foam and spoondrift moisten it; the tackles are detached with sudden jerk, and in an instant the weighted box shoots downward, bedded in foam and bubbles, and all is over until the sea gives up the dead.

In a little while the cheery whistles trill out a call to duty, the half masted ensign climbs to the dasher block, the ship is brought to her course and dazedly the men take up the wearying routine of the lives so sadly broken. An unusual quiet rests upon the vessel and around the mess table; but in the groups gathered to smoke during the supper hour and after the hammocks are piped down, the virtues—those heroic and honest sea virtues—of the dead sailor are recalled and with a tenderness born of a comradeship closer than any other men except soldiers may know.—Lieutenant J. D. J Kelly, in New York Tablet.

Stained Floors.

It is of little use to sweep a stained floor, as so much dust is left behind by the coarse broom. Use either a soft brush with a long handle, or a bag of canton flannel tied over the broom. The latter works well, and of course needs frequent shaking while using. It is best of all to simply wipe the floor every day with a soft cloth. To polish it, use turpentine and beeswax. To revive the stain and freshen it, once in a while rub over with a little white linseed oil. Never use soap upon either floors or oil-cloths. For the latter take an old flannel cloth, with buttermilk and water.

Twenty Years of Suffering Cured.

ST. ANNA'S ASYLUM, NEW ORLEANS, LA., Sept. 5, 1891.

Dear Sir:—A feeling of gratitude for my own recovery and a hope that others may benefit by my experience lead me to give you a history of my case of rheumatism and the efforts made to cure or relieve me.

I have suffered from rheumatism for nearly twenty years, which grew worse, until suffering and poverty drove me to Charity Hospital, where I remained under treatment for three months. I was then discharged, with the assurance that I could never walk again without crutches, as I was then doing, my rheumatism having grown worse while there—all of the joints of my right leg swelled to more than double their natural size.

I was then offered a home in this institution, which I accepted on last April.

I am now sixty-one years of age, had always, until crippled by this disease, led an active life, supporting myself comfortably, and became very unhappy living on charity. Hearing this, several ladies who were acquainted with me and what I had done during the war, wrote requesting the officers to treat me with the Electropoise, and I have now had eleven treatments of two hours a day, three times a week. After the third treatment all pains disappeared and I threw away my crutches and am now able to walk entirely without assistance, and I feel sure that in a very short time I shall be able to leave the asylum and make my own living. In addition to the cure of the rheumatism my eyesight has been very much improved, and my general health is as good as could be expected of any one of my age.

(Signed) MRS. MARY E. WILBERT.

Method and leisure go hand in hand. In other words, the man who controls his business, but does not let his business control him, is the man that can have an occasional respite from business' taxing cares. The man who has a time for everything, who attends to everything in its time, is the man that gets time which he may spend in attending to something in the way of recreation. And recreation man must have. While humanity is as it is, there must be an unbending of the bow of labor. It must be either this, or break it entirely.—Exchange.

DERMA-ROYALE

The new discovery for curing cutaneous affections, removing discolorations and bleaching and brightening the complexion. In experimenting in the laundry with a new bleach for fine fabrics it was discovered that all spots, freckles, tan, and other discolorations were quickly removed from the hands and arms without the slightest injury to the skin. The discovery was submitted to experienced Dermatologists and Physicians who incorporated it with well known curatives and prepared for us the marvelous Derma-Royale. THERE NEVER WAS ANYTHING LIKE IT. It is perfectly harmless and so simple a child can use it. Apply at night—the improvement apparent after a single application will surprise and delight you. One bottle completely removes and cures the most aggravated case and thoroughly clears, whitens and beautifies the complexion. It has never failed—IT CAN NOT FAIL. It is highly recommended by Physicians and its cure results warrant us in offering $500 REWARD.—To assure the public of its merits we agree to forfeit Five Hundred Dollars CASH, for any case of eczema, pimples, blotches, moth-patches, brown spots, blackheads, ugly or muddy skin, unnatural redness, freckles, tan or any other cutaneous discolorations or blemishes, (excepting birth-marks, scars and those of a scrofulous or kindred nature that Derma-Royale will not quickly remove and cure. We also agree to forfeit Five Hundred Dollars to any person whose skin can be injured in the slightest possible manner, or to anyone whose complexion, no matter in how bad condition it may be, will not be cleared, whitened, improved and beautified by the use of Derma-Royale.

Morgan Edwards and the Regulators.

I read with much interest Dr. Whitsitt's article in last week's RECORDER on the battle of Alamance Creek between the Regulators and Gov. Tryon's forces, fought May 16, 1771.

In that article, the Doctor says many good things of Morgan Edwards which I heartily endorse; but he makes some disparaging statements concerning the great Baptist historian, which to my mind remain to be proved.

It is true that Edwards was honestly devoted to the land that gave him birth, for he was born in the principality of Wales; and because of this devotion, he was called a Tory. He made no war upon the Regulators, however, as did Cols. Richard Caswell, John Ashe, Needham Bryan, and others, whose memory North Carolinians delight to honor.

Dr. William Rogers, who succeeded Morgan Edwards in the pastorate of the First Baptist church of Philadelphia, preached the latter's funeral sermon, Feb. 22, 1795, in which he said of Edwards: "He also met with dishonor; but he complained not much of this, as it was occasioned by his strong attachment to the Royal Family of Great Britain, in the beginning of the American war; which fixed on him the name of a Tory: this I should have omitted mentioning, had not the deceased expressly enjoined it upon me. For any person to have been so marked out in those days, was enough to bring on political opposition and destruction of property; all of which took place with respect to Mr. Edwards, though he never harbored the thought of doing the least injury to the United States by abetting the cause of our enemies."—Benedict's History of the Baptists, Vol. II., p. 295.

As to the seemingly contradictory resolutions on page 14 of the North Carolina Baptist Almanac, I would say, by way of explanation, that the first resolution requiring union with the Regulators as a condition of membership was passed by a local church (Haw River) in the midst of the excited and oppressed populace, and that the second resolution forbidding taking up arms against the civil authority was passed by an Association (Sandy Creek) that, at that date, extended over parts of three States, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Edwards did speak of North Carolina as "a poor and unhappy Province, whose superiors make complaints of the people, and the people of their superiors; which complaints, if just, show the body politic to be like that of Israel in the time of Isaiah," &c.

If there is any truth in history, every word of the above was distressingly and unquestionably true; and the statement contains no evidence of the author's unreasonable prejudice against the State, or his unreliability as a historian.

The following extract from Edwards' History shows that our oppressed people had his profound sympathy instead of his unreasonable prejudice, and it further shows that Baptists were prominent in the opposition measures against the recklessness, injustice and oppression of Tryon's administration. The extract is from Vol. II., page 42, of Benedict's History, and relates to Sandy Creek church:

"Very remarkable things (said Morgan Edwards in 1775) may be said of this church, worthy a place in Gillis's book, and inferior to no instance he gives of the modern success of the gospel in different parts of the world. It began with sixteen souls, and in a short time increased to 606, spreading its branches to Deep River and Abbott's Creek, which branches are gone to other provinces, and most of the members of this church have followed them; insomuch that in seventeen years it is reduced from 606 to 14 souls. The cause of this dispersion was the abuse of power which too much prevailed in the province, and caused the inhabitants at last to rise up in arms and fight for their privileges; but being routed May 16th, 1771, they despaired of seeing better times, and therefore quitted the province. It is said that 1,500 families departed since the battle of Alamance, and, to my knowledge, a great many more are only waiting to dispose of their plantations, in order to follow them. This is to me an argument, that their grievances were real, and their oppression great, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary." (The italics are mine in the last sentence.)

It seems to me an easy matter to account for Edwards' statement that out of 4,000 Regulators he found only seven Baptists, without impeaching the historian's veracity or fair-mindedness. In the first place, many of the Baptists, as well as others, left the sections in which the battle was fought soon after the engagement. Secondly, it is a reasonable supposition that, at the time of Edwards' visit (1772), the defeated Regulators were not very forward to inform him or any other stranger of their connection with a movement that had (as they supposed) resulted so disastrously.

Dr. Whitsitt says that "Captain Merrill, the Baptist officer who was hanged for his part in the earliest battle of the Revolution, has endured the obloquy heaped upon him by the Rev. Morgan Edwards quite long enough." It may be that the Doctor has proof that Edwards has heaped obloquy upon the unfortunate Merrill. If he has, I would like to see it. I confess that I have never seen anything from Edwards that sustains the charge.

Edwards does say this of Merrill: "One of the seven Baptists, by the name of Merrill, was executed; and he, at the point of death, did not justify his conduct, but bitterly condemned it; and blamed two men (of very different religion) for deceiving him into the rebellion. * * * The man bore an excellent character, insomuch that one of his enemies was heard to say that if all went to the gallows with Capt. Merrill's character, hanging would be an honorable death."

Indeed Merrill's speech at the gallows heaped more obloquy upon him than anything that Edwards ever said of him. I give only a part of the speech:

"I stand here exposed to the world as a criminal. My life will soon be a change. God is my comforter and supporter. I am condemned to die for opposing government. All you that are present, take warning by my miserable end, when I shall be hung up as a spectacle before you. My first seducers were Hunter and Gelaspie. They had often solicited me, telling that a settlement only was contended for with regard to public officers, who, they said, had oppressed the people; and that unless these measures were taken, there would be no remedy or redress hereafter. Thus they pressed me on by assuring me the disputes (as they called them) then existing might be settled without shedding of blood. I considered this unhappy affair, and thought, possibly, the contentions in the country might be brought to some determination, without injury to any; and in this mind I joined the Regulation. * * * I received, by the grace of God, a change fifteen years ago; but have, since that time been a backslider; yet Providence, in which is my chief security, has been pleased to give me comfort under evils in my last hour; and although the halter is now round my neck, believe me, I would not change stations with any man on the ground. All you who think you stand, take heed lest ye fall. I would be glad to say a few more words before I die. In a few moments I shall leave a widow and ten children. I entreat that no reflection be cast upon them on my account; and, if possible, shall deem it as a bounty, should you, gentlemen, petition the Governor and Council, that some part of my estate may be spared for the widow and the fatherless; it will be an act of charity, for I have forfeited the whole, by the laws of God and man."—Benedict's History, pp. 116–118.

The truth is, that thousands of Regulators—(for they abounded from the sea shore to the mountains) went into the movement with the expectation of having their grievous wrongs redressed without resort to hostile measures. It was with this expectation that Merrill became a Regulator, and could the unfortunate patriot come back to life and see the outcome of that battle on Alamance creek, he would retract every word of his speech that is condemnatory of the part he acted in that memorable battle.

In conclusion, let me say that I shrink from controversy, especially with my own brethren. I love Dr. Whitsitt, and would esteem it a privilege to sit at his feet and learn, but I think that he has cast unmerited obloquy upon the good name of Morgan Edwards, whose distinguished services to the American Baptists should forever shield him from unjust criticism.

Dabbling or Digging.

A recent number of The Biblical World has a strong plea for more comprehensive and careful study of the Bible. It says with truth, "We may examine the pupils who for years have frequented the Sunday-schools, in which the Bible forms the chief subject of consideration, from which, in most cases, they come forth with an ignorance of the most common facts and the simplest truths that is astounding. Or we may reach higher and investigate the work of the multitude of colleges scattered throughout the land, called and represented to be Christian colleges, in which so little of the truth of Christianity is taught—and that little so poorly taught—as to make the 'Christian,' as thus applied, in very truth a misnomer." In short, there is plenty of dabbling with the Bible in these days, but not much downright digging in it. One of the most hopeful signs of the times, however, is the growing dissatisfaction at the dabbling.

Answer to Interogatories of James K. Blalock.

The first interogatory is this: "If an ordained Free Will Antimission, or Campbellite Baptist preacher, be received into the fellowship of a Baptist church in North Carolina, should he be ordained by our own brethren before becoming pastor of a Baptist church?"

I think the proper answer to this question depends on something precedent to it; that is, should a person be received into a Baptist church from any of said organizations on the baptism received in the societies from which he came. If the ministers of the societies from which he came had the scriptural authority to baptize, then it follows as a logical sequence that they had the equal right to ordain; and if they had no right to perform one act, neither had they the right to perform the other. And their right, in both cases, depends upon whether the organizations to which they belong are proper New Testament churches. Without entering largely into the discussion of this question, it will suffice to notice the attitude of Baptist churches towards the parties in question.

As to the Free Will Baptists. I do not know the attitude held generally by Baptists toward people of this sect, for I have never been thrown in contact with them, and I have very little written information about them. It is stated in Brown's Enc. Rel. Knowledge by one of their leading ministers that they were organized in the United States in 1780, and their existence is carried no farther back. Their church polity and doctrines differ very widely from the church polity and doctrines held and practiced by Baptists. It is true that they immerse on a profession of faith, but that does not, in my view of the fitness of things, cure all other ills. In our invitation to the Lord's Supper, to those of the same faith and order, it seems to me they are necessarily excluded. If so, then their organization cannot be regarded as a proper gospel church. This being the case, it seems to me improper to recognize as valid the ordinances as administered by them.

As to the Campbellite organization, their case is very plain to my mind. Apart from the doctrinal views which they hold contrary to those held by Baptists from time immemorial, or from the days of the apostles, their sect had its origin from persons excluded from Baptist churches for holding and teaching views contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures as understood and taught by the great body of Baptist churches. To accept the ordinances as administered by them would be an acknowledgment that their societies are proper New Testament churches. This would open to them the door of communion with us, else place us in a very awkward position.

The safest way is to require all persons desiring to unite with Baptist churches from these sects to relate their experience of grace, and baptize them just like any other persons, and if one of their preachers wish to unite with us, treat him in the same way, and then if he wants to preach, let him preach, and if a Baptist church wants him as pastor, ordain him, if found worthy, just like we do in ordinary cases. And it seems to me that any preacher uniting with a Baptist church from either of these sects, with proper views of a New Testament church and New Testament doctrine, would not be satisfied with less than this.

As to the Antimission or Antinomian Baptists, their case is quite different from the other two. I regard their societies as New Testament churches, though very remiss in duty; they have the ordinances as delivered by the apostles, and they preach a great deal of gospel truth, though I regard them as too contracted in their views. For these reasons, briefly stated, I think the ordinances as administered by them, including ordination, are entitled to respect.

2. Without formally stating the query, I do not see how a Baptist preacher can become pastor of a Free Will Baptist church. He might preach the gospel to them, (no doubt but they need it,) but I do not see how he can consistently be pastor. Being pastor embraces more than preaching; it includes the administration of the ordinances, and I think it entirely improper for a Baptist preacher to administer the ordinances of the gospel for any church other than a regular Baptist church. A Baptist preacher who becomes pastor of a Free Will Baptist church, and persists in such conduct, I think puts himself in a position for Baptists to withdraw fellowship from him. If the Free Will Baptists want a Baptist pastor, the way is open. Let them relate their christian experience and be baptized by a regular Baptist preacher, and be organized into a Baptist church.

Some who are called Baptists are becoming too mongrel. The great trouble with the Jews were their mixing with and imitating surrounding nations. Let us beware; a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

J. J. LANSDELL.

ANSWERS TO J. K. BLALOCK'S QUERIES.

Answer to the first: He should first be baptized, and then ordained.

Answer to the second: No.

Our Boys and Girls.

Many Christian parents are often perplexed by the difficulties of training a family of children, especially of directing them in the matter of amusements, and of shielding them from dangers to be met with in modern social life. A letter was lately published in the London Christian from "An Anxious Mother," stating her difficulties and asking for advice. A number of replies were received, some of which are here subjoined, in whole or in part. It is interesting to see how these fathers and mothers, while using all precautions and helps which parental love and wisdom suggest, feel deeply the importance of enlisting the power of divine grace in their efforts to secure the end in view.

"A Thankful Father" writes: "I have adopted the same plan with my boys as with the girls, and have always kept them away from scenes of dancing, acting, and, indeed, from Christmas parties altogether, feeling sure that such associations were not compatible with bringing them up in 'the nurture and admonition of the Lord.' The results have been most happy, my whole family of four sons and two daughters being brought to the Lord in their youth; they are now connected with the Christian church, and mostly engaged in happy service for the Master.

I should like, however, to add that, while not allowing them to choose their own amusements, I have endeavored to make home the happiest place on earth for them; and although I could not sanction football, cricket, and rowing clubs, on account of their associations, yet I encouraged all these exercises amongst my children and their young friends, at a good deal more expense in one way, but perhaps at less if all were taken into account. Good, bright singing and music, with carefully selected but readable books and periodicals always at hand, have also contributed to the end in view."

"A Happy Mother" writes: "We prayed that our children might be the Lord's, and we expected they would be, and therefore trained them for that service into which we believed he would call them. We did not consider worldly amusements would fit them for this. Charades we thought would only give them a taste for the theatre, dancing for all the vanities and follies of the world. We thought that if we took them to the edge of the precipice, and told them not to fall over, they most likely would fall, and so we had better keep them from the precipice. We also avoided all parties as they are generally understood. We guarded them, so far as we could, from worldly literature, associations, occupations, and pleasures. On the other hand, we put before them the chief end of man 'to glorify God and enjoy him forever;' and endeavored, by precept and practice, to show them the pleasure of caring for others, the joys of God's service, the rich treasures in his Word, and the satisfying portion in himself. We were careful also to make their home life bright and interesting, giving as many smiles and kind words as possible, that they might never connect gloom and sadness with separation to the service of God. We gave them to God, and he accepted them; in early life they were the subjects of his converting grace, and all are now earnestly engaged in his service. We sought for them 'first the kingdom,' and he has not been unmindful of his promise."

Another correspondent, "A Thankful Mother," who has brought up a large family of boys, all of whom have grown up Christian believers, speaks of her husband's endeavors to guide and interest them by taking them on excursions and entering into their pleasures. Another correspondent urges the provision of suitable "hobbies," and that parents should make themselves one with their children, thus encouraging their love and confidence. Yet another "Grateful Mother" says: "My husband and I were believers when we were married. As the Lord gave us children, we gave them back to him. As soon as they could understand, we taught them their need of a Saviour, and set before them the blessedness of a life spent for Jesus and eternity. We aimed also, both by precept and by example, to teach them that to live for God was one thing, and to live for the world quite another. To the praise and glory of God I can say that in the case of each, before they were fourteen years of age, all seven gave evidence of being born again. As to Christmas parties, etc., they are as numerous with us as in any other locality; but we have had no trouble with our children on that point. They never seemed to care for such things. If, however, as has sometimes been the case, they have expressed a wish to go somewhere or do something which, as parents, we were not quite certain was right, we never considered it wise sternly to refuse them permission, but we have reasoned with them, and if after all they did not seem satisfied, I have gone to the mercy-seat and told the Lord, and left it with him. Invariably, they would seek me out afterwards, and say, 'Mother, I think I won't go now.' We have entered into their troubles and helped them; also made the home bright and cheerful with music and sacred song. One dear girl departed to be with Christ at twenty-two, and a beloved son at twenty-four years of age, leaving behind them glorious testimonies to the power of Christ to save and keep; and this fills our souls with adoring praise to God."

Other correspondents make useful suggestions. A mother of six, three of them boys, who in youth professed themselves on the Lord's side, writes: "Our children were devoted to the Lord from their birth, trained for him, and taught, to the best of our ability, by precept and example in the home, that religion was a reality, salvation through Christ the only source of real joy, and obedience better than sacrifice. I always felt it was mockery to pray for our children to be delivered from temptation, if we knowingly placed them therein; therefore we never allowed them to go to any entertainments or parties which were even doubtful, teaching them that there was no real pleasure in going where anything was said or done likely to grieve our Saviour King, or if he could not go with us. At the same time, it was our endeavor to make home as bright and lively as possible, and to allow the young people to do everything we could that was a healthy recreation, or combined instruction with amusement."

"A father" writes: "Though the question is asked in regard to 'Our Boys,' I would rather put it 'Our Children.' The temptations and the difficulties for boys may be different in character and degree from those affecting girls; yet the principles involved in every case are the same, whether approached from the child's or from the parent's point of view. What is the duty of the parent in any doubtful case? What is the duty of the child? If we can arrive at an answer to these questions, as in the sight of God, I believe we shall also, if we seek always to be guided by him, find the path will be made clear, and that blessing will follow.

"What is the parents' duty? It is clearly to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Not merely in a general and indefinite way, but by making this the first and absolute end and aim before us, by prayer, by faith, by precept, by example. Two instances in the word of God have always been to us, the one a guide, the other a beacon, in steering through these troubled seas:—Abraham, 'I know him, that he will command his children, and his household after him,' (Gen. 18: 19); and Eli, who 'restrained them not,' (1 Sam. 3: 13). I believe the divine law is responsibility on the parents' side, with the right to command. The child's duty is as clearly to obey. But if they do not obey? Here a most difficult problem comes in. It is certain, command and obedience must be no spasmodic things, but the result of early training and continued habit, as in the sight of God. With this I believe in dependence on God's power that the result will be gained and the control be effective. At least, in our experience, we have thankfully to say 'Ebenezer' after a married life of nearly twenty-nine years. We have often been brought to an end of self, and yet this word has been made true. We have always endeavored to make our home as bright and happy as we could, whilst we have set our faces against the theatre, dancing, and questionable amusements, explaining that, though perhaps some might be engaged in by others, and arguments be put forwards for them, we were convinced that their tendency was to draw the soul away from Christ, and to entangle it in the world; and therefore we did not allow them in our family and our household. I ought perhaps to say, with great thankfulness to God for his mercy to us, that all our children, ten of whom are living, early gave their hearts to him, and that active Christian work, suitable to their ages and powers, has filled many an hour which otherwise would have been open for the claims of the world, and in this way lessened the questions that have from time to time arisen amongst the children on these subjects. As we can say 'Hitherto,' so I believe we shall find it true 'unto the end.'"—Christian Secretary.

No Sabbath.

Horace Greeley, when traveling in Switzerland some years before his death, wrote the following:

"I could wish you might stand an hour with me, on Sunday morning, in the labor market, in Geneva, and see the troops of dull, tired and saddened looking laborers, unwashed from the grime and sweat of one week's work of seven days, trudging off sluggishly and wearily, like dumb, driven cattle, to the work of the next week of seven days. 'Are these slaves?' you ask. Slaves! Bless you, no. These are free men. These are voters and citizens in a land of universal suffrage, under the freest government on earth, with an advanced and liberal constitution of the latest French invention, and with the modern improvements. No blue laws here. They once had blue laws in Geneva, but they have laughed them down long ago. This which you see is liberty—complete, untrammelled, personal liberty. Every one of these free citizens has a right, a proud, irrevocable right to work on Sunday if he chooses, and that is what it ends in for him, and that is what it will end in for you if you choose to make the costly experiment. The workingman who may work on Sunday, has got to work on Sunday when work is wanted. The right to work for each, depends upon the law of rest for all. Think of it, think twice, think of it again, then say if you will barter away your right, the American Sabbath, the [illegible] privilege of rich and poor, for this [illegible] French delusion, this continental [illegible] through which half of the people [illegible] toil that the other half may [illegible] ffector.

IRREVERENCE.

It only requires casual notice for one to reach the conclusion that many professed Christians about us are quite deficient in that reverence for God, for his worship, and his sanctuary, that ought always to distinguish the Christian life and profession. How often, even by professed Christians, is the name of God used lightly and flippantly in conversation; how often do younger Christians especially, enter God's house with the levity of those who enter the theatre; how often do older professors defile the floor of the sanctuary with offensive spittle; how often is the routine of worship gone through with as a schoolboy would his task, not because he loves it, but as a disagreeable necessity! This leads us to remark that Christianity—true Christianity—is a remarkably well balanced system. One striking peculiarity about the religion inculcated by the New Testament, is its freedom from form and ceremony, and its strong spirituality. Under the Old Dispensation, when men walked more by sight than by faith, there was of necessity a good deal of form and ceremony; but under the New, the ceremonial is almost entirely set aside, and the spiritual has taken its place.

It is a well known fact that Rome, and some who have more or less imitated her, have sought to retain in worship and religious life some of the defunct ceremonies and rites of the Old Dispensation, or else, those suggested by them. Hence the worship at altars or shrines; the kneeling before images of the Virgin, and other saints, tiresome pilgrimages to sacred spots etc., etc. This tendency, so well illustrated by Rome, shows one extreme to which modern Christian ideas may be, and are carried. When the Reformation burst upon Europe, and after Protestantism was firmly established, and with it a much purer form of Christianity, there were, here and there, seen tendencies toward an extreme that carries with some possible dangers. The rebound from Rome, and her semi-idolatrous worship, was then, and is yet, so hearty and thorough, that we have need to examine the limits to which we go, remembering that it is possible to carry the idea of religious liberty so far as that we are in danger of not properly recognizing divine authority, and thus reaching the border of questionable license and sometimes even that of irreverence. This is certainly no plea for Rome; but it is a reminder that extremes are generally wrong, and that true religion avoids them, and so should the followers of Christ.

The irreverence, then, that is often to be seen in the modern pulpit and pew is to be deplored. God, in Lev. 19: 30, uses these words: "Ye shall keep my Sabbaths and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord." The same command is repeated in Lev. 26: 2. We should remember that if it was right under the Old Dispensation for people to reverence God, his Sabbath, and his sanctuary, it is right now; and yet a good many who claim to worship and love God have but little respect for his house, and, sometimes, for his holy day. If, then, we seek for the causes of irreverence among our people, and especially among the rising generation, we would mention, among others, the following:—

First, the failure of parents to teach their children at home reverence for God, for his worship, for his sanctuary, &c. If children are suffered to grow up without a proper respect and reverence for God, it will be difficult or impossible for Sunday-school teachers or pastors to teach the same to them while they are under their influence. Especially should parents seek to instil this spirit into their children, when they have reached the age of accountability, and are converted unto Christ.

Another evident reason for the want of reverence often noticeable among modern Christians, is the constant ridicule of Christ's ministers, which is quite a pastime and a habit with some noted evangelists, and with some that are not such. This ridicule is often in the form of clownish mimicry, low comedy, or unsparing abuse and misrepresentation. Ridicule and laugh at the messenger of the Great King and you are in danger of laughing at him and the message he sends through those he calls to preach. We cannot afford to be misunderstood here. We are not claiming perfection for ministers of the gospel. They have [illegible] other men, and it is not [illegible] sometimes to mention them; but all [illegible] can be done without producing the [illegible] that they are its subjects to be [illegible] for popular [illegible]. Better be careful how you ridicule the humblest and plainest minister of Christ, if you are satisfied God has called him into the work in which he is engaged; for has not the great apostle written, "Now then we are embassadors for Christ; as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead be ye reconciled unto God." Go to, ye that visit communities full of abuse and ridicule for Christ's messengers there; and consider the harm that you do by flooding the community with a spirit of irreverence for God's house and a want of respect for his messengers from which the people will not recover for months after you are gone.

Another evident cause, so far as God's house is concerned, is the using of our churches for public lectures, church fairs, bazaars, &c. We are not, we hope, at all an extremist on this thing. A church building may at times be used for other purposes than that of actual worship, but those who use it should always be taught to respect their surroundings, and the sensational preacher, the public lecturer, and the magic lantern man, should receive scant encouragement in their effort to introduce the applause, the license, and the confusion of the theatre into the house of God. Ah, can no building on earth be found within the walls of which the weary may come to hold sweet communion with God in prayer without being interrupted by the noise and the traffic of the godless world! Let us properly guard the sanctity of our places of worship, and with it the spirit of respect and reverence for God's house, and for him to whom we have dedicated it. After Christ had purged the temple of old of those who were trafficing there under one pretense or another, there was a startling revelation in his words when he added, "It is written, 'my house shall be called a house of prayer;' but ye have made it a den of thieves."

Another cause that may be assigned, is the indiscriminate rushing into modern pulpits self called ministers, and the hasty gathering into the churches of unconverted material. How can a minister have proper reverence for God, and respect for his sanctuary and his worship, who presumes to call himself to the work by assuming some pompous sensational name, and by rushing into the pulpit almost before the odor of the gutter is off of him? And how can it be expected of the many unconverted people gathered into the churches that they will reverence God and his sanctuary? It is not in them to do so. These may be great on church fairs, charity balls, alphabet societies, &c., but not much on religion, and less in reverent and quiet obedience to God.

Again, in mentioning these causes, we naturally suggest to our readers the remedies that should be applied. We consider Mohammedanism a false system of faith, but it is said that a devotee of that system will not tread upon a slip of paper if he has any reason to think that the name Allah is printed on it. We may smile at some others for removing the hat and bowing at the door of their churches, or the devout Catholic for crossing himself as he enters the sanctuary where he worships; but a little more of the spirit of reverence would not hurt those who compose many of our Protestant churches.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

FAYETTEVILLE.

Just a month ago I was here to see the brethren about their subscriptions to the RECORDER. The day was pleasantly spent, the brethren promptly renewing their subscriptions in that cordial and appreciative manner that does so much to make my work pleasant and agreeable. Bro. Oliver took his last opportunity, while in his present charge, to render me substantial aid in my work by furnishing me his horse and buggy to visit those of his members who live at a distance. The brethren seemed to realize that they were to get them a new pastor, and were canvassing the matter with a spirit and caution that will hardly fail to get them a man who will take no step backward in the work, and at the same time will hold the same choice place in the affections of the members which has so liberally been accorded Bro. Oliver and others who have served the church in former years.

Fayetteville was once noted for being at the east end of the western plank road, and was the trading place for nearly the whole of Western North Carolina, as well as many from Tennessee. The oldest citizens here have seen more covered wagons than any men in, or perhaps out, of the State. In fact, this old town has a history which if written would be full of interest. There are some things about the Fayetteville people that are specially noticeable. They live for the most part in the same style of houses as they did fifty years ago. Men like Drs. Hinsdale, Duffy and Haigh, also Messrs. Williams, Rose, Kyle, and others of the representative citizens, ride in the same style of vehicles as were made in the town long before the whistle of the engine was ever heard in the town. Neither war, reconstruction, steam, electricity, nor the fashion of the world, has moved them to change their notions of what constitutes a thoroughbred Southern gentleman and true hospitality.

A recent fire has made it necessary for Bro. Frank Beasley to build some handsome brick stores on the corner near the market.

Fayetteville has, however, become a decided railroad center. Here are three passenger trains at the same time, so I take one for

MAXTON.

The name sounds rather Scotchy to expect to find very many Baptists here. However, by reference to my list I found enough names to warrant me in stopping off, which was the first visit I had ever made to the town. One of the first brethren I met was Bro. O. S. Hays, who took me in charge, and it was only a little while before I had settled with the old subscribers, and put a nice number of new ones on my list. The brethren here are making a hard pull to build a church. They have a very desirable lot, and already have a neat, well furnished chapel, which they are using for the present, and which will be for a Sunday-school room when the church is completed.

Maxton is, indeed, a genteel little town. The number of churches, brick stores and nice residences presents a very different aspect from the "Shoe Heel" of twenty years ago, when it was the tramping ground of Henry Berry Lowry, and occupied principally by grog-shops with all their attendant evils. What has wrought this great change? The earnest toil and sacrifice of a few men have caused the gospel to be preached here. Just that and nothing more. And Satan with his allies have been forced to take up their line of march. My work over, Bro. Fulford very kindly carried me to Laurinburg, where we spent a pleasant afternoon with Bro. Kesler. Bro. Kesler treated me just as I expected him to do. He didn't say, "If I can do anything for you while you are in town I shall be very glad to do so," but picked up his hat and said, "Let's go see the brethren," and the consequence was I renewed every subscriber in the town, besides getting some new names, which he appreciated fully as much as I did. The church here is a perfect model of neatness and comfort, and is fully as expensive as most of our town churches ought to be. This was prayer-meeting night, and though the weather was very inclement, yet we had a fairly good congregation. The pastor's talk would have answered well for a Sunday morning sermon. And here I will say that I have observed when a pastor prepares well for his prayer-meeting service he always has a good prayer meeting, and not only that, but a live, working church. I was delighted to find Bro. Kesler so pleasantly and comfortably fixed at home. He didn't succeed, however, in concealing that he felt just a little remorse that he didn't get married a few years sooner than he did.

Following the trail of these Scotch Baptists,—for there are many more of them than I had supposed; I thought nearly all the Scotch were Presbyterians,—at twelve o'clock Thursday I found myself in LUMBERTON.

It was not last Thursday, however, for after I had done what I went to do, I did what I didn't go to do; so I decided it was the best thing for me to remain over just three weeks longer. Don't get frightened. I am not going to afflict you with any account of bruised back and wrenched hips. The suffering is in the past, at least some of it, and the kind attentions which I received from the brethren and sisters in Lumberton, and the hope of soon being able to do my work, have done much to compensate for all the suffering I had. I have received a number of letters from brethren in different parts of the State, and the kind expressions which they contained will ever be a cause for grateful appreciation on my part, and I hope may help me to be more faithful in my work than I have heretofore been.

In this I am in the closest harmony with a well known brother who wrote me that he was glad, since I had to be hurt, that I was thrown from a hack instead of being knocked down by a calf, and that he hoped I would devote part of the time I was down to the making of a new speech for the RECORDER. I can afford to refer to this, as it was the only mean letter I received, and it didn't come from the editor either.

I had an opportunity of learning much about our work, not only in Lumberton, but all over Robeson county, for brethren Martin, Proctor, and other brethren in Lumberton, seem to know no difference in the interest in their own town and in other portions of the county.

The new school building in Lumberton is just about completed. The object was not to erect a handsome building. It, however, makes a good appearance—is substantial in every particular, and well adapted to school work. The first session will open in the fall, and I feel confident that no school in the State has a more promising future. As the educational center of the county, it will afford the boys and girls of Robeson county the best opportunity for an education at the lowest possible cost. And not only this, but Wake Forest and our Baptist female colleges will, after a few years, have their patronage increased by the establishment of this school.

It is really refreshing to find so many of the brethren in this section who are looking ahead with a view of increasing the amount and efficiency of our work. If these brethren, who are trying not only to reach a better stage of progress themselves, but who are trying to inspire and help their brethren to do the same, can only escape the firing of the "light infantry" who see the desire of being "boss" or "bishop" in every man who exhibits any desire or capacity to do something, it will be fortunate for the cause, and in a few years Baptist principles and Baptist interest will take possession of a section in which a few years ago they only had a name to live.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....Rev. E. P. Ellington of Madison says he is still preaching but his voice is not fully restored.

....Rev. C. W. Blanchard has moved to East Durham and is located in the midst of his work.

....Bro. John W. Purefoy has moved from Salida, Colo., to Pueblo, Colo., and reports "all well."

....Rev. D. B. Gray, D. D., of Miss., has accepted the call to the First Baptist church Birmingham, Ala.

....Bro. E. K. Proctor, Jr., of Lumberton, was in the city last Monday, and paid us a pleasant visit.

....Bro. W. G. Ferrebee of Belcross, N. C., was in the city last week and called to see us last Saturday.

....Our church work is moving on. We receive members nearly every service. Collections good.—John C. Hocutt.

....The meeting at the West End Mission, Raleigh, conducted by Bro. Stringfield, goes on this week with good interest.

....Rev. T. C. Buchanan of Vickery's Creek Ga., says: "I cannot do without the RECORDER. It comes to me weekly as a letter from home."

....Bro. Oliver Summerlin of Mt. Olive, N. C., says: "The RECORDER is a welcome visitor in my home and we cannot afford to do without it."

....We learn from the Asheville Baptist that the West End church, recently organized in that city, has called Rev. W. P. Southern as its pastor.

....We desire you to aid us (the Convention in its mission work) with your prayers, with your influence, and with your money. —Thomas Meredith, 1830.

....Cards are out for the marriage of Miss Nellie Lee Horne and Dr. Eugene Herbert McCullers, March the 22d, 1893, at the Baptist church in Clayton, N. C.

....Rev. Carter Helm Jones has accepted the call to the McFerran Memorial church, Lousiville, Ky., and is expected to take charge about the 1st of May.

....The Chicago University has offered the chair of botany to President John M. Coulter, of Indiana University, at a salary of $7,000.—Journal and Messenger.

....All missions are substantially the same, but the primary object of the Convention, at present, is to repair the waste places of our own State.—Thomas Meredith, 1830.

....Rev. E. M. Poteat of New Haven, Conn., writes: "I baptized a Congregational pastor last Sunday evening, (12th inst.,) as Philip baptized the Eunuch—on a profession of his faith at the baptistery."

....Rev. J. W. Wildman and his Wadesboro brethren have greatly improved their parsonage, paid off a large part of the debt on their church, and are now arranging to build a nice mission chapel near the town.

....The Board of Missions (Western N. C. Convention) at its last meeting appointed Rev. D. B. Nelson Sunday-school Missionary, to hold Sunday-school Institutes in the bounds of the Convention.—Asheville Baptist.

....Rev. M. L. Green of Ahoskie, N. C., writes to us offering his thanks for our editorial in the paper of the 22d of February. He also says the next Bertie Union Meeting will be at Pine Forest, Northampton county, N. C.

....Bro. J. H. Tucker of Asheville, N. C., called in to see us last Monday. He reports the First church as being in excellent condition. Pastor J. L. White has received members every Sunday for several weeks past.

....Pastor Broughton, and Rev. C. A. G. Thomas of Greensboro, have held a good meeting at Broad Street, Winston. Bro. Thomas did the preaching. At last accounts they reported about one hundred professions of religion.

....It is the liberal view of things, the determined spirit of zealous and benevolent enterprise, the resolve to put forth an humble, but well directed effort, in behalf of the interest of the denomination in the State, that have led to the organization of the Convention.—Thomas Meredith, 1830.

....Dr. J. W. M. Williams of Baltimore, was to start on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Gore, wife of Prof. J. W. Gore of Chapel Hill, C., on the 15th inst; and we suppose the Dr. is now at Chapel Hill for rest and recuperation.

....Rev. Rufus Ford and his church are making substantial progress. They have Rev. J. W. Rose as their missionary, devoting his entire time to six or seven mission points in Craven county, and the church has added $100 a year to Bro. Ford's salary.

....Bro. J. F. Cheek of Mars Hill, N. C., says that Rev. T. M. Honeycutt has been sick two months—is suffering from rheumatism, and hardly able to move himself. He further says the college work is going on vigorously under the control of Prof. T. M. Hufham.

....Dr. J. M. Frost resigned, as Corresponding Secretary of the Sunday-school Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, and Dr. T. P. Bell of Richmond, has been elected to fill the place. No better selection, in our opinion, could have been made.—C. Durham, Vice-President of Sunday school Board for North Carolina.

....The names of fifteen brethren have been received who wish to be appointed delegates to the Southern Baptist Convention. Are there not others who wish to go? If so, send in your names, brethren. Notice will be given in time for each delegate to send his own name to the committee on homes.—C. Durham, Cor. Sec.

....The American Baptist Year Book for 1893, with the compliments of the editor, Dr. Lansing Burrows of Augusta, Ga., is before us. It comes to us with an increased amount of valuable statistical information. The book contains 278 pages. Any one desiring a copy can get it by applying to the American Baptist Publication Society, 1420 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. Price twenty-five cents.

....The righteous souls of many good brethren have been vexed, for a long time, with the custom of many of our churches of sampling pastors. But recently some of our popular preachers have turned out as samplers of churches. In one way and another they manage to get themselves invited to a number of churches, and if perchance they find one to suit them they will accept its pastorate.

....The Western Recorder says: "It no more helps a preacher to parade his rejected calls than it helps a lady to parade her rejected offers of marriage. It makes the impression that he has coquetted with the churches, and also that he cannot be moved from his present field. Often the announcement that a preacher had declined one call has prevented his receiving another call he would have been glad to accept."

....Mr. Moody says: "Almost every preacher who can't preach goes to writing in religious papers, telling other preachers how they ought to preach." Of course. It is ever so. It is so much easier to tell other people how to do things than to do them. People who do not edit papers always know best how papers should be edited. People who have no children always know best how children ought to be reared.—Western Recorder.

....The commencement of Leonard Medical School will take place Wednesday night, March 29. It is expected that there will be ten medical students that will graduate. Dr. Chase of Philadelphia will deliver the address to the graduating class. On the following night, March 30, the graduating exercises of the Law Department will take place. Judge McRae of the Supreme Court of North Carolina will deliver the address on that occasion.

....Rev. C. A. G. Thomas of Greensboro, N. C., writes of the meeting in Winston thus: "It was a great pleasure to be with the brethren. I never spent a more delightful time in a meeting in my life. The association with such brethren as H. A. Brown, Broughton and others was one of the privileges of my life. Bro. Brown is looking after his new church plans. There is a future for the Baptists of Winston."

....Mrs. G. W. Marsh died at her home in this city on Wednesday afternoon, March 15th. A husband and seven children—two by the first marriage and five by the last—are bereaved by this dispensation of Providence. She was a native of Sampson county, but has resided in Raleigh about four years. She was a member of the First Baptist church in this city. For many years she had been in feeble health. The funeral services took place from the family residence on Friday afternoon last, and was largely attended.

....We learn from the Religious Herald that Rev. T. P. Bell has been invited to Nashville, Tenn., by the Sunday-school Board for consultation in regard to his accepting the Secretaryship of that Board. We wish to add our hearty commendation to such an arrangement. He is the very man for the position. (Later).—We learn from the Richmond Dispatch that Rev. T. P. Bell has accepted the Secretaryship of the Sunday-school Board, and will take charge about the 1st of May. Our congratulations to the Board.

....It is quite curious to observe the indisposition of churches to call men who are recommended to them. A recommendation almost amounts to a disqualification. The modern idea is for the committee appointed to look out for a pastor to be immensely secretive and superbly exclusive. It knows everything and looms far out of sight of advice. It is the glory of a church to swing the scalps of the rejected at its belt and hang them up as the proofs of her popularity. She also shows them to the brother-elect when he comes on to take charge, as a reminder of how fortunate he was in being chosen and how easy it would be to get another man if he does not toe the mark.—W. E. Hatcher in Baltimore Baptist.

Organization.—The "Chowan Missionary Society," "The Neuse Baptist Missionary Society," "The Raleigh Baptist Missionary Society," and "The North Carolina Baptist Benevolent Society," with other local missionary societies, were all merged finally into one body, viz.: "The Baptist State Convention of North Carolina."

This organization made it possible to unify Baptist ideas, plans and work, to inspire confidence, zeal and liberality, and to use their united wisdom, influence and means for the accomplishment of their objects. At their first session their total contributions were for

State Missions	$220.62
Education	35.00

1840.

During the past ten years the BIBLICAL RECORDER and Wake Forest College were established, and the brethren in all parts of the State now understand each other and know how to work together.

The Convention has this year three missionaries, viz: R. Jacks, W. Jones and W. Brooks.

CONTRIBUTIONS.

State Missions	$761.50
Foreign Missions	816.37
Education	471.58
Bible distribution	190.00
Endowment W. F. College	4,382.86
Total	$6,522.31

At this session M. T. Yates was received as a beneficiary to be sent to Wake Forest College.

In a report, Dr. Samuel Wait said: "I may remark that additional acquaintance with the churches in the State only confirms me in the opinion, long since expressed, that nothing is wanting to secure the genuine co-operation of our churches, in behalf of all the objects of the Convention, but correct information. This is proven by facts."

At this meeting, the Board of Missions said: "To inaugurate an effective system of State Missions in North Carolina would require all of the time and all the talents of the wisest and ablest man among us. The enterprise of State Missions is the great work before us as a people. The prosperity of all other interest is dependent upon the zeal and fidelity with which this cause is prosecuted." Elder J. D. Hufham was, at this session, made the Corresponding Secretary, to give his entire time to the work of the Convention.

In 1880 J. R. Jones, R. T. Vann, W. T. Jordan, J. H. Booth, J. B. Boone, A. L. Stough, J. E. King, T. J. Rooke, J. B. Richardson, C. C. Haymore, J. D. Hufham, E. L. Davis, W. B. Knight and T. Harrison—14—were the missionaries of the Convention.

The above figures have been taken from the reports as published in the minutes of the Convention, and give some idea of the development of our cause in the State. In the minutes of the Baptist Associations in this State for 1892 there is reported, as given for all objects by the churches last year, including pastors' salary, $308,382.15.

The contributions for church buildings, as a rule, are not reported in the minutes of the Associations. In most of the Associations the minutes do not show more than two-thirds of what is given for all the objects combined. Brethren frequently write to me for information about our development. This publication of facts and figures may aid them in their work.

Financial Statement.

As the Conventional year 1892-'3 draws to a close, inquiries become more numerous as to the financial condition of the Foreign Mission Board. The following figures will answer these inquiries:—

Receipts May 1, 1892, to March 15, 1893	$101,627.20
Receipts May 1, 1891, to March 15, 1892	70,156.50
Increase over last year	$ 31,470.70

If all this increase was available for the current expenses of the work, the Board would be in easy circumstances. But of this increase, $14,028 32 belongs to the "Permanent" Centennial Fund, and cannot be used for current expenses; and $13,800 has been given for the "Centennial" Fund, for enlargement of the work. So that the increase in receipts this year over last, for the regular work of the Board, is only $3,642 38.

This amount is utterly inadequate to meet the deficit of over $16 000 brought over from last year's work to this.

To enable the Board to meet its obligations to banks and individual lenders, amounting at this time to $26.000, and to keep in tact the Centennial Funds, will require very large gifts from the churches to its regular work from this time until April 30th, when the Treasurer's books close.

Let us all see to it that the close of the Centennial year shall find the Board owing not one dollar to any man or corporation on account of its regular work. To help to bring about this desirable end is the duty, and should be esteemed the privilege, of every Baptist in our Southern Zion.

Life and Death of Rev. E. D. Johnson.

While I realize that any effort on my part will fail to do justice to the subject of this sketch, I also feel that something more than a mere statement of his death is justly due him.

Bro. Johnson was born in Bladen county, N. C., August 6th, 1823. His parents, Samuel Johnson and Sarah, a sister of Rev. Elias Davis, deceased, were poor. His father was a Methodist, and his mother a Baptist. At the age of seventeen he was baptized into the fellowship of Hickory Grove church by Rev. McFall.

About that time he went to Robeson county to get employment to assist his parents in getting a living, where he remained most of the time until he was married to Sarah C. Humphrey in the year 1849. At that time and for some years following, he was not worth any more property than it would have taken to pay his debts.

He was ordained to the gospel ministry in the year 1855 at Raft Swamp church by Revs. F. Prevatt and I. Stone, and was very persevering and active both in the ministry and in his secular affairs. While, as has been the case with many others, his education was very limited, he was very apt and quick to learn; so that he became well posted on matters of general importance. He was a man of great mental and physical power. As a preacher, he was popular, and always had every Sunday engaged during his ministry. He preached in Robeson, Bladen, Cumberland, Sampson and Columbus counties, and a part of South Carolina.

At the time of the beginning of his death sickness, and until it was evident he could not live, he was pastor of four churches. Of Hickory Grove church, of which this humble scribe has the honor of being his successor, he was pastor for thirty years. He was for a long time a reader of the RECORDER.

He had a mind of his own and was not easily turned away from what he thought to be right, even though it might render him unpopular. With due respect to him, he did not advocate ministerial education, but that he was opposed to education, but from the fact he believed that the inducements held out to young men are calculated to cause unregenerate or uncalled persons to enter the ministry. Neither was he an advocate of State Missions, from the fact he did not believe the appropriations made by the Board were equal. Foreign Missions and Associational Missions were first with him.

He believed a stated salary for a preacher was contrary to Scripture; hence, he never received a great deal for preaching, although, had he seen fit, his ability as a preacher was sufficient to have enabled him to command a good salary.

He was for a while treasurer of Robeson county. While he began poor and did not preach for a stated salary, still the Lord blessed him, so that he reared and settled seven sons and three daughters, besides rearing several orphans. At the time of his death, Feb. 7th, 1893, he was worth about twenty-five thousand dollars.

While he was popular with his churches, his views differing with many of our leading brethren on methods of work rendered him a little unpopular with them. But in the face of all these things, he had been a great worker for the salvation of souls.

He preached his last sermon at his home church (Great Marsh) from the text, Ephesians 6: 13—18, the Christian's complete armor. He had faith to believe that the Lord would give his servants that which was right; so that his life of faith and success should be an encouragement to others to put their trust in the Lord.

He left a devoted companion, ten children, forty grand-children, and a large number of other relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but surely their loss is his eternal gain.

In the absence of the writer, who had the honor of being called to preach the funeral, the services were conducted by my esteemed brother, Rev. J. D. Clark, who read the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians and the hymn, "Servant of God, well done," &c.

While for near two years Bro. Johnson was in such poor health he could not preach regularly, and for some time not at all, yet he often talked on passages of Scripture, thus showing that while the body was suffering and wasting away, his mind dwelt on the soul-saving Gospel that he had long preached with great delight and power.

His place will be hard to fill, and we feel sad at the thought of meeting him no more on earth; but by God's grace we hope to meet him in the "sweet by and by."

My Last Year's Work.

Rev. C. T. Bailey:—I have been thinking for some time of writing you a short sketch of my last year's work.

I moved to Bladenborough amongst some very good brethren about the 20th of November, 1892. I preached at a station on the C. C. R. R., by the name of Yorkville. I was invited to follow the Sunday-school institutes up and preach for them, and in the fall I was requested, in the absence of the superintendent of the University, to act as superintendent at Sandy Grove church.

I also attended both the Cape Fear and Bladen County Associations. Besides I attended all the sessions of the Central Union Meetings, and made several visits in destitute sections of Columbus county.

I also supplied for Rev. J. M. Register at his churches last fall, and helped him to protract at Mt. Pleasant, Bethel and Zion's Tabernacle churches in Robeson county. I aided Rev. R. M. Sessoms in protracting at Sandy Grove church, and Rev. R. M. Hilburn at French's Creek church.

I moved back to French's Creek about the 20th of November, 1892.

I am preaching for Benevolence church this year in Columbus county, and there are two or three other stations at which I expect to preach. We have no Union Meeting or University in this section. We are to meet to-day to try to organize an University, and I expect soon to try to get our churches to organize a Union Meeting.

Brethren, for the Lord's sake who died for us, let us go to work for him on all lines of Christian duty. A. J. BOBBITT

From Goldsboro, N. C.

Dear Recorder:—My work with the Second church here is in a very hopeful condition. We have just closed a very successful series of meetings. Rev. T. J. Taylor of Warrenton was with us and preached the gospel with great simplicity and power, and won the hearts of all. The influence of the meeting will be felt for good in years to come.

The First church, under the leadership of their talented and consecrated pastor, Rev. J. H. Edwards, is moving forward along all lines and doing a fine work.

God bless the dear RECORDER.

Yours in Christ,

G. L. FINCH.

Death of a Faithful Servant of the Lord.

Elder J. W. Smith was sixty-one years old when, after a brief illness, he passed into rest on Saturday the 4th inst.

He was born in Columbus county, March 25th, 1832, where he spent all of his life until, about a year ago, he came to Wilmington where his life ended. He spent the last eighteen years of his life preaching the old-fashion, plain gospel. He was loved by every one who knew him intimately. His works, while they have been in an unusual, humble and quiet way, will live on forever. He was a poor man in this world's goods, and leaves a widow and eight children, all of whom are true believers and members of the Baptist church. Our sympathies and prayers are enlisted for them.

J. T. JENKINS.

The Great Meeting in Winston.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—One of the greatest meetings in the history of Winston, especially among Baptists, has just closed at Broad Street. Monday, March 6th, Brother Thomas of Greensboro came up and began the preaching. We had been holding a special song and prayer service for a week prior to his coming. The church was ready, their hearts prepared, and their expectations high, when the special work of reaching the unsaved was begun. And from the first, even before Thomas came, the converting power of the Spirit was felt. Night after night the unsaved were gathered in until within twelve days we had been instrumental in leading more than one hundred souls to Christ. At first we reached our own community and Sunday-school, but soon the influence of the gospel as proclaimed so powerfully by Bro. Thomas began to take hold upon the entire city until we grasped the city. Our congregations were large—at times people were turned away. We relied upon no "claptrap" but upon the plain word and persona', face-to-face work on the part of Christian people.

Let me say a word for Brother Thomas. Never has this city had a more earnest, forcible and practical presentation of the gospel of Christ than during the few days of our meeting. Our people all love him, the community respect him, and all together we pray God's blessings upon him.

As to the number joining the church, it is at present hard to tell; thus far we have received into Broad Street for baptism twenty-five, several more by restoration, and some by letter. We confidently expect to realize as many as fifty additions. The First church will get some, and the other churches, of course, will get a part. Next Sunday I'll preach to the young converts upon the theme, "What church shall I join?"

Altogether, the Broad Street people are wonderfully helped up. Since our pastorate here, one year last Sunday, there have been about two hundred conversions. But the work is just begun. The great question is, how shall these babes be trained in Christian work and thus be enabled to hold out and bear fruit for Christ? And in order that this may be done, we are going to begin a regular training class for Friday nights, when I will instruct my young folks in the doctrines of the church and Christian living. Also in order that we may hold on to the young people, we are going to organize an industrial training school, to be operated by the church. It will be a night school, and competent instructors will be employed; and those of our number whose chances are bad for improvement along this line will, by this means, have a chance for development. And a little later in the spring, we propose to buy a tent and take it into Old Salem and hold evangelistic meetings, thus taking the gospel to the people who will not come to the church—but excuse me, somebody says this sounds "puffy."

L. G. BROUGHTON.

Winston, March 14, 1893.

This and That.

Bro. Bailey:—Suffer a word from this end of South Carolina, (Edgefield county.)

The county is remarkable for several things—good and bad. It is the native place of many distinguished men, among whom was the sainted Dr. Royall. Before the war there was much wealth here, and it is not all gone yet. The Baptists are largely in the majority, and represent most of the wealth. But these Baptist churches are not well developed in church work. There are many noble exceptions to this statement though. I was thinking chiefly of my own field. Perhaps the chief defect is a want of discipline. This Association does not compare favorably, I am told, with many others in the State.

You have already noted in the RECORDER that has resigned the care of Edgefield church, and accepted the call to Union, S. C. He writes me that his surroundings there are very pleasant, and prospects hopeful. He is a vigorous, thoughtful preacher, and worthy of a good field. His work here was as successful, perhaps more so, than any of his predecessors for twenty years. This I get from a leading lawyer and deacon of our church. Bro. Boothe felt that he could do a better work at Union, and went there. He left behind him in Edgefield many appreciative friends and warm admirers.

BRO. J. N. BOOTHE

SOUTH CAROLINA PREACHERS.

I met many of the pastors at the State Convention last fall, though I have not been permitted to form many intimate acquaintances among them. Yet I am most favorably impressed by them. They are so cordial, and know how to get so close to a strange brother that happens to come among them.

There seems to be an utter lack of jealousy among the preachers—no "clerical ring" or "bossism" at all. A fraternal bond holds them together, and they protest against any one's breaking the circle, unless it be to let another in.

A CALL TO PREACH.

In what does it consist? Can a brief, intelligible answer be formulated? There is certainly a demand for it. From away back the subject has been shrouded in mystery. I speak from the record when I say many a young man "called to preach" has struggled with this matter for years, wishing to do his duty, but doubting his "call." These honest doubts have restrained him, and years, often the best years of his life, have been lost to this work. Doubtless many a one is troubled in a similar way today. I do not ask for a learned disquisition, but for a plain, common-sense statement of the essentials to a "call." Will Drs. Carter, Pritchard, C. E. Taylor, and others, of age and experience, give us in the RECORDER just this in about two hundred words? Many will hail it with pleasure.

Edgefield, S. C. J. M. WHITE.

The Anson and the Richmond Associations Unite.

For a year or two the question of uniting the Baptist churches of Anson and Richmond counties into one Association has been agitated. At one time a large number of the churches composing these two bodies belonged to the Pee Dee, an Association which then embraced a very large territory. As the spirit of progressive religion took hold in this section, the idea prevailed among the leading brethren that the work before them could be best accomplished by smaller and more compact organizations. Hence in the interest of convenience and efficiency, the old historic body gave off churches to form new Associations.

First, the churches in Anson county, then those in Stanly, later those in Richmond, and finally those in Montgomery organized County Associations. This division into smaller bodies, at least with respect to some, proved unsatisfactory. Particularly was this true of the Richmond. While that Association has won the applause of the State because of its active and liberal spirit; and while the county is quite large and fairly populous, yet owing to the preoccupation of the ground by other religious denominations, there are but few Baptist churches in the county, and so the annual and Union meetings have lacked the interest of larger gatherings. Hence, the brethren came to see that the best interests of their churches as well as the cause in general demanded a union with some other Association.

Having learned that brethren in other sections have been thinking along the same line and are desirous of association with larger bodies, I have thought it might be of interest, and benefit, too, to them and yet others, if I should go somewhat into the details of the meeting at which this union was formed.

After the matter had been agitated in private, and considered in the Union Meetings, and it had become sufficiently evident that a union of the two Associations was desirable and possible the Richmond Association took action in favor of union by submitting the question to a vote of the local churches. Their Executive Committee was instructed, in case the churches voted favorably, to submit a proposition to the last session of the Anson Association. Owing to hindering providences, the Committee failed to meet with us, but in January last the Unions of the two counties met in joint session at Lilesville, when the matter was again considered; and the meeting, assembled in committee of the whole, passed a resolution requesting the Moderator of the Anson Association to ask the churches to send delegates to Wadesboro March 9th, 1893, empowered to decide whether the two Associations should be united.

Accordingly delegates from fourteen of the twenty-one churches composing the Anson Association convened in Wadesboro at the time appointed. No letters were presented, but the delegates were enrolled and the body duly organized. The question of constitutional difficulties being raised, it was decided by the Moderator that inasmuch as this was not a regular but a called session to consider a matter never contemplated when the constitution was formed, and as the body was convened together, the will of the churches with respect to a matter about which they had been asked to give an opinion, the constitution could not hinder the sovereign churches from expressing their opinion about an extra constitutional matter. This ruling, which seemed to meet the approval of the body, opened the way for a full consideration of the main question. Pastors Kesler and Johnson spoke for the Richmond Association. A motion was made in favor of the union of the two bodies. The vote being taken by churches, it was found that thirty three delegates favored the union and nine opposed it. The proposition to unite was then made unanimous, and the body adjourned to partake of an ample dinner which the ladies of our church served in the parsonage yard.

Before adjourning, a committee was appointed to consider and report on matters of detail not yet considered. They reported at the afternoon session, when it was decided to call the new Association—the Pee Dee, Until that time the Executive Boards will perform their work separately in their respective sections, but will make a joint report to the Association, which will meet at Morven in October. At that meeting the previously-arranged program of the Anson Association will be observed. It was further decided to hold the next fifth Sunday meeting (April 28-30) in Rockingham; and that the program be arranged with special reference to the Sunday-school work.

A pleasant feature of the meeting was the presence of Dr. Durham, who preached at night to the comfort and edification of our people. J. W. WILDMAN.

To South River Association.

Dear Brethren:—Let me call your attention to the following important facts:

1. One half of the population in our bounds have not the Old Testament Scriptures, and one-fourth have not even the New Testament. The most prominent people on the public roads have the Bible. The poor backwoods people are neglected.

2. Those poor people have souls for whom Christ died and are precious in his sight. In a contest, either at the point of the bayonet, or at the ballot box, their power is equal to any. Is not here food for thought? Who is to blame? You say they are to blame; they deserve no better. That principle would have locked our Saviour away from the word. Many cannot read; who shall look after them?

3. In the teeth of grave [illegible] entered upon colportage work in [illegible] I will be found, D. V. Will you [illegible] In giving the people the word? [illegible] far behind others in this work. [illegible] main so? God forbid.

Despotism in New Jersey.

On another page our staff correspondent has presented the outlines of the scandalous drama which, during the past fortnight, has engaged the talents of the corrupt Legislature of New Jersey. For audacity, for diabolical ingenuity, the performance passes credence. The semi-criminals who make the laws at Albany have touched at various times what we supposed to be the lowest point possible; but in their own trade they have been outdone by their colleagues across the river. As a specimen of brazen impudence, the action of the Jersey legislators would inspire a mediæval tyrant with unholy thoughts of envious admiration. By comparison, the devices employed in Louisiana to influence public opinion in favor of the re-charter of the lottery, dwindle to mere child's play. It's one thing to go about buying the suffrages of a State openly, as was done in Louisiana, and quite a different thing to enact in secret laws which at the time are known to be repugnant to the vast majority of the community. If dignity can be applied to such performances, then it is all on the side of the South, upon the principle that more credit lies with the highwayman than with the common sneak thief. Recent history furnishes no incident more thoroughly disgusting, more pitiably cowardly, than the one which occurred a fortnight since in Trenton, when a handful of men, the bribed puppets of professional gamblers, sought in defiance of decency to set the well known will of the State at naught. They triumphed temporarily, but only by resorting to the expedients of bullies, and by employing against the people the very laws which the people had caused to be enacted for their own protection.

But if the situation in Trenton has its sinister, it also has its bright side, and while the tyranny of the gambler legislators is to be deplored, the chance is that more good than evil will come of the crisis. The passage of the racing bill has had the effect of unifying the decent citizens of New Jersey as no other event in the history of their State has unified them. The Citizens' League has been especially active in the matter; but the churches have not been behindhand. On Sunday week, the day following the Senate's action, the popular indignation was proclaimed with no uncertain sound from hundreds of New Jersey pulpits, and we notice with pride that the ministers of our own denomination rose promptly and effectively to the performance of their duty. The mammoth mass-meeting of the outraged citizens held in Trenton on Wednesday was a triumph in its kind. Arrangements had been made to hold it in the Taylor Opera House, but when the delegates arrived—and they came in large numbers from all quarters of the State—they marched to the Assembly Chamber, and the meeting was held there in spite of the speaker's energetic refusal to allow the chamber to be used for such a purpose. (The speaker, we may remind our readers, makes no effort to conceal his friendship for the racing men, and brazenly holds his post as their representative and tool.) The Trenton meeting, as well as others held in different parts of the State, are having their effect, and as we go to press the prospect is bright for the passage of the repeal bills which were introduced on the Monday following the Senate's action.

To remind our friends in New Jersey, as some of our daily contemporaries have been reminding them, that the passage of the racing bills might have been foreseen from the character of the men elected last fall to sit at Trenton, would be to remind them of something perhaps true enough, but of something from which at the present stage of the proceedings very little profit could be extracted. Moreover, while the extreme penalty for their neglect of ordinary civic duties has been paid by our friends across the river, the causes which produce the unsavory situation are not peculiar to New Jersey, but exist in quite as real, if in a less aggravated, form in a dozen other States which might easily be named. It is, for instance, not inconceivable that a crisis such as the one which occurred in Trenton might not be enacted in Albany. The material is ready at hand; and all that is necessary is that there should appear, whether in or out of the Legislature matters little, a leader who should possess the requisite endowment of audacity. Indifferentism—that most dangerous of modern diseases—has brought us under this shadow of potential disaster. It is possible, of course, as has been done in New Jersey, to reclaim, at the eleventh hour, the good name of the State; but the method involves an unusual expenditure of energy—an amount which, by comparison with the facility, similar results might have been secured before matters had gone so far—wasteful and extravagant. We do not wish to be captious, and we especially desire to emphasize our appreciation of the splendid protest made by the party of good government in New Jersey, but when all that is generous and spontaneous has been said on this score, the thought still bears itself in—how much easier, with what enormously less wear and tear the same results had been achieved, had good citizens performed their honest duties at the polls. Jersey, we take it, has read herself a lesson out of the volume of her own bitter experience, and will profit by the perusal; but she has also revealed the goal to which many other States, with their corrupt Legislature, are tending.—*N. The Little Shoeblack.

Many years ago there lived a little boy in Oxford whose business it was to clean the boots of the students of the famous university there. He was poor, but bright and [illegible]. This lad, whose name was George [illegible], was a favorite with the students. [illegible] and hearty way of doing things, [illegible] habits and faithful deeds, [illegible] admiration. They saw in him [illegible] of a noble man, and they pro[illegible] him a little every day.

[illegible] George accepted their proposal, and he soon surprised his teachers by his rapid progress.

"A boy who can blacken boots well can study well," said a student.

"Keen as a briar," said another, "and pluck enough to make a hero."

But we cannot stop to tell of his patience and perseverance. He went on, step by step, just as the song goes—

"One step and then another," until he became a man—a learned and eloquent man—who preached the gospel to admiring thousands. The little bootblack became the renowned pulpit orator, George Whitfield.—Young Reaper.

A Straight Verdict.

A coroner's jury returned a verdict that a certain prominent man had died of alcoholism. "Your verdict is absurd," some one said to the coroner.

"Why so?"

"Because he was never known to drink."

"That's a fact."

"He never went into a saloon."

"You are right."

"Then why do you say he died from the effects of alcoholism, when we all know he was shot?"

"That's all very true," the coroner replied, "but the man who shot him was drunk. Don't talk to me, if you please. I know my business. Deceased was killed by whisky."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Live to Some Purpose.

We have only once to live; therefor let us live to some purpose. The day that dawned this morning will never dawn again. The opportunities which it brought with it will never come again; and if we fail to fill it with the service it requires of us, there will be no possibility of returning into it to repair the mischief. The wheels of Time's chariot have ratchets to them, and they move only forward.—William M. Taylor.

Do not quench the Spirit by undue repression of what you feel. Do not grieve the Spirit by repeating mechanically the phrases that express what you once felt, but do not feel now. Let him that readeth understand.—Nashville Advocate.

Do not be concerned about the question, "Shall we know each other in heaven?" when you pass your next door neighbor without speaking to him.

Sow good services; sweet remembrances will grow from them.

Easily Taken Up

Cod Liver Oil as it appears in Scott's Emulsion is easily taken up by the system. In no other form can so much fat-food be assimilated without injury to the organs of digestion.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites has come to be an article of every-day use, a prompt and infallible cure for Colds, Coughs, Throat troubles, and a positive builder of flesh.

EPILEPSY OR FITS

Can this disease be cured? Most physicians say No—I say, Yes; all forms and the worst cases. After 30 years study and experiment I have found the remedy.—Epilepsy is cured by it; cured, not subdued by opiates—the old, treacherous, quack treatment. Do not despair. Forget past impositions on your purse, past outrages on your confidence, past failures. Look forward, not backward. My remedy is of to-day. Valuable work on the subject, and large bottle of the remedy—sent free for trial. Mention Post-Office and Express address.

—IS AN—

Excellent Advertising Medium.

Its circulation is large and growing. It is our purpose, as it always has been, to keep from the columns of the paper any advertising that we may believe to be of a fraudulent nature.

For fifty-eight years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been speaking to and for the Baptists of North Carolina. They founded it in the great crisis of their history, to aid them in a mortal struggle by making known and defending their principles, their aims, and their enterprises. Right nobly has it answered the purposes of its founders. Through all the years since it has recorded their progress, set forth and advocated their views and enterprises, and made it easy for them to co operate with each other in every department of christian labor. The need of such a journal is still as urgent as ever. It is essential to those who would understand the views held by the Baptists, or know what the denomination in North Carolina is doing to extend the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

The following is from the report unanimously adopted by the Baptist State Convention, held in Goldsboro, November 11th, 1891:—

"For fifty years the BIBLICAL RECORDER has been the organ of the Baptists of North Carolina. We believe it has served the denomination well. It has been one of the greatest agencies in fostering the interests of our College, furthering our mission work and all the other enterprises of the Convention. In view of the rapid growth of our denomination and the enlargement of our work, we believe it should have a constantly increasing circulation. We recommend that a committee be appointed to confer with the editor to devise means by which the circulation of the paper may be increased. We earnestly ask every pastor to advocate the claims of the paper."

"Paradise" for Sale.

This desirable place is in sight of the ocean and enjoys the delightful sea breeze; five miles from Morehead City, N. C.; bounded on the South by Bogue Sound, on the North by Newport river, both navigable streams; and lawful fences. The Atlantic and North Carolina railroad runs through the centre of the farm and in full view of the residence, with a station near by. The water pure and healthy. The farm contains several different kinds of soil and is adapted to any kind of crops grown in the State. Game, fish, clams, oysters, escallops, etc., are abundant. This place is adapted to trucking, fishing, stock raising, or any other occupation one can follow in the country. "Paradise" contains about five hundred acres, and can be bought for three thousand dollars. This is a rare chance to get a place with so many advantages and no disadvantages, and at so low a price. Who will be the lucky one? Call on or address,

New Fields and New Workers.

Notwithstanding the Board entered the Conventional year $10,000 in debt, and had to pay on December 1st, $30,000 on the Havana house, such have been the calls of Divine Providence which we could not disregard, that in the face of financial embarrassment it has entered new fields and employed new workers to labor in the Master's vineyard.

In addition to the new work in Baltimore among the hundreds of thousands of foreigners who annually enter that port, two brethren, first-class men, have been sent to New Orleans. Our work has been enlarged in Oklahoma and in the Indian Territory, and arrangements made for additions to our forces among the Germans in Missouri.

So rapidly has our work increased in Cuba that its needs have outgrown the ability of our noble, self-sacrificing missionaries to supply them. Three things presented themselves for the consideration of the Board:

1. The business interests of the mission arising from the Cemetery and the rent of such portions of the church building as were not needed for worship, had become a serious tax upon the time and energy of Bro. Diaz.

2. The fact that many Americans reside there, and hundreds visit the city every winter, and many natives speak English, render work among them as a support to our missions among the Spanish speaking people very desirable.

3. The fact that there are many young men, members of our churches there, who need to be trained for mission work, render it, in the judgment of the Board, desirable to have an American missionary as an assistant to our brethren there. The Corresponding Secretary in consultation with Bro. Diaz on these matters, suggested Bro. E. Pendleton Jones as peculiarly qualified for the special needs of that field. This suggestion met the warm approval of Bro. Diaz.

At a recent meeting of the Home Mission Board the appointment of Bro. Jones to this work was recommended by the Corresponding Secretary, and was adopted by a cordial and unanimous vote. A resolution was passed requesting the Foreign Mission Board to release him from his obligation to them, as missionary under appointment to Brazil, in order that he might accept the appointment to Cuba. The Foreign Mission Board have cheerfully acceded to our request, and Bro. Jones has accepted the position to which he has been called by the Home Mission Board. We take this occasion to express our grateful acknowledgement to the Foreign Mission Board for the kind and fraternal consideration evinced, and to assure them, should the opportunity ever arise, that the Home Mission Board will cheerfully reciprocate their kindly action.

There are many other fields which the Board would gladly reinforce, and other new ones which it greatly desires to enter, but further enlargement must depend upon the means furnished us by the churches. Applications for help from churches that need houses of worship are many and pressing. It would be easy to expend the whole of the $125,000 of the Centennial Fund in aiding the thousand homeless Baptist churches to secure needed places of worship—even then there would be many fields left unsupplied. We trust the churches will regard this increasing need of the Board and enlarge their liberality much beyond that of any former year. There is a great work before us, and year by year its proportions increase, and its demands become more urgent.

I. T. TICHENOR.

New so-called remedies spring up every day like mushrooms; but the people still cling to Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

The Influence of a Christian Life.

It is the silent forces in nature that accomplish the greatest results. It is silent rain and sunshine falling upon the little seed lodged in the crevice of the rock, causing it to grow and burst the great rock asunder. It is the gentle forces of nature that make the tiny sprig a gigantic oak. It is the quiet falling of the snow flakes that wraps the world in its winding sheet and impedes the mighty iron horse.

We have all, no doubt, heard the fable of the boastful wind and the sun, that entered a contest to see which could compel a traveler to remove his cloak. The wind blew with all its might, but in vain; for the traveler only wrapped his cloak the closer about him. The sun then entered the contest, and sent its gentle beams upon him, whereupon the traveler made haste to remove his cloak, and seek the protection of a friendly shade tree.

So, also, it is often the silent influences of a Christian life that accomplish most for the Master.

Whether we are conscious of it or not, the life of each of us, whether rich or poor, high or low, young or old, educated or uneducated, is wielding an influence over another.

It is not necessary to know a person in order to influence him. We are often influenced most by those whom we never saw. Spurgeon has influenced thousands whom he never met face to face.

If a man lived in the world alone, he would be a "law unto himself," and could not be held responsible for his influence; but "none of us liveth to himself" alone.

We are not only a "spectacle unto men and angels," but every act of ours bears influence on some one, thus affecting him for good or evil.—Rev. Geo. McGinnis, in Young People's Union.

The true Christian may stumble, but he does not fall away completely. This is not because of his own strength, but because of the fact that God has promised to hold him up and help him on to the end. The Divine "seed remaineth" in him. He is "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation."—Central Baptist.

A Curious Sentence.

The following curious sentence, Sator arepo tenet opera rotas, is pretty bad Latin, but may be freely translated,—I cease from my work; the sower will wear away his wheels.

It has these peculiarities:

First it spells backwards and forwards the same.

Second, the first letter of each word spells the first word.

Third, the second letter of each word spells the second word, and so on with the third, fourth and fifth.

Fourth, the last letters, read backwards, spells the first word; the next to the last the second word; and so on throughout.

Fifth, there are just as many letters in each word as there are words.—Selected.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Different Minds.

Some murmur when their sky is clear,
And wholly bright to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue.
And some with thankful love are filled,
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's good mercy, gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied.
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has, in their aid—
[Love that not ever seems to tire]
Such rich provision made.

—Richard Chenevix Trench.

Still Further Advance.

The publications for aid in studying the Sunday-school lessons which are published by the American Baptist Publication Society, have been gaining in excellence for the past years, and now those prepared for 1893 appear to have attained a still higher point of usefulness. It was difficult to see how last year's periodicals could be improved, but on using the numbers thus far published this year, we notice the Society has succeeded in making still further advance. We think the Sunday-schools of the present age have reason to be very thankful to the Society, which makes Sunday-school teaching so easy and complete through the publications of its varied aids. With proper study and the use of the American Baptist Publication Society's literature, every teacher should and, if his heart is right, will become efficient.

Answered.

A reproof which was just and not discourteous was once addressed to a young rector who had been reared under the highest of church doctrines, and who held that clergymen of all other denominations are without authority, and not entitled to be called ministers of the gospel.

One evening at a social gathering he was introduced to a Baptist clergyman. He greeted the elder man with much manner and ostentation.

"Sir," he said, "I am glad to shake hands with you as a gentleman, though I cannot admit that you are a clergyman."

There was a moment's pause, and then the other said, with a quiet significance that made the words he left unsaid emphatic:

"Sir, I am glad to shake hands with you—as a clergyman."—New York Herald.

Is it Strange?

It may seem strange, but it is nevertheless true, that alcohol, regularly applied to a thrifty farmer's stomach, will remove the boards from the fence, let the cattle into his crops, kill his fruit-trees, mortgage his farm and sow his fields with wild oats and thistles. It will take the paint off his building, break the glass out of his windows and fill them with rags. It will take the gloss from his clothes, and the polish from his manners, subdue his reason, arouse his passions, bring sorrow and disgrace upon his family, and topple him into a drunkard's grave.—Farm Journal.

To the Preachers of the Raleigh Association.

Brethren:—The time for our Centennial work is very short, and probably it is not possible to make a personal canvass of the churches. But the opportunity of making an offering must not go unimproved. We have decided, therefore, to ask each preacher in the Raleigh Association to bring this matter up at once, and to take a collection in each church he serves. Do not worry yourself nor your churches about the several different objects to which it can be appropriated. Take it for "the Centennial of Missions." Let it be the offering of each church towards celebrating the great Centennial year. Do not delegate it to the sisters, nor to the Sunday-schools (unless between your appointments they can see and solicit something from every member). But the time is so short that unless something is done at once, some churches will fail to have a part in this work.

Brethren, make the appeal yourselves. Give all necessary explanations. Let this offering be entirely separate from the regular work of the church. And by or before the third Sunday in April, see that each church is reported with its Centennial collection to Bro. J. D. Boushall, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C. Now, brethren, to the work, and do not fail to have each church included.

Gather Up the Fragments, that Nothing be Lost.

After the memorable banquet in the wilderness, at which "five thousand men, besides women and children" were filled, Jesus said, "Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost." When they had done so, lo! "twelve baskets" were filled with these "fragments" that otherwise would have been lost. The Centennial effort which is being made and which seeks from individuals and churches large contributions, will still leave great numbers of our people who are not able to give largely.

THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY UNION,

actuated by the purpose of their Master, and with no desire to interfere with the greater things that are being attempted, but that they made gather up the fragments after the larger offerings have been made, asks that each member of every white Baptist church of the Southern Baptist Convention shall make a final offering of

THIRTY CENTS.

Reader, if you have not made your offering, will you not add to what you intend to give this gift of thirty cents? You may thus bear the burden of some of our Lord's worthy ones, who in the abundance of their poverty may not be able to give even this small sum, and thus make them sharers with us in the blessings of this Centennial offering of our churches. Will you not encourage each member of your family to add to the gifts they have made or may make, this thirty cent offering? Can you not also encourage the members of your church to unite in this undertaking?

THERE WERE TWELVE BASKETS

of fragments gathered up after that feast, spread by our Lord, had fed thousands! If we gather up this fragment of thirty cents from each of our people (in our Centennial baskets) what a magnificent sum we would thus secure for missions: Three hundred and eighty five thousand dollars!

Much must yet be done if our Centennial movement proves such a success as we are aiming to make it. Only two months remain, but much may be done in even two months by a united, earnest and persistent effort. In each church an efficient committee dividing among them the membership of the church, may speedily see each member and collect his or her offering. Pastors can commend this effort from their pulpits. Officers of the church can aid those who engage in this movement. It ought to be done, it can be done—if each member will respond, it is done. But it must be the business of those in each church who desire to have it done, to see that it is done. Everything worth doing requires time and personal effort. So will this.

Baptists of the South, we must not fail in our Centennial work. If this offering of thirty cents is made by each member of our churches, we shall not fail. Is not a possible success, as magnificent as this, worthy the self-denial of an additional thirty cents to what has been, or will be, given? Mites may be mightier than millions! When we may, at so small a cost, at so little self denial, make sure such a blessed success, if we fail, will not an awful responsibility rest upon those who could have secured this success but would not? Reader, shall our Centennial purpose succeed or shall it fail? It is a personal matter.

Thirty cents from each member of every church will accomplish this work. Large sums have been given and will be given, they must be given. This smaller offering may seem a small thing, but if it succeeds it will put the capstone upon our Centennial Memorial, and that is not a small matter.

BEAUTY AND PURITY

Beauty of skin and purity of blood go hand in hand. No greater blessing than a skin without blemish, and a body nourished by pure blood, is vouchsafed to man or woman. It is the foundation of health and happiness. To cleanse the blood, skin, and scalp of every eruption, impurity and disease, and restore the hair, no agency in the world of medicine is so speedy, economical and unfailing as the CUTICURA REMEDIES. Everything about them inspires confidence. They are absolutely pure, and may be used on the youngest infant. They afford immediate relief in the most agonizing of itching and burning eczemas, and other itching, scaly and crusted skin and scalp diseases. They prevent inflammation and clogging of the pores, the cause of pimples, blotches, blackheads, red, rough and oily skin. They speedily cure humors of the blood and skin with loss of hair, whether simple scrofulous, hereditary, or ulcerative. They cleanse the system of all impurities by internal and external medication, and constitute the most effective treatment of modern times.

Sold everywhere. Price: CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1.00.

The St. Louis Trade Review and Export Journal in its issue of February 7th, 1893, has this to say:

EDWARDS & BROUGHTON.

One of the leading enterprises of its character in the entire South is the extensive printing and binding establishment, owned and conducted by the firm of Edwards & Broughton, and located at the corner of Hargett and Salisbury streets, Raleigh, N. C. The gentlemen constituting this firm, Mr. C. B. Edwards and Mr. N. B Broughton, are and have been for many years among Raleigh's prominent and substantial business men and citizens. Mr. Edwards is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Franklin county, and has made this city his home for the past quarter of a century, while Mr. Broughton, also a native of North Carolina, was born in Wake county, and has resided in Raleigh since 1856. They began their present co-partnership about twenty-two years ago. The plant is one of the finest in the South, equipped with the best of presses, etc., and with every improvement and convenience. They do a general printing business in all its branches, and carry in stock a fine line of stationery, letter heads, bill heads, statements, fine wedding stationery, etc., and at prices that no house can discount, quality considered. Catalogues, posters, circulars, etc., will be furnished upon the shortest possible notice. They also conduct a general binding business, manufacturing everything in the line of blank books. With their extraordinary facilities and employing only the best skilled workmen, they are enabled to produce a grade of goods that cannot be surpassed by the product of any firm in the country, no matter where located. Prices, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application either personally or by mail, and all orders will receive prompt and careful attention. They have a large trade from outside the city, and parties residing at surrounding points will save money and receive the very best of satisfaction by giving this firm the benefit of their patronage.

The "Moral" Saloon.

Dr. Rainsford, rector of St. George's church, of this city, has discovered a remedy for the drink habit that he believes to be infallible. It is not a new remedy. It is merely a fresh application of the very old notion of "a hair of the dog that bit you." The cure for too much drinking, he holds, is not abstinence but more drinking. He does not put it in just that way, to be sure, for that would be to brand his scheme as ridiculous. Our way of putting the matter differs from his verbally, but not essentially; and his proposition is really quite as ridiculous as our version of it indicates.

What Dr. Rainsford soberly proposes is the establishment of "moral" saloons, under the direct patronage and oversight of the church. The drinking of liquor, he maintains, is not in itself wrong, though drunkenness is wrong. Hence liquor selling is not in itself wrong, though it is wrong as commonly practised. Where liquor selling is a business, the sole object of which is to make money, the seller must of course try to sell as much as possible. The saloon thus becomes a direct encourager of drunkenness. Moreover, a saloon conducted to make money cannot be too particular about the manners and morals of its patrons; it cannot afford to furnish clean surroundings and appeal to refined tastes; all must be sacrificed to increasing the sale of liquor. This sort of saloon is bad, but prohibition fails to suppress it, and license does not regulate it in the interest of the society. Temperance reformers, with their unreasonable antipathy, only aggravate the evil they would cure. The only cure for the saloon evil is to drive out the bad saloons by establishing good saloons. Let the churches establish halls, where amid clean and artistic surroundings and with an accompaniment of wholesome refreshments and innocent amusements, pure fermented drinks may be dispensed to those who desire them. To such a place a man may take his wife and children, and its attractions would soon drive the bad saloon out of competition. This is a fair outline of Dr. Rainsford's scheme.

Granting, for argument's sake, the premises on which this scheme is built, one envies Dr. Rainsford the idyllic innocence that his plan displays. It is something to work so many years in a wicked city and yet keep one's self unspotted from the world to this extent. What, pray, can he suppose the brewers and distillers would be doing while the church was establishing these moral saloons? Does he not know that the retail as well as the wholesale trade is controlled by the manufacturers of liquor, and that they will never consent to a curtailment of that trade except through the irresistible power of the law? The only hope of making any permanent impression on the drink traffic is to strike at the head of the evil, by prohibiting the manufacture of liquors. High license and moral saloons and other expedients may be palliatives, and as such may be better than free rum, but they are no cure for the drink evil. Nothing short of prohibition, rigidly enforced, promises any real betterment of the situation in which society now finds itself.

Dr. Rainsford's scheme shows a curious perversity of moral vision on his part. The saloon cannot possibly be made moral. If it be granted that the moderate use of light wines and malt liquors is neither morally wrong nor physically hurtful, there is still no justification of tippling. The saloon exists only for the encouragement of tippling. If people are to use liquors moderately, let them buy them and consume them in the privacy of their homes, and not guzzle in saloons. A moral saloon is a contradiction in terms; the saloon is and must of necessity be immoral. It is true that some saloons are worse than others, but it is not true that any saloon ever is, ever was, or ever can be, good. Why not push the scheme a little further? If no church is hereafter to be reckoned as completely equipped unless it has a moral saloon attachment, let us carry out this brilliant idea in all directions. Let us by all means have the moral gambling-den, the moral dance-hall, the moral brothel, and the moral opium joint added to the equipment of the church, and thus "fight the devil with fire," as some recommend, all along the line. There are great possibilities in this idea if it is faithfully carried into practice.—N. Y. Examiner.

Prayer-Meeting Killers.

Some have argued that the time has come for the prayer-meeting to be set aside for some other religious agency; that sermon, lecture, instruction or other exercise should take the place of the time-honored institution known as the conference-meeting. We should be slow to allow any such heresy as that. When the prayer-meeting shall be given up it will be when piety is extinguished in the soul. The Christian needs the closet, and he also needs the prayer-meeting where many petitions join in one, and tender words are spoken for mutual comfort and encouragement. True, the conference-meeting sometimes becomes formal, cold, and loses its power; but in its worst state it is better than nothing and cannot be spared from the exercises of the church. A warm, well-conducted prayer-meeting is a mighty power, and from the day of Pentecost to this age its efficiency and helpfulness have been acknowledged.

But no doubt changes could be made which would make the prayer-meeting more vital and effective in the nurture of souls and the development of spiritual life. As a good [illegible] seeks to give variety to his sermons [illegible] to his pulpit utterances, so a [illegible] should seek to vitalize the [illegible] and prevent it from falling [illegible] stereotyped forms. At different [illegible] of the year he will introduce [illegible], and so change the lines of thought that nothing shall tire or become dead. But he will often find his best endeavors thwarted by a class of good men found in almost every church, who constantly and systematically kill the prayer-meeting. They do not mean to do it. They do not think they are doing it, but nevertheless they are simply prayer-meeting killers.

There is the man who feels that he must follow the pastor's opening remarks, and outwind him in the length of his speech, often taking for his theme something far distant from that in which the meeting has been started, switching the minds of those present from the track in which the pastor has endeavored to lead the general thought. This longwinded man is not generally the best informed or the most intelligent and interesting of the members. When he sits down the meeting has had its deathblow. Thought is divided or dissipated, and the few minutes that remain are run into testimonies that have little to do with the turn of thought started by the leader.

Then there is the man who can talk eloquently and impressively, who understands the Scriptures, and is able to unfold and explain them, whose lips drop the honey of the gospel, and who is heard by strangers with very evident pleasure. But the members of the church who are acquainted with him know that there is no devout life back of that speech. He is unscrupulous in his business relations, inconsistent in his life, and what he says in the conference-meeting is eloquent verbiage of which men in their hearts make sport. If nobody knew him, there would be no objection to what he says; but those who do know him have no confidence in the sincerity of his heart, or the honesty of his life. Every time he talks, men put a discount on religion.

Then there is the brother who is forever telling what good times the church used to have a quarter of a century ago, how earnest and devoted the pastor of that time used to be, and how much power the gospel in the church seemed to have under the older administrations. He turns and looks at the pastor who fidgets in his seat, shakes his finger at the deacons most of whom have been elected over his head, and exalts a past so long forgotten that nobody present can contradict him. He rasps, spoils good feeling, irritates and sits down self-satisfied, and he has killed the meeting.

Then comes the anti-worldly-amusement brother. His one theme is the worldliness of the church. He deplores the times, and especially the ways of the young people. He laments the degeneracy of the church and predicts ruin. He is much right but he has harped on this one thing so long that he has become as monotonous as the squeak of a worn out fiddle. He is the only righteous man in the church in his own estimation. He is a John the Baptist crying in the wilderness, an Elijah confounding the worshipers and priests of Baal, a Jonah threatening God's judgments in the streets of Nineveh. But he is always on that strain. All of worldiness is done up in three or four fashionable pleasures. He never thinks of selfishness, covetousness, censoriousness, greed of gold and power, but he has one target and he fires at that every time, hit or miss. He kills the meeting.

Then there is the sister who talks or is supposed to talk. She cries, she whines, she amens and sits down. Henry Ward Beecher, who was a stanch advocate of women on the platform, once had in one of his prayer meetings, a woman who made a random speech, killed the hour, spoiled the meeting, and when she took her seat, Beecher with imperturbable gravity, responded: "Nevertheless, I am in favor of women speaking in meeting." When a woman speaks in the conference meeting, if she says anything, she adds to the charm of the occasion, but when she only cries, that is not to edification.

Now all this, not to ridicule anyone who takes part in the conference-meeting—God forbid, but to correct abuses. There are prayer-meeting killers. Every pastor knows it. We have mentioned only a few. There are many of them. They mean well, and need instruction. What, if once a year, the pastor should lecture on the subject of the conference-meeting and show to the well meaning how they may take part in the exercise and not injure it. Next to the public worship of the sanctuary, the prayer-meeting needs to be conducted with propriety.—Christian Inquirer.

Monuments.

Whenever I look upon this Anglo Saxon land, dotted with marble shafts of immense value, erected to the memory of those whom we believe have gone to be with Christ, there arises a picture, in my mind, of heathendom, with its teeming millions departing this life—not to go to be with Christ, but to sink without Christ into unspeakable darkness. How long shall this work of erecting cold marble monuments continue? At least we can raise to our fallen missionaries a more fitting monument in the person of some consecrated man or woman to take up the work in the "regions beyond" and continue it unbroken till God's will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. The need is for living sacrifices for a dying world.

From East Durham.

Owing to the extremely bad weather, our removal to this place was very much delayed, but we are here now, pleasantly located in the midst of our work and among a host of kind and noble-hearted friends. A few nights after our arrival, our front door opened without our assistance, and a crowd of about fifty persons, loaded with a full variety and a large supply of such things as a pastor or housekeeper is always in need of, pressed their way through to our dining hall to deposit their luggage. Meanwhile the writer and his better-half, with laughable awkwardness, tried to address themselves to the benevolent visitors with profound gratitude and thankfulness for the gifts; but we realize that under such auspices we did not do the matter justice, and we still owe a debt of acknowledgements for this act of kindness and others rendered during and since our arrival. The people of the Third church are above the average in quality—some approaching magnanimity—and we are steadily winning members, such as we hope will do honor to the cause we have espoused.

The church is about three years old or perhaps a little more, and for nearly two years has been self-sustaining (that is, it has not been helped by any Board), and even shows its appreciation of the little help that was given in its infancy by liberally responding to the various needs of the Baptist cause.

Our Sunbeams will support one orphan at Thomasville for the year.

We have arranged to devote one Sunday night in each month to the development of a missionary spirit among our people who are already in sympathy and perfect accord with the different Boards of our Convention.

Last Sunday (second Sunday in March), Rev. R. G. Kendrick, a young Baptist minister and a Professor in Elon College, was with us and preached in the morning to an attentive audience. At night he gave us a missionary sermon that was thrilling and instructive, delighting the large attendance that greeted him. Bro. Kendrick graduated at Wake Forest in 1891, expecting to spend his life in the pedagogic profession, but has since felt called of God to bear the message of life to the perishing ones, and will go to the Seminary at Louisville this fall to further the preparation for his life work. He has a brother there already, who will soon be ready to enter faithful work as pastor and preacher. I wonder where he will "pitch his tent." Cannot the Baptists of our own State rise up in appreciation of the talent and purity of the many young men the Lord is calling from our churches and fasten upon them in our own barren fields? There are many reasons, it seems to me, why we should: (1) They are qualified by a course of discipline they have given their minds in an extended course of study to be profound and accurate thinkers. (2) Many of them have shown by the sacrifices and hardships they have undergone to obtain this advantage that they are willing to "endure hardness" for the cause of Christ. (3) Taking the precedent as a guide, they are generally sound in the faith, thereby making good counsellors for our youth. (4) They are our boys. This is their home, and we have a good deal of destitution in our State that calls for their service in its development—just such service as they are qualified to render.

All these seem to be reasons worthy of consideration, and it is to be hoped that our fields which are now "white unto harvest" will "open an effectual door" to these noble servants of God. So much by the way.

We think there is a general revival in our church work. Sinners rise in our weekly prayer services and ask for prayer. Our congregations are large and we are all praying for a spiritual feast to be given us in the near future.

We again want to express our high appreciation of the RECORDER, for what it is and what it is doing for the cause of Christ in our State.

C. W. BLANCHARD.

East Durham, March 17, 1893.

The Centennial.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—In the last RECORDER I find an article written by Bro. Curtis, headed, "What of the Centennial?" I think this question ought to have been asked a long time ago. I do not know whether Bro. Curtis was at our last State Convention or not. If he was, I think he is to blame for not writing his article sooner. It is impossible to do a year's work in a month. I agree with Bro. Curtis. There has been much said on this subject. Yes, too much. My experience is, a short speech, to the point, and a big collection, is the best.

Now, my dear brother, the West Chowan Association may have to suffer reproach for not paying the thousand dollars, but I do think that you preachers who attended the State Convention ought to have brought this matter before your people sooner, and not to have suffered the reproach to have fallen upon them. I would be willing to second Bro. Curtis' motion, but it seems to me it is too late to make such a motion, if we expect to raise the money by May. I think it would be better to move that all the pastors do what they can for that object.

God bless the mission work and the BIBLICAL RECORDER.

Australia suffered greatly from floods during February. In the city of Brisbane and suburbs it is estimated that $15,000,000 damage was done. The towns of Bundamba, Ipswich and Godna were at one time all under water, the inhabitants escaping to the hills. Seven men were drowned in a mine at Ipswich.

Acknowledgments.

[The Treasurer requests that when money is sent, that the name of the contributing church, society, or individual, and the object for which the money is intended, be clearly stated. This will serve to prevent mistakes in the acknowledgment, and save the time, correspondence and printing to correct them.]

If you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; these don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you bear, pop, clash on the least provocation.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Raleigh Affairs.

Mr. Josephus Daniels, State printer, has given the printing to Messrs. Edwards & Broughton and Mr. E. M. Uzzell—to be divided equally between the two firms. Mr. Daniels has received an appointment in the Interior Department under Secretary Hoke Smith. The Carolinian will be under the local control of Mr. F. L. Merritt, but Mr. Daniels will contribute to the editorial department from Washington City.

State News.

The Asheville Gazette says that it is reported that Mr. George W. Vanderbuilt has decided to build forty ten thousand dollar houses on his estate near Asheville.

We are pleased to learn that a Philadelphia company have plans on foot for the building of a large cotton factory at Moncure, Chatham county. It is said that it will be one of the largest cotton mills in the State, costing about $100,000. There is a great deal of cotton raised in that section and this is said to be a very fine location for a factory. Other large cotton fatories will be built in Chatham in the near future. These companies are nearly all from the North and are composed of men of considerable means.—Sanford Express.

A most deplorable accident occurred in Rutherfordton last Wednesday evening. A little child of Mr. Thos. W. Dixon, pulled a lighted lamp from a table in their house, which exploded and set fire to the building. Mrs. Dixon attempted to extinguish the flames but caught fire and was fatally burned before help reached her. She died the next morning. The eldest child, a girl, was rescued, but the two youngest children perished in the flames. The building was entirely consumed. Mr. Dixon was in Shelby at the time of the accident.

General News.

Near Millport, Scotland, recently a lighthouse keeper and his four children were accidentally drowned.

President Cleveland was fifty-six years old on the 18th inst. It is said that he celebrated the day by receiving a "seemingly interminable line of office seekers, and their Congressional friends."

On Friday, March 3d, a fearful cyclone visited portions of Georgia and Mississippi, doing immense damage to property and causing the death of many persons. The towns of Toomsuba, Miss., and Greenville, Ga., were almost swept from the face of the earth. Ove 300 persons in Lauderdale county, Miss., were rendered homeless.

MARRIED.

DAY—CURRIN—On March 15, 1893, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. J. S. Hardaway, Lem. F. Day and Sarah Currin.

DIED.

BORDEAUX—Died, in Bladen county, sister Rebecca Bordeaux, relict of Jas. Bordeaux, deceased, with dropsy, on March 1st, 1893. She was eighty-two years, seven months and twenty-one days old. She had been a member of the Baptist church for seventy years. It can be truthfully said she was a friend to the poor. She was often heard talking to God in prayer. May her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren put their trust firmly in the God she loved to pray to.

SON.

MINTZ—Musetta, the oldest child and only daughter of H. E. O. and Sarah Mintz, departed this life on March 10th, 1893, in the nineteenth year of her age. Truly a modest and good girl is gone from among us into that mansion where Christ said "he was going to prepare for his people." Musetta Mintz, while she had not made a public profession of faith, yet she lived a faithful christian life, trusting in Jesus as the only Saviour. She was a regular attendant at Sunday-school when her health would permit, and showed by her familiarity with the lessons that she had spent hours in the study of them, which was her delight. She was a member of the Ladies' Working Society of the Southport Baptist church, and showed her interest in the Master's cause by her faithfulness. She was noted for her piety and loveliness. She was her mother's dependence in domestic affairs, she having an invalid brother to care for. She loved her family as never child did. It has been said, and truly, her companion was her mother. Nothing in this life could be more noble and grand than that one's companion was their mother. Her father being from home a great deal, necessitated her being not only a companion, but a comfort and help to her devoted mother.

Much could be said of her beautiful life, but suffice it to say, family, friends and Sunday-school, let not your hearts be troubled. "God doeth all things well."

"Sister, thou art gone to rest;
We will not weep for thee;
For thou art now where oft on earth
Thy spirit longed to be.

Sister, thou art gone to rest;
Thine is an early tomb;
But Jesus summoned thee away,
Thy Saviour called thee home.

Sister, thou art gone to rest,
And this shall be our prayer:
That when we reach our journeys end
Thy glory we may share."

Southport, N. C. D. I. W.

HOGGARD—The subject of this sketch, Thomas Wright Hoggard, fell on sleep in Jesus almost suddenly at his home in Winton township, Hertford county, N. C., Feb. 25th, 1893, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. Bro. Hoggard had been in feeble health for more than a year. In November, '91, he had a stroke of paralysis, from the effects of which he never fully recovered. His death, though somewhat expected, was, nevertheless, a great shock, yet he was found with his lamp trimmed and burning. Death came to him as softly as slumber to an infant. He embraced religion in August, 1847, was baptized by his father, Elder Thomas Hoggard, into the fellowship of Bethlehem Baptist church, Hertford county, where he remained a true and faithful member, and in whose confidence, love and fellowship he died. On the 15th of April, 1858, he was married to Miss Harriet Williford, who still remains. Of this union four children survive, two sons and two daughters. He entered the Southern army in the beginning of the struggle and remained true to his post till wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor, June, 1864.

As neighbor, citizen, husband, father, soldier and christian, he was loyal, kind and true. No man that I have ever known came more nearly up to the description given by the Saviour when he said, "Ye are the salt of the earth," than did Bro. Hoggard. It is difficult to say which will miss him the more, his church or his neighbors. In every sphere he exemplified the religion of Christ. Full of business energy when stricken down, he was never heard to murmur. May the Lord bless and sanctify his life and death to his bereaved family, the church and community. His seat was never vacant when it was in his power to attend church. His last Sabbath on earth found him in his accustomed place in the house of God. He possessed a kind, generous nature, a ready and helping hand, and an open purse—always responsive to the calls of duty or charity. His pastor, in common with the family, church and community, sustains in his death a personal loss.

"The gospel of a life like his
Is more than books or scrolls,
Our dear Lord's best interpreters
Are humble, human souls."

His funeral was conducted by Rev. B. Craig.

L. M. CURTIS.

Tributes of Respect.

EDWARDS—The Woman's Missionary Society of Wake Forest has sustained a great loss in the recent death of our true and valued sister, Mrs. W. H. Edwards. Quiet in manner, delicate in health, yet with her heart all aglow with the love of missions, she waited not for an appeal to her liberality, but with self-denying spirit sought to hasten the evangelization of the heathen world.

One offering of exceeding love, lifted the lowly Mary to a high place in her Saviour's heart. "Verily, I say unto you, wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her."

In like manner did our lamented sister make her last love offering, following the light of the holy Word, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."

As fragrant as the odor of the precious ointment will be the memory of that special meeting to collect the Christmas offering for Japan. Only the happy look which illumined her countenance, as the treasurer reported the amount received, suggested; what afterwards became known, that her gift equalled what was given by all the rest of the band. In a conversation with her pastor, a short time before her death, she deplored that so little was being done for our missionaries, and declared her willingness to attempt more for the future.

May the unspeakable love and sustaining grace of him who never errs be with her devoted husband, sorrowing children, aged parents, affectionate sisters and brothers.

May that zeal which characterized her in our Missionary Society exert an influence which will long be felt, and may we all be ready when life's work is over, to submissively meet death with unquestioning faith.

The Home Circle.

"What is Heaven?"

"What is heaven?"—I asked a little child:
"All joy!" and in her innocence she smiled.

I asked the aged, with her care oppress:
"All suffering o'er, O heaven, at last, is rest!"

I asked a maiden, meek and tender-eyed:
"It must be love!" she modestly replied.

I asked the artist who adored his art:
"Heaven is all beauty!" spoke his raptured heart.

I asked the poet, with his soul afire:
"'Tis glory—glory!" and he struck his lyre.

I asked the Christian, waiting her release;
A halo 'round her, low she murmured "Peace!"

So all may look with hopeful eyes above;
'Tis beauty, glory, joy, rest, peace and love.
—Rams Horn.

Tennyson's Face and Voice.

It was a massive, noble, powerful head, such as Michelangelo might have given to one of his prophets; the forehead high, the countenance long, the chin square and slightly projecting. Age had wrought some changes in it since the days of manhood's prime, when the portrait was made which deserves to be established as the standard representation of the poet's face. The physical charm was less: there were heavy lines about the mouth, and blue veins standing out on the sunken temples, and gray hairs in the thin beard. But youth had not wholly disappeared, even at eighty three. The long, sparse locks that fell from beneath the velvet skull cap, and were as dark as ever; the brown eyes, half-veiled by drooping lids, were full of dreamy light, and able still to flash with sudden fire.

The knightly growth that fringed his lips,

But the voice was even more remarkable than the face for its suggestion of youth in age. Worn a little, as it must be after so many years, and breaking now and then when weary, it was yet deep-chested and resonant, thoroughly masculine, capable of expressing immense passion. Its most striking quality was its directness, its sincerity. There were no false accents or inflections in it, no affectations, no polite disguises. It kept a touch of its native Lincolnshire in the broadened vowels and rolling r's. It was a true and honest voice; a picture to the ear of the man from whom it came.

He held a volume of "Maud" in his hand, and was talking about it as he loved to do:

"I want to read this to you because I want you to feel what the poem means. It is dramatic; it is the story of a man who has a morbid nature, with a touch of inherited insanity, and very selfish. The poem is to show what love does for him. The war is only an episode. You must remember that it is not I myself speaking. It is this man with the strain of madness in his blood, and the memory of a great trouble and wrong that has put him out with the world."

Then he lifted the book close to his eyes, and began to read:

"I hate the dreadful hollow behind the little wood."

It was the strongest reading in the world; ignoring all the formal rules of elocution, going straight to the heart of the matter; yet unconsciously creating his own form and art, obedient to the inevitable law of all true passion, which always makes the sound fit the sense. The voice was raised a little higher than the speaking tone; sustained at the same level through line after line; almost monotonous in its measured chanting. It was not melodious, or flexible. It was something better. It was musical, as the voice of the ocean, or as the sound of the wind in the pine trees, is musical. In the impassioned lines it rose and swelled like the roar of the tempest through the woods; in the passages which expressed grief and loneliness it broke and fell suddenly, like the sobbing of low waves on the beach.—Rev. Henry Van Dyke, in the February Century.

What a Blizzard is Like.

A Dakota blizzard is something like a Sahara sandstorm, but with powdered ice instead of sand and the thermometer ranging thirty degrees below instead of 100 degrees above. A traveler may outlive a sandstorm, the only danger is that he will be smothered; but woe to the unlucky pilgrim who is caught by the blizzard! The fine frozen snow, as hard as iron filings, is driven into his face with terrific force; it becomes impossible to distinguish objects at a distance of a dozen yards, and he may flounder about for hours within a stone's throw of his own house without being able to find it. Great drifts are piled up around him, then whisked away, leaving the ground perfectly bare; the wind seems to resolve itself into a thousand whirling cyclones, and every open stretch of snow into a maelstorm. In North Dakota many of the farmers stretch ropes from their houses to their barns, so they may venture out to feed their stock during the blizzard—which frequently lasts two or three days—without danger of getting lost in the icy storm. In February, 1884, I drove out in a sleigh a few miles from Fargo to close up a land trade. The sky was clear as a bell, the air just cold enough to be exhilarating, and I enjoyed my ride out immensely. I did not enjoy the return trip, however. A cold, bitter wind came out from the northeast that constantly increased in violence, until the air became filled with fine snow, which glittered like myriads of diamonds in the sun. Then the sky became overcast, the wind began to hurl great [illegible] across the road, and I was unable to see my horse's head. I urged him on, allowing him to pick his own course, hopelessly at sea. I had [illegible] would find his way home [illegible] night, and I hoped that [illegible] him as well in a blizzard; but it didn't. In a little while he stopped, and, when I urged him forward, he turned squarely about and began to retrace his steps. He was lost as well as I. To sit still meant to freeze. I got out, threw the reins over my arm and started forward, calling at the top of my voice and firing off my revolver. In a minute or two there was an answering shot. I was within fifty yards of a farmhouse, where I obtained shelter until the blizzard subsided, two days later. —Farm, Field and Stockman.

How Sponges are Gathered.

Arrived at what he fancies may prove a profitable ground, the captain of a sponging schooner sends out a boat to investigate, meantime standing off and on until a discovery is reported. Then all hands, save only the cook, or, if she is a large vessel, the captain and cook, tumble into the small boats and the fishing—if fishing it can be called—is begun.

The vessel has towed astern just half as many boats as she has men in her crew, and now two men are assigned to each boat. One of them stands well aft and sculls with a long oar, while the other bends low over one of the gunwales in a most constrained position, and with his head buried in a water glass eagerly scans the bottom as he is moved slowly over it. The water glass is simply a wooden bucket, having a glass bottom, that is held an inch or so below the ruffled surface, and in these clear waters plainly reveals all submerged objects to a depth of forty or fifty feet. As a further aid in overcoming ripples or moderate waves, each small boat is provided with a bottle of oil so hung over the bow as to slowly drip its contents into the water.

Through his magic glass the observer sees darting fish, richly tinted sea-fans and feathers, branching coral, gorgeous anemones, bristling sea-porcupines, and the myriad other curious tenants of these tropic waters. While seeing these he makes no sign, until a small dark object that, to the untrained eye, differs in no respect from the loggerheads surrounding it, comes within his range of vision. Then, without removing his gaze, he reaches for the long handled sponge-hook or rake lying behind him, and using it with one hand, quickly tears from the bottom a black, slimy mass, that he triumpantly pronounces to be a sheeps'-wool or grass sponge of the first quality.—Kirk Monroe, in Scribner.

Of Interest to You.

LUMBERTON, N. C., Oct. 6, 1892.

Dear Sir:—I cheerfully, yes, gladly, give you my opinion of the Electropoise, and part of my experience too. I consider it the most wonderful of God given remedies to alleviate the suffering of poor weak mortals. I have been a great sufferer for about eight years, had some spinal trouble, nervous dyspepsia, sciatica, neuralgia, and all the bad feelings a bundle of shattered nerves could give any one, including insomnia. I was almost a perfect physical wreck. Last winter I had a very severe attack of Grippe which left me in such a weak condition that I was confined to my room for four months, had the very best medical attention and care in every way, was taking several kinds of medicines every day, but nothing seemed to do me any good. Feeling that I was a burden to myself and all around, I was ready to give up in despair when we bought an Electropoise and began using it according to direction, although I had no faith in it and did not believe one half that was said about it. But to my surprise I began to improve from the first application. Now I sleep like an infant and eat anything I want and am improving rapidly, am better than I have been in years. Have taken only one dose of medicine since I began its use five months ago; would not do without it for any price. It has been such a wonderful blessing to me that I can't refrain from begging every sufferer I meet to try the Electropoise. It is a pleasure indeed to find something that can relieve such great suffering. And the company is so obliging, kind and honest in directing the treatment. Thanking you and the Atlanta office most heartily for all your kindness and wishing you and the Electropoise the greatest success, I am,

Yours truly,
MISS LIZZIE CALDWELL.

Spelling in New York.

Some New York State school-teachers can improve in spelling. In each of fifty-eight county institutes, one hundred words were given out for spelling. Three county institutes held during the last week in December brought out a total attendance of 291 teachers. The following figures show how many of the 291 missed certain words:

Alacrity, 86; apothecaries, 67; accommodate, 140; avaricious, 94; alphabetical, 89; affirmation, 60; collegiate, 46; committees, 110; censurable, 93; consoled, 14; coalesce, 141; ceremonial, 52; christening, 45; consensus, 230; debility, 9; differentiate, 129; elementary, 20; effervescent, 106; economic, 70; emissary, 141; embarrass, 169; favorites, 14; feminine, 33; February, 31; financial, 30; grammatical, 50; guarantee, 95; homily, 90; inseparable, 77; incomparable, 84; intelligent, 36; Ithaca, 133; inflammatory, 170; limiting, 11; legislature, 44; liberal, 7; lathes, 53; legality, 28; mirrors, 22; marriageable, 98; matinee, 68; moneys, 106; medicinal, 43; mercantile, 61; nutritious, 93; nullify, 54; omitted, 41; obsequies, 78; pluralities, 28; prejudice, 112; parliamentary, 132; permissible, 180; professor, 151; quarantine, 83; pitiless, 44; phosphorescence, 181; partisan, 57; paroled, 93; Poughkeepsie, 51; possessed, 51; regretting, 60; rheumatic, 89; requirement, 25; resistance, 30; suffrage, 118; sensible, 40; soliloquy, 135; sustenance, 95; Susquehanna, 59; sewerage, 57; suburbs, 62; subordinate, 32; sinecure, 128; susceptible, 93; Tennessee, 56; Tammany, 18.—New York Ledger.

An Unwashed Prince.

The Crown Prince of Russia was always a very sensible man in the management of his household, and he was ably seconded by his wife. On one occasion, the governor of his children came to him and said:—

"Your Highness, I must complain of the little prince. He refuses to have his face washed in the morning."

"Does he?" answered the Crown Prince. We'll remedy that. After this, let him go unwashed."

Now, the sentries have to salute every member of the royal family—children and all—whenever they pass. The day after, the little four-year old prince went out for a walk with his governor. As they passed a sentry box where a grim soldier was posted, the man stood rigid, without presenting arms.

The little prince, accustomed to universal deference, looked displeased, but said nothing. Presently, another sentry was passed. Neither did this one give a sign of recognition. The little prince angrily spoke of it to his governor, and they passed on. And when the walk was finished, and they had met many soldiers, who none of them saluted the prince, the little fellow dashed to his father, exclaiming:—

"Papa! papa! you must whip every man in your guards. They refuse to salute when I pass."

"Ah, my son," said the Crown Prince, "they do rightly; for clean soldiers never salute a dirty little prince." After that, the boy took a shower bath every morning.—Selected.

Golden Threads.

The chilling blast of winter wither the flowers and they fall. So does it effect the human family, and if precautionary measures are not taken, being chilled is followed by evil results. Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein will cure coughs, colds and consumption.

Some Men Should Never Marry.

There is something peculiarly sorrowful to me in the way in which the children of some households slip quietly out of sight when they hear their father's footsteps outside the door.

The children must "settle down" then, for father "can't bear noise," and disorder worries" him. Oh, it does, does it? It makes him nervous to hear the baby cry or the children laugh, does it? He likes to have the house perfectly still, does he? Well, then, what under the sun did he ever marry for? Why didn't he remain in that state of single blessedness peculiarly appropriate to men whom children "worry." There are so many nice, quiet, delightful boarding houses in which the laugh of a child is never heard, because children are "not allowed" there.—Household.

Husbands and Wives.

A good husband makes a good wife. Some men can neither do without wives nor with them; they are wretched alone in what is called single blessedness, and they make their homes miserable when they get married; they are like Tompkins' dog, which could not bear to be loose and howled when it was tied up. Happy bachelors are likely to make happy husbands, and a happy husband is the happiest of men. A well-matched couple carry a joyful life between them, as the two spies carried the cluster of Eshcol. They are a brace of birds of Paradise. They multiply their troubles by dividing. This is fine arithmetic! The wagon of care rolls lightly along as they pull together, and when it drags a little heavily, or there's a hitch anywhere, they love each other all the more, and so lighten the labor.—John Ploughman.

Bottled Tears.

"Put thou my tears into thy bott'e." Psalm 56: 8.

When writing these words, David was thinking of his sufferings and sorrows during that troubled time when he fled from the face of Saul, and wandered, like a hunted deer, over mountain and through wilderness, chased by the mad king, who pursued the fugitive with death in his heart. And the persecuted exile cried day and night unto God. He had seen the widow and the orphan among his country-women gathering their tears in a bottle, to preserve them as a memorial of their grief, and so he appeals to God, "Put thou my tears into thy bottle;" remember me in my hour of trouble, and come, in thy divine compassion and love, to my deliverance and to comfort me. A striking petition indeed, and a beautiful figure of the divine remembrance of our sorrow!

But turn the leaves of the book again. Over here in the gospels there is the story of another sorrowful life. Tears glisten here too. Another heart throbs with anguish and a more pitiful cry goes up to heaven. Here is a sepulchre, of the ancient sort, with a great stone, a round slab, rolled across the door of it, a crowd of mourners stand in front of it, weeping with noisy demonstrations of grief. In the midst stands a silent, motionless figure, hearing, seeing all. And as his compassions go out to the bereaved and sorrowing, tears flow down his cheeks. For it was there, before the tomb of Lazarus, silently, but pitifully, that "Jesus wept." Never forgotten will be those blessed tears while the earth revolves and the bright sun runs its course! Never lost, while there is a new-made grave or a suffering heart in all the world!

Now turn the leaves backward. Here are tears and sounds of grief again! On the side of Olivet two great masses of people have fused into one. One vast procession has come over the hill from Bethany, preceded by one who rides upon the foal of an ass. The other has come out from Jerusalem, to welcome him. The air trembles with shouts of hallelujah: the hill shakes with the tramp of the multitude. For the people imagine that a king is going to his coronation. Is it so? Ask him. He will tell you that the throne he sees is the uplifted cross, that the palace piled for him is a tomb, that the glory of his coronation is an earthquake and midnight darkness in the sky. He will tell you that the beloved city, beautiful Jerusalem, is to be laid in the dust, her temple destroyed, her children scattered abroad. The city that he came to save! The people he came to redeem! And they will receive him not! And as he looks upon the city, the pride of every Hebrew's heart, and sees the clouds of destruction that already hang over her, his sorrow bursts all bounds, and with loud lamentations he bewails the fall of fair, yet false Jerusalem. Will those tears ever be forgotten? Not while there is on the earth a lost soul to save, a sinner who rejects the gift of God! Now, these two scenes ought to assure us that God can nevermore overlook the sorrows of his children. Forever we have a high-priest who can be touched with a feeling of our infirmities. God has come down to us, has made himself one of us, has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows, and through all eternity will carry in his infinite heart the remembrance of those tears at the grave of Lazarus and on the Mount of Olivet.

For God himself has wept. We must be careful to mark this, that the tears of Jesus were not the tears of an ordinary man. They were not tears of weakness, nor of disappointed ambition. True, at the grave of Lazarus, he is a tender-hearted friend, weeping with those who wept, and on the brow of Olivet he is a pitiful prophet, mourning over the ruin of his people. At the grave of Lazarus he is a Jonathan weeping for David. On Olivet, he is a Jeremiah lamenting the ruin of Jerusalem. And yet, in each instance he is the Christ, the God-man. What a revelation of the heart of God! The Christ in tears! The Son of God weeping! Not the Son who is different from the Father, but who is the express image of his Father's person. Not the Son who is inferior, but "who thought it not robbery to be equal with God." Not the Son who was here in the place of God, to represent God, but the Son who was here as God. Think of this, then, that God is portrayed as a God who weeps! Tears! What are they but crystal drops that fall from the wounded heart of love! The heart of hatred never truly weeps. It is like a frozen sea from which no sun can draw the vapor that shall fall again in vernal showers. The heart that weeps must be a tender heart; and tenderness is not weakness. Only love can weep as Jesus wept; and there is nothing stronger in the eternal heavens than the love of God! And God weeps! The God of glory in tears! What a sight to make angels wonder! What a truth to meet the hearts of men! And yet, the unbeliever points to hell, and the fires of torment, and says: "If there is a God, he is an ogre, an infinite monster, an eternal terror." If he could do it, if it could be done, God would quench the fires of torment with his tears; wash the bottomless pit of its corruption, and convert gehenna itself into a fountain of life! For his great heart weeps over the destruction of the lost!

God wept because he suffered. Who can imagine his emotions as he witnessed the grief of his beloved friends at Bethany? Who can measure the depth of his sorrow when he contemplated the fall of the city of David? Well, the heart that suffered then suffers now. "He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever."

In the glorious form that ascended into a radiant cloud from Olivet's brow, beat the same heart that almost burst with agony in the breast of the weeping Son of Man who, from the same spot, foresaw the desolation of Jerusalem. And that heart throbs in the eternal breast. Blessed truth; to be proclaimed to all the sorrowing! God knows, God shares all our griefs. God remembers all our tears. He puts them in his bottle. There are some beautiful passages in the Old Testament in which this fact of the divine compassion is set forth. "He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust." "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and he knoweth them that trust in him."

But nowhere is the divine compassion so beautifully portrayed as in the life of the Christ. "He had compassion on the multitude." How often we read that! "He groaned in the spirit, and was troubled." What tender sympathy is here suggested! He saw the people "as sheep having no shepherd." What sincere and profound appreciation of the wants and weaknesses of the lowly of the earth! Even the least of them, even the little children he took into his arms to bless! Is there any feeble cry that he does not hear? Are there any sorrows that he does not feel? Do any tears fall that he does not see? Oh, no! He puts our tears into his bottle. He hears, feels, sees all our sorrows. Upon the door of the house of a musician was suspended a curious musical instrument of metal balls and fine steel wires, and every time the door was opened, be it never so softly done, beautiful harmonies filled the air, and the least breath of the summer wind blowing over the wires called forth sweet sounds. More sensitive than this to every human touch, even to the every feint aspiration or low wail of grief, even to the unuttered prayer for help, is the great heart of God. But touch the door of mercy, and it will swing wide open, and down to your listening ears will float the sweetest harmonies heaven has ever heard, and all your soul will thrill with rapture as you catch the sound of the words: "Be of good comfort, it is I."

And so another fact is here: God's pity moves him to help us. The Christ did something more than weep. At Bethany he brought Lazarus forth from the grave. That pathway down the slope of Olivet led to Calvary where he offered himself as a sacrifice for sin, and became "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." And so, when the divine heart bleeds, the divine hand reaches down to save. O, men and women! do ye see and feel the beauty of it? No Moloch is here, destroying even the penitent by fire. No Brahma is here, silent, motionless. No Buddha, dumb, inanimate. No dread avenger, no dim abstraction, no dreary effigy. But God, the living, the loving, the compassionate, the comforting God! The Binder of all broken hearts, the Healer of all soul diseases, the Light of every dark hour, the Hope of the wide world! That this is no mere sentiment let the believer testify by his own experience. Bear witness to their truth ye who have stood by the grave of your beloved as Jesus stood at Bethany, and who have been comforted as he comforted Martha. He has not given you back your dead, but he has given you the assurance, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Bear witness ye whose sins have brought shame and suffering upon you! He has opened to you the door of pardon, and led you into the path of peace. O yes! could we hear this truth attested by all who have experienced the help of God, the volume of praise that would ascend to heaven would shake the foundations of the eternal throne. No accumulation of agnostic negations can change this eternal fact, that God is grieved and suffers infinite pain at the sight of human sorrow and sin. The life of the Christ from the cradle to the cross is a glorious revelation of this truth. Through him God speaks, God unfolds his eternal heart of love. And it was the Christ who said, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." If we do not obtain rest, if we go on bearing our load of sorrow and pain and care and sin, it is because we do not come to him who stands ready to raise us up.

Three lessons must be emphasized: First, sorrow is not sinful.

"Love ever breathes
Compassion; and compassion without tears
Would lack its truest utterance."

A mother weeping above the new-made grave of her child; a wife weeping by the dying bed of her husband; a father weeping over the waywardness of his boy; these are sights that move the heart of God, and make angels shed tears. Heaven has set the seal of approval to the sorrows of earth, and justified our tears. Well did the Laureate say to his friend, "I will not tell you not to weep, but I will tell you: Sorrow not as others who have no hope." Let even tears be the sign of your faith.

Second: Sorrow for sinners is divine. Sorrow that moves our sympathies and makes us kind. Oh, this cold, critical, cynical world! Oh, this hard, selfish, pharisaical saintliness! What a rebuke it all received that time when they brought a poor daughter of the streets to Jesus, and he stooped down and wrote on the ground, and rising, pointed the finger of reproach at them and said, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone at her." And how like whipped puppies they slunk away!

Third: Sympathy that does not lead to effort is vain. How easy to sit in the comfortable pew and close the tearful eye, or even to stand behind the bronzed pulpit and raise the hands to heaven and cry, "God be merciful to other miserable sinners!" How hard to show that mercy ourselves, that "droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven!" Oh, that the Christ spirit filled us all! Then would we not only weep for men, but we would stretch out our hands to them, laden with benefits and blessings.—Rev. J. E. Raymond, in Christian Inquirer.

Dr. Taylor's Construction Reconstructed and Reviewed.

It has been foreign to my intention all along to enter into the controversy provoked by the article of Bro. John E. White on a call to the foreign field and a calling to the gospel ministry, until the construction of said article was most happily placed upon it by the honored president of our College, in which he states, I know not upon what authority, "If the above represents fully Bro. White's views, I agree with him, and think that all the brethren will do so." If the "above" does not represent his position, then presumably the brethren will disagree with Bro. White.

Now, from this construction, to say nothing of the original article, I desire to most vigorously dissent.

It may savor, in the minds of some, of egotism in me to presume to call in question the position of my much loved and honored preceptor, but let it be remembered that we very fortunately live in a country where a little mind has as much right to the expression of an opinion as a great one, even though the opinion should not merit the same thought and careful consideration as the one conceived and expressed by the greater or superior intelligence; then, too, to turn on all the light possible upon the subject at issue can possibly do no harm, and as Dr. Taylor is abundantly able to take care of himself and his position, he cannot materially suffer at my hands. So here are my views of his construction of Bro. White's article. First, let me say that I set myself to the task of showing that his position, as stated in his construction of Bro. White's article, in which he says he fully agrees, is unscriptural, and therefore untenable for Baptists.

Point No. 1 in the construction—"Let him that heareth say, Come." "The propagation of the gospel is left not to a few, but to all the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ. According to the measure of grace intrusted to him by the Holy Spirit, each man is bound to minister in his day and generation, both to the church and among unbelievers."

If Dr. Taylor understands by the above that all truly regenerated persons, both male and female, are under the most sacred and binding obligations to do good as they have opportunity, and to the best of their information and extent of their ability labor vigorously in their respective spheres for the extension and upbuilding of the Master's kingdom, then I heartily agree with the Doctor; but if he means that every regenerated person has the same instruction in kind with the recognized preachers of the Word, to do in a limited measure, even, the same kind of work, then I must beg leave to differ, and the privilege of giving my reasons therefor.

Such a position carried to its legitimate consequences would remove every barrier and flood the ranks of the ministry with incompetent and unsuccessful preachers. The scriptural idea of protecting the sanctity of the ministerial rank by the laying on of hands would be lost to ecclesiastical knowledge, and the entire church membership, male and female, would be recognized as preachers of the Word, clothed with the same functions and with equal authority.

Millions of earnest, conscientious christians, have never felt the divine overshadowing and overwhelming impression made by the Holy Spirit to preach the Word, while Paul and kindred spirits have felt that necessity was laid upon them to preach the gospel of God's Son. Only the man thus feeling, in my humble opinion, has been truly called of God through the operations of the Holy Spirit into the great work of the ministry.

Point No. 2. The Doctor agrees with Bro. White that the miraculous element in the call to the ministry has, in some way or other, through the ages, possibly by the alchemist's art, been extracted; and that a man is called into the ministry just as he is called into the profession of law or medicine, or to the pursuits of the agricultural and mercantile life by the judgment, through a process of intellectual reasoning.

Whether this be true or not, would depend largely upon the definition of the term miraculous. Mr. Worcester, recognized authority in lexicology, says that it means "Effect above human power—prodigy equal to wonderful." If we admit the definition—and it occurs to me that it is the only scientific way to reach a conclusion on the subject—the day of miracles has not passed, and miraculous interpositions of divine power are witnessed to-day just as certainly and truly as the day in which Christ uttered the ever memorable words, "Lazarus, come forth."

The effect produced in causing a man to see his duty and enter upon it in the gospel ministry, at a great personal sacrifice, humanly speaking, is far removed from the province of human power, and of necessity is above it, and if above it, then, according to Mr. Worcester, miraculous. In keeping with the above definition and argument, I sincerely believe that every truly regenerated and divinely called preacher, has found his way into the ministry through the miraculous interposition of human power, essentially the same that separated Paul and the other apostles and all true ministers of the Word unto the gospel.

I don't know that I fully understand the term "sacerdotal divinity," as used by the Doctor, which hedges the preacher in, against which the Doctor and Bro. White enter their solemn protest. If we are to be allowed to deduce arguments from the dealings of God with his people of past ages, no one, certainly, would be so presumptuous as to controvert the point that the priesthood under the Mosaic and prophet's dispensations were chosen from a particular class and tribe, and circumscribed in their work by the divine power, and restricted in the exercise of their functions to the ministrations of the altar. The power constituting this order of things was divine—the people most intimately concerned were priests or sacerdotes. Therefore it occurs to me that they were hedged in by a priestly or "sacerdotal divinity."

I truly believe with the great Shakespeare that "there is a divinity that shapes our ends rough—hew them how we will." Many a man has been hedged in by the miraculously divine power and made to fail in a dozen different vocations, and in the end forced into the work of the ministry against his judgment, against his idea of the fitness of things, and against all his varying intellectual manipulations with reference to it, by the operations of the Holy Spirit overriding these powers and setting them aside agreeable to the inspired record, that God hath taken the weak things of this world to confound the mighty, and the things that are not to bring to nought the things that are.

In this way only are we able to explain the phenomenal success of some men who, from a human standpoint, were judged wholly incompetent, and unqualified mentally for the great work previous to entering upon it, and yet who have filled the world with wonder and amazement, as aided by the same supernatural power which pushed them into the work, they moved on to the greatest possible success.

I have this faith in the supernatural, with reference to the work in the gospel ministry, that the man called through the miraculous interposition of divine power will fail in a thousand enterprises, and have his way so completely hedged in that he will in the end be glad to say, "I am ready to preach the gospel to you which are at Rome also," to the world.

Point No. 3. It seems to me that the Doctor is guilty, unintentionally, of a contradiction of terms, or certainly of agreeing thereto, to-wit: "When a man has once consecrated himself, under the leading of the spirit of God, to the full work of the ministry, he is to decide, etc. Bro. Yates felt that it was his duty to go to China. Dr. Royall felt that it was his duty to teach as well as preach." The word consecrate means to set apart, make sacred to, dedicate, devote. Now, if a man be consecrated to the full work of the gospel ministry, can he of volition add thereto another calling, and prosecute the work of the two combined with the same result to the kingdom of the Master as if he had devoted himself exclusively to the preaching of the Word? Does God call one half of a man or all of the man to this work? For my part, I answer that I have not so learned the Scriptures. The only reason assigned in Holy Writ for the institution of the office of deacon was that it was not meet for the preacher to leave off preaching, even for a short period to look after the poor of the church, but to give themselves wholly to the Word. Paul, writing to Timothy, says, "Preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season."

If a man can consistently give three-fourths time to the school-room after consecrating himself to the ministry of the preached Word, where would be the impropriety of devoting another part to the real estate agency, mercantile life, or any other honorable calling of a secular nature?

After all, does not financial matters lie at the bottom of this division of labor, on the part of the divinely called preacher? Financial embarrassment on the one hand, and an undue design for gain on the other? Is it not true that the called preacher feels called upon to divide time only when circumstances conspire to render it inevitable—not from a conviction of duty, but sense of obligation to provide for his own household, and his compensation in the ministry he considers inadequate? I speak from experience when I say that financial trouble, and not a conviction of duty, was the only excuse for my ever being in a school room, and quite a number of honored brethren with whom I have conversed on the subject have shared my experience.

I haven't the slightest idea that were Paul living to day he would accept the presidency of the great Chicago University, though it might be tendered on a golden platter, but would give himself wholly to the Word.

Briefly to recapitulate—

1. All church members are not preachers of the Word in the strict and true acceptation of the term.

2. Men are called into the ministry by a miraculous interposition of the divine power.

3. A man once having been consecrated to the work of the ministry is not, from a scriptural point of view, left to feel it his duty to add anything of a secular nature to his God-given work, but to give himself wholly to the Word.

The Divine Call to the Gospel Ministry.

Dear Recorder:—I have been reading Bro. White's and other's articles in the RECORDER recently respecting a call to the ministry, also the piece published from the Christian Inquirer, "The Ministry Overloaded." I now want to say this much, that I believe with my whole heart in a Divine, special, heavenly call from God by the Holy Spirit to the special work of preaching the gospel of the Son of God—that no man "taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron"—that no man who has not been thus specially called to preach has any more right in the pulpit than an unconverted person has in the church of Jesus Christ. As for "overloading the ministry," if God calls a man to preach the gospel of his Son, who has the right to say he is unfit or unqualified for the work? Does not God know who is suitable and who is not suitable to preach his word? I may "overload" my horse, but it seems to me the height of folly to accuse God of overloading the ministry. If, however, men are doing this, then that is their work and not the Lord's. If a man does not give sufficient evidence of a Divine call to preach, then he should not be set apart to that work; but if he does, who has the right to say he is unfit, or that he is not sufficiently educated or talented for the work, and that he must stand aside? Then he must obey man rather than God. If every man cannot be a Spurgeon or a Moody, or a Talmage, all whom God calls to do his work can be what he wants them to be, and do the work he wants them to do. To one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one, "to every man according to his several ability." I know uneducated men now—humble, consecrated men they are—who are doing, perhaps, as much good in their fields of labor, and are leading as many souls to Christ as any men perhaps we have. The brother was right who said God selects the men, the field, and the subject or theme. Let us use the talent, brethren, that God has given us, and gain other talents beside them; and let every man whom God has called do the same, and the Lord's work will be done, we will be happy, and his name will be glorified.

I had the pleasure of hearing Bro. G. M. Duke preach one of his best sermons last Sunday at Philadelphia church, which made us all happy. Bro. Duke is preaching to crowded houses, and the Lord is blessing his labors. Yours in Christian love,

R. D. HARPER.

A Novel Way of Getting Close to God.

Dear Recorder:—I see in the last RECORDER a letter from Smyrna, written by Brother Matthews, in which he says in the wind-up of his letter that he had been exchanging pulpits with some of the good Methodist brethren, in order to get the people in harmony with each other and closer to God.

I wonder if the brother will not soon be sprinkling babies to get the people in harmony and nearer to God?

Consistency, what a jewel! W.
Randleman, March 17, 1893.

It is a solemn fact which the preacher should bear in mind, that at every service the destiny of some soul is, in all probability, fixed. This final choice is made and the footsteps tend upward on the heavenly path or downward over the broad road to ruin. How earnest and tender should the sermon be. How anxious should the minister be to have the spirit of Christ when he stood on the Mount of Olives and wept over Jerusalem.—Central Baptist.

The hospitalities of the Lord's house reach a good deal deeper than a mere matter of buildings and pew sittings.—Bishop Arlington.

DANGEROUS DOCTRINE

In a recent sermon by T. De Witt Talmage we find the following words: "Hannah Whitall Smith, the evangelist, took her little child at two years of age when ill out of the crib and told her plainly of Christ, and the child believed, and gave evidence of joyful trust, which grew with her growth, to womanhood. Two years are not too young. The time will come when, by the faith of parents, children will be born into this world and born into the bosom of Christ at the same time." (Italics ours.)

We do not often read Talmage's sermons. We would not throw obstacles in the way of good men. No doubt Talmage is doing good in the world. He is among the leading American preachers; but we are free to confess that there is error enough in the above passage to counteract the good accomplished by many of his best sermons. Talmage is good in history, biography, and affecting incidents; but his doctrine certainly needs watching. His sermons are scattered broadcast over our land, and when they contain such balderdash as the above "the more's the pity," and the more serious are the results. We have in this country no censor of the press, and it is well, we suppose, that we have not; but it occurs to us that our Baptist editors of both secular and religious papers would do well to exercise a little wholesome censorship over their papers when it comes to sermons by Talmage, or any other preacher, that contain such dangerous and puerile doctrine as that above.

Talmage, in this passage, indirectly endorses female evangelists. The views of the RECORDER on the question of women preaching are so well known that we need not repeat them here. Suffice now to say that some of the male evangelists, who have quite peculiar ways and methods, are giving us trouble enough without having their number increased by those whom we honestly believe are not called by God to do this work. This quasi endorsement of female evangelists, however, is in keeping with Talmage's well known methods. He, and men of his stamp, love to drift with the popular current, even though it may run at times into dangerous channels. They are adepts in sensationalism, and will resort to questionable means to be popular and attract attention to themselves.

And then, that talk about Mrs. Smith's babe exercising an intelligent faith in Christ at the age of two years! As a rule, we may say of all such reported cases of real faith, "What bosh, what religious nonsense!" We are willing to admit that some children may exercise an intelligent faith in Christ at an early age; but to claim that a child can exercise such faith at two years, forces one to the conclusion that it is such faith or trust as Talmage says the child in question had, and that was, a trust that was not matured until the child grew to womanhood. Saving faith in Christ is not a matter of growth. We are perfectly willing to admit that, by the lapse of years, our faith may become stronger, and in that sense has grown; but we deny that any child can grow in a natural way from death unto life. Such puerile stuff as this baby faith will suit mediæval superstition, or the ignorant credulity of by-gone days; but it is a strange doctrine to scatter among intelligent and converted men and women of the nineteenth century. By all means, let Christian parents train up their children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord;" let them preach Christ earnestly unto them as soon as they pass the age of accountability; but we protest, in the name of a patient public, against the continuation of such large drafts on common sense and sound religion as that under consideration. If women like Mrs. Smith will do unscriptural work, and regale the public with accounts of their marvellous babies, and are backed by such men as Talmage, let the whole performance meet the chilling reception that its insulting bid for blind credulity really deserves. When we notice what a number of mediæval ingredients can be found in many modern sermons, on which intelligent Christians are expected to feed, we do not so much wonder that "higher critics" abound; and the number of those who cannot or will not distinguish between true Christianity and superstition is increased. Verily the day has come for Christianity to assert her primitive sanity, including her primitive robustness and her primitive common sense. That she will do. We do not fear the future; but surely it is time that such baby doctrine as that above were relegated to the rear.

We call special attention, however, to the latter, or italicized part, of the above quotation. Dr. Talmage has quite an optimistic view concerning the matter mentioned in that sentence. He and his confreres have been trying for centuries to convince the world that there is a mysterious connection between the faith of a parent and that of a child. They have imagined that there is great strength in the broken reed on which the Pharisees were leaning when John the Baptist said unto them, "And think not to say within yourselves we have Abraham to our father; for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." It seems that Dr. Talmage, and those who think with him, however, have not met with very general success in convincing the world that a child may become a Christian through the faith of its parents, (exactly what the Pharisees thought when they came to John for baptism), and that the church is composed of "believers and their children." So the Doctor looks to the future, and thinks it will produce such a superior lot of babies to those brought into the world in the present, or in the past, as to justify him in saying "the time is coming," &c.

So it follows, in the Doctor's opinion at least, that human nature is to change; that after awhile children will be born in a regenerated state, and will not need to be told of a Saviour, as they will have no sins to repent of, and their parents have attended to the matters of believing and baptism. Beautiful arrangement that! How completely it does away with such antiquated doctrines as original sin, total depravity, repentance, faith, &c., &c. Ah, these scions of the golden age foreseen by Dr. Talmage, are to read with a shrug of the shoulders such passages as "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me," and ask, with wondering eyes, such questions as this: "Ma, (or mare), is this the Bible of the antediluvians or the mossbacks that lived after the flood?"

If it is possible under the present order of things for a few children of this kind to be born in the world, it is possible for many, or even all; and if such an age should come, then preachers of the gospel could cease entirely to warn sinners to "flee from the wrath to come;" and confine themselves to the "edification of the saints." Then we would have Church and State with a vengeance, and no one could draw the line between the church and the world. Then we would have salvation by generation, and several other things, which perhaps Dr. Talmage has not thought of.

Seriously now, we long to see the day when all shall know Christ, "whom to know is life eternal;" but we do not think it is coming in the manner foreshadowed by Dr. Talmage. We do not consider even a D. D., who has such a strange view of fallen human nature as to suppose that by a natural process it can become unfallen, a safe prophet; nor are we as hopeful as he seems to be of the progeny of men and women yet to be, who may be so conceited and silly as to suppose that they have the power to bless the world with a type of humanity free from sin.

ONLY THIRTY-ONE DAYS

The Southern Baptist Convention meets in Nashville, Tenn., May 12th, and the financial tables will be closed at Richmond and Atlanta by the Treasurer of each Board at 12 o'clock noon, April 30th. Money designed for this year's work must be in their hands before that time. Only thirty-one days of this fiscal year now remain. Pastors, churches, Sunday-schools, mission societies, and all individuals who would aid Home and Foreign Missions this year, must act quickly. Let each pastor and each church do the very best that can be done in their own midst, and all will be well. Let ten thousand individuals in North Carolina, who have already given this year their contributions to Home and Foreign Missions, add, if they can, at once one dollar for each of these objects.

Whatever we do in these matters, let it be done for the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ; let it be done freely, willingly, and with earnest prayer for the Lord's blessings upon the work it is designed to aid. The secret of all success in giving and in wisely using the gifts of the Lord's people is in the power of the Holy Ghost. The bodily presence of the Christ was taken from us that the omnipresence of the Holy Ghost might ever be with us. Our debt is to our own generation. Our only opportunity is to the people of our day. The present is our only time to help on with the blessings of the gospel to others. Pray, work and give now.

ONE hundred dollars was paid by the Board of Missions of our Baptist State Convention to the church in Wilmington for the year 1888, and fifty dollars was paid them for the year 1884 to aid them in sustaining a pastor.

....Rev. J. K. Fant of High Point, one of the most successful pastors in the State, is held in high esteem by his former charge at Wadesboro. We look for a strong and well trained church at High Point under the leadership of Bro. Fant.

....Bro. Etherten Wilson of Coleraine, N. C., in renewing his subscription to the RECORDER says: "I have been renewing many years, but I don't expect to renew many times more, as I shall in a few days enter my eighty-second year."

....Rev. Dr. R. H. Griffith preached to large congregations at Tryon Street Baptist church, Sunday. He was ever beloved by the people here, and is always welcomed back. There was one addition to the church. —Charlotte Observer, March 21.

....Rev. R. T. Vann of Scotland Neck came to Raleigh last Monday in attendance on the burial service of Mrs. A. E. Montague, and attended the meeting of the Mission Board Monday night.

....Mrs. A. E. Montague, widow of the late Dr. H. W. Montague of Wake Forest, died in Scotland Neck on last Sunday night, and her remains were brought to Raleigh Monday afternoon for interment.

....Dr. J. D. Hufham preached for Pastor Gwaltney at Wake Forest last Sunday, and the meeting will continue through this week. The Doctor is in good preaching trim, and those who heard him say they never heard him preach better.

....Rev. Thomas Hume, D. D., of Chapel Hill, was in the city last Friday on his return from Clayton, whither he had been to perform the marriage ceremony of Miss Nellie Lee Horne and Dr. Eugene Herbert McCullers. He paid us a pleasant visit.

....In the county of Brunswick, in Wilmington, and all the lower part of New Hanover, Onslow, Halifax, Stokes, Surry, and Robeson counties, also, there is not a Baptist preacher.—John Purify, Ch. of Com. State Miss. Baptist State Con., 1832.

....R. F. Covington of Red Springs was buried last Friday. Bro. Covington was a most zealous worker in the Red Springs Baptist church and Sunday-school, and it was mostly through his personel energy that the Baptist church at that place was established.

....The Baptist ladies of Raleigh tendered to Mrs. M. T. Yates on Friday afternoon, the 24th inst., a reception in the First Baptist church. It was largely attended and was a most enjoyable occasion. It is a pleasure and an inspiration to have Sister Yates in our midst.

....Rev. J. R. Maynard of Morrisville, N. C., fell dead last Friday afternoon. He was in apparently good health, and had worked in his shop all day till about 5 p. m. when the summons came. Bro. Maynard was pastor of several country churches, and was a persevering, earnest worker.

....To accomplish any purpose of a general and arduous nature, combined and systematic operations are absolutely necessary. And accordingly, to secure the objects proposed by the Convention, a general system of united and harmonious movements is indispensable.—Thomas Meredith, 1830.

....We were delighted last Thursday to receive a call from Dr. I. T. Tichenor of the Home Mission Board. The Doctor was on his return from the centennial meetings in Richmond, of which he gave a good account. We were glad to see him looking well, and to find him so cheerful. He speaks hopefully of his work.

....The attention of the Board has been directed to Wilmington, Raleigh and Halifax, and committees have been appointed to enquire into the expediency of locating a Baptist minister in each of the above mentioned places with directions to make report at the present meeting of the Convention.—Report of Board to the Convention, 1832.

....Calvin S. Blackwell of Elizabeth City has received and accepted three invitations to make commencement addresses, as follows: Before the literary societies of the Chowan Baptist Female Institute at Murfreesboro, N. C., May 31st; at Ryland Institute, Suffolk, Va., June 5th, and at the South west Virginia Institute, Glade Springs, June 7th.

....Five Baptist ministers in this State have died this year—William Royall, Jan. 3d; E. D. Johnson, Feb. 7th; Jeptha H. Layton, Feb. 10th; J. W. Smith, March 4th; J. R. Maynard, March 23d. All of these brethren had preached the gospel for many years. How rapidly our brethren are being called to their reward. Who will be the next? Let us all be ready.

....Rev. J. A. Campbell of Poe's N. C., writes: "I find my work starting off very nicely at Holly Springs. The people are as kind as I ever met. My school continues to increase. We have enrolled one hundred and fifty during the spring term. I am now assisted by my wife, Bro. C. V. Brooks of Jonesboro, and Bro. P. H. Rogers, who teaches vocal music. Thank you for what you are making the dear RECORDER."

....The centennial meetings recently held in Richmond, Va., closed Monday night, the 20th inst., at the First Baptist church with the ordination of six young missionaries for foreign fields. The following are their names and fields: Rev. Joseph Aden, Brazil; Rev. Marion Gassaway, Mexico; Rev. E. Pendleton Jones, Cuba; Rev. Robert E. Neighbour, Brazil; Rev. Samuel Judson Porter, N. C., Brazil; and Rev. Peyton Stephens, China.

....And although it (the Convention) is now but just begun, and although it behooves its advocates to speak of it in terms of the most measured moderation and humility, yet we do venture to believe that it promises more to the Baptists of North Carolina than any human institution ever yet offered to their consideration; and that it shall exist and multiply its advantages when its projectors and present supporters shall rest from their labors amid "the clods of the valley."—Thomas Meredith, 1830.

....May it not be that some brethren are altogether too officious in pressing certain preachers to fill vacant churches? We are of the opinion that this is a matter which as far as possible ought to be decided by the church itself. We can see how a church may be greatly benefitted by conferring with certain brethren as to the wisdom of calling a pastor; but this is where both the pastor in question and the church to be served are known by these brethren. But where a brother not only writes himself, but engages some of his friends to do likewise, charging in "platoons" as it were, in order to suggest that providence is in it, richly deserves all the rebuke he receives.

....Speaking recently with a young lawyer who has had splendid success in his profession, and who at the same time has been active and zealous in church work, he remarked that in the practice of his profession his object was to first ascertain what was justice between the contending parties, and then he invariably advised that they settle accordingly. We are greatly in need of more lawyers of the same sort—men who regard the unbritten as well as the written law, and who would prefer to see justice meted out to all parties rather than gain a case by hook or crook.

....Virginia Baptists have given from May 1st, 1892, to March 15th, 1893, to Foreign Missions, $12,020.37, against $8,173.20 for the corresponding period in 1891-'92. Of this $287.22 has been designated for the Permanent Fund, and $139.36 for the Centennial Enlargement Fund. The remainder has been given to the Foreign Board to be used where it is most needed. After all, there is no better way to give your money. If you wish it to go to Foreign Missions, say so; if you wish it to go to Home Missions, say so. The boards will be sure to expend it where it is most needed.—Religious Herald.

... The famous Tremont Temple of Boston was burned on Sunday, the 19th inst. It included the Tremont Temple church, of which Dr. G. C. Lorimer was pastor; the rooms of the American Baptist Home Mission Society; the business and editorial department of the Watchman, and the Baptist Social Union. It was headquarters of the Baptist denomination North. Dr. Lorimer's church was said to be the largest Baptist church in New England, and perhaps the largest in America. It has been burned three times; once on March 31st, 1852; on Aug. 14th, 1879, and on March 19th, 1893. The total loss is $250,000. The insurance, $135,000. The Watchman says: "On Monday morning the Watchman promptly opened an office in the Tremont House, where the work of the paper went on as usual. In spite of every difficulty, the paper appears at the regular time, and permanent quarters were secured on Tuesday."

Annual Catalogue of 1892-'93.

I have just had the pleasure of looking over portions of the manuscript of the Annual Catalogue for 1892-'3, which is now almost ready for the press. The committee have done their work well. The catalogue is likely to be the most satisfactory ever issued by the College in all respects, except that the number of students on the roll is smaller than it was last year. If hard and enthusiastic work on the part of the faculty and a noble body of faithful alumni can bring it about, the gaps will be filled up next session. The work of the several schools is set forth more fully and elaborately than hitherto, and a much larger range of work is offered to candidates for the Master of Arts' degree and post-graduate students, while the requirements for the Bachelor of Arts' degree remain practically unchanged. More elective studies, however, are presented to the option of the student.

For two weeks I have been travelling in the interest of the College. It is an unspeakable joy, on my return, to hear such reports as come to me from my colleagues as to the excellent work and decorum of our students.

The semi annual order for library books has just been filled, and will make a most valuable addition to the collection. How delightful to turn over the leaves, fresh and fragrant in their new bindings. How sad to turn away with the thought that one can redeem the time to read so few of them. But many others will. Young men who are not yet born will gain knowledge and drink in inspiration from these books. Every year by a gradual and cautious introduction of "seminary methods," our professors are making more and more use of the library in their teaching, requiring students to consult authorities, and to present the results of their investigations to the classes.

The action of the Wake Forest Alumni Association, looking to the organization of local associations, has been quite successful. Already a number have been organized. Others soon will be. One gentleman who happened to receive a letter on the subject writes me that he is the only Wake Forest man in his place, but goes on to intimate that he has already "organized" and is ready for work. A good example.

Elder J. D. Hufham preached for us this morning, and will remain during the week and help Elder Gwaltney in conducting some special meetings every night. It is with no little pleasure that we welcome this war-worn veteran back to his alma mater, especially on such a mission as that on which he has now come.

CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

Wake Forest College, March 26, 1893.

Brother B. P. Green Ordained.

Mr. Editor:—A presbytery, called by the Sandy Run church, met with her on March 17th, 1893, to ordain Bro. B. P. Green to the full work of the ministry.

After the ordination sermon by Rev. T. Dixon of Shelby, a short recess was given, during which time all were supplied with good things brought out by the good sisters of the church.

Dinner being over, the presbytery was organized by electing Rev. A. C. Irvin, Moderator, and Bro. A. M. Lovelace, Secretary.

Rev. G. P. Hamrick delivered the ordination prayer, and Rev. Z. D. Harrill presented the Bible and gave the charge.

While Sandy Run is one of the oldest churches in Cleveland county, this is the first ordination of a minister within the memory of her oldest members, if not the first that ever occurred.

The day was much enjoyed, and I hope much good will result from that day's proceedings. A. M. LOVELACE.

Baptists Imprisoned and Whipped—No. 1.

THREE ARTICLES—NO. ONE—NEWBERN, N. C., IN 1730-1746—COL. JOHN D. WHITFORD ON THE STAND—EDITOR NEWBERN JOURNAL, MR. H. S. NUNN, NOW DECEASED, SAW THE RECORDS—FACTS IN HAND SUFFICIENT.

That Baptists were imprisoned and whipped, by order of the court of Craven county, North Carolina, for preaching the gospel and asking permission of the court to build a house of worship where they, their children and neighbors could meet to worship God, according to the dictates of their own consciences, there can now, we think, be no reasonable doubt. The following facts may be considered:

1. Through all the past century, among many of the old and well informed people of Newbern, there has been a tradition that Baptists were imprisoned and whipped in that town by order of the court of that county, for preaching the gospel and for asking permission of the court to build a house of worship. How came this tradition in existence there?

2. There are on the records of Craven county court the names of men, well-known citizens, prominent Baptists in that section during the years this persecution, imprisonment and whipping is alleged, and among their descendants now living in this State, and among them all, so far as we have been able to find the facts, there has come down to the present day the tradition that their ancestors were imprisoned and whipped by order of the court in the town of Newbern for preaching the gospel and asking permission of the court to build a house of worship.

What started and sent this tradition down through all of these families?

3. In 1883, Col. John D. Whitford of Newbern wrote a number of articles for the Newbern Journal on the early history of that town. Col. Whitford is, perhaps, the best informed man now living about the history of his town. He is not a member of a Baptist church. He was at one time President of the Atlantic North Carolina Railroad, and is well known as a gentleman of intelligence and honor. In the Newbern Journal of July 27th, 1883, the Colonel, referring to the early history of the town, says that Brinson, Fulshire and Purify were imprisoned there for "holding to the Baptist faith—they were held in jail for three months, and were stronger in the faith when the doors of the jail were unlocked than when they were locked up."

4. In the Newbern Journal, Sept. 6th, 1883, Mr. H. S. Nunn, a man of high character, not a Baptist, in an editorial on the "Old Times" in that town says: "We very often hear some of our older citizens speak of the 'times not being like they used to be,' and they generally do it with a sort of leaning to the idea that the 'old times' were the best. No doubt but the generation that preceded them thought about the same thing, viz., that the old way of doing things was better than the new fangled notions of to day. Now let us go back about two generations and see how the times were in Newbern. "In looking over the old dusty records in the Register's office, we find an entry in the minute docket of the county court in 1741 noting the application by Baptists to be allowed to build a church in Newbern. Instead of granting the application, these applicants were all publicly whipped, bound over to keep the peace, and required to give bond for their good behaviour, and also to take the test oath.

"While these extreme, we might with propriety say now barbarous, measures were being taken to prohibit freedom of conscience in 1741, we find that in 1747 a contract was given to John Bryan to build a jail for Craven county 30 feet long, 16 feet wide and 10 feet pitch, for 1,200 pounds, which would be about $6,000 in U. S. currency. The object of government in those days seems to have been to oppress the people."

Mr. Nunn, the editor of the Journal, made this personal investigation of these old court records at the request of Rev. John T. Albritton, now of Mt. Olive, with the view of knowing the facts about the imprisonment and whipping of Baptists in that town. Mr. Albritton says: "I wrote to the Newbern Journal asking for an examination of the records concerning the persecution of the Newbern Baptists. I wrote a few weeks before the editorial of Sept. 6th, 1883, relative to said persecution, appeared in the Newbern Journal. The Journal men very promptly responded to my request." No one, so far as we know, ever called in question his statements, or the statements of Col. Whitford as made in the Journal.

Board of Missions.

The Board of Missions and Sunday-schools was in session Monday night, March 27th, and transacted much business. Delegates to the Baptist Educational Society, which is to meet in Nashville, Tenn., May 11th, and delegates to the Southern Baptist Convention, so far as request had been sent in to the Board, were appointed.

The following, offered by the Corresponding Secretary, was unanimously passed, viz:

"WHEREAS, The Southern Baptist Convention at its last session in giving instruction to its Centennial Committee, said: 'That the committee be instructed to act in conference and concert with the Boards of this Convention and with the various State Boards;' and whereas, it has been reported to us that some misunderstandings exist about the appointments in this State of Dr. W. D. Powell, therefore Resolved, That this Board extends to Bro. Powell a most cordial welcome, and request Dr. T. H. Pritchard, chairman of the State Centennial Committee, to secure his services and arrange his appointments to aid pastors and churches in their Centennial work wherever, in our Convention, his aid has been or may be requested."

Ratified the 6th day of March, A. D. 1893.

Some Notes on the Centennial.

Dr. Powell stated to the Centennial Committee that about $130,000 had been secured on the Permanent Fund. The Foreign Mission Board reported $31,470.70 in hand for the Centennial, $14,623.32 of which was for the Permanent Fund, and $13,800, nearly half, for enlargement of the Foreign work. In addition, the regular receipts had increased $3,642.38.

The Home Mission Board reported over $20,000 in hand for the Centennial work. How much of this may be included in Dr. Powell's report I do not know, but I should think a considerable amount of it is not.

The little State of Maryland, with only 12,000 or 14,000 Baptists, has already paid over $26,000 to the Centennial fund, nearly half of which goes to enlargement. The Eutaw Place church, of which Dr. Ellis is pastor, has given over $17,000 of this large sum, and that is the most liberal donation I have seen from any church, North or South. The Clarendon Street church, Boston, Dr. A. J. Gordon, pastor, has given something over $16,000, but that is a larger and richer church than Dr. Ellis'. Indeed, there is one, if not two churches in Baltimore, more wealthy than the Eutaw Place, and several in different parts of the South. It is the spirit of the one man, Dr. Ellis, which has developed this liberality in his church and in the State. The work is already done there.

The Baptists of England, only some three hundred thousand strong, have in hand $350,065, and a poor people they are, too. 'Tis true they began earlier than we, but that is not the secret of their success—that is to be found in the intense interest they take in missions and the mighty enthusiasm this has kindled among them. They felt that they would never see another Centennial, and instead of calculating how poor they were, or how great the burden would be, they went to work with a will, and have done more than was at first proposed.

The Baptists North are considerably behind, having in hand but a little more than half of the million they propose to raise, but they are working like beavers, and may come out victorious yet. Virginia, strange to say, has extended her Centennial year till next October, the time when the General Association meets, and the brethren over there say they expect to raise her quota, $35,000, far more than is asked of North Carolina, though we have as many or more members than they.

Brethren, from the time on let us push the work. The weather is now good. Make a sacrifice of time and labor; go out among the churches and let every church and association do its full duty in bringing to a successful and victorious conclusion this great enterprise.

Take subscriptions to the last moment, even if you cannot collect them in time to report to the Convention in May. It may be, and I doubt not will be, that the Convention will extend the time for collections. But get all you can, and as early as you can.

T. H. PRITCHARD.

To the Pastors and Churches of the Little River Association.

Dear Brethren:—The Centennial Committee has asked our Association for one hundred dollars, which the committee for our Association has divided among the churches as follows:

Antioch, $5.00; Apex, 5.00; Baptist Grove, 5 00; Benson, 5.00; Bethel, 4.00; Buie's Creek, 5.00; Cameron's Grove, 2.00; Canon Grove, 1.00; Friendship, 10.00; Hector's Creek, 10.00; Holly Springs, 5.00; Juniper Springs, 7 50; Lillington, 2.50; Macedonia, 1 00; Mt. Tabor, 4.00; Neill's Creek, 10.00; New Hill, 5 00; New Life, 1.00; Pine Forest, 2 00; Pleasant Ridge, 1.00; Piny Grove, 10.00; Cumberland Union, 5.00.

This money we wish to raise by the fifth Sunday in April and bring it to the Sunday-school Convention at Friendship. It will not do for any church to fail to raise its part. Pastors, brethren and sisters, let it be said in history that our little Association raised one hundred dollars for this special fund in 1893. If any church fails, we must either fail to raise the amount, or some of us do our work and theirs. We cannot afford to fail.

Program for our Sunday-school Convention will soon be sent out.

Fraternally, J. A. CAMPBELL.

A Statement and a Query.

In a certain Baptist church there is a prominent member who has "planted a vineyard," and is extensively engaged in the Devil's work of making and selling by the gallon and quart intoxicating wine as a beverage.

The said Baptist church member will fill up any jug or bottle for any one who goes or sends to his house for "the drink," provided as much as a quart is purchased.

Large advertising boards, with flaring, flaunting letters, setting forth the superior quality of the wine he manufactures and sells, are nailed upon the trees near his house on the roadside, to entice the boys and the drink-loving men that pass by to turn into his lane and buy. And if four men go together and buy a quart, they can divide it out, each one taking a half pint and drink himself to utter drunkenness if he will, and then reel off, staggering home to poor, heart-broken wife and children; and the manufacturer and seller "wipes his mouth," looks pious, and says "I've done no harm"!!

Now for query: What shall a church do with such a member?

We would like to have replies from the brethren to this query. But, right here, in the beginning, we will say that the opinions of those who love to "look upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup," or those who drink it at all, are not wanted. They are not competent to judge this question. Wine drinkers who use "the cup of devils," in any degree, are blear eyed already and cannot see the evil that the Baptist church member aforesaid is doing in the community where he lives.

Dunn, N. C.

Mt. Zion Sunday-school Association.

The next session of Mt. Zion Union Meeting will resolve itself into a Sunday-school Association, which will be held with the Chapel Hill Baptist church, commencing Friday, April 28th, 1893.

PROGRAM.

Friday, 11 o'clock a. m. Devotional exercises and organization. After organization, the following topics are suggested for discussion:—

1. Need of a better acquaintance with Bible teaching and doctrine on the part of Sunday-school teachers. J. C. Hocutt, A. J. Taylor, W. S. Roberson.

2. Importance of aiming at definite results in Sunday-school work. J. F. McDuffie, A. A. Butler, W. A. Albright.

3. Are changes needed as to the literature used in our Sunday-schools; if so, what are they? T. H. Hume, C. Cobb, J. L. Carroll, T. J. Whitaker.

4. The best manner of teaching our distinctive doctrines at home and in our Sunday-schools. W. C. Tyree, J. W. Gore, W. S. Olive, Wm. Couch.

5. To what extent should church control be exercised over the Sunday-school? C. W. Blanchard, M. H. Ellen, Henry Reams, J. H. Olive.

6. Are our children deficient in the spirit of reverence for God and his sanctuary; if so, how can we remedy it? J. W. Watson, W. D. Toy, J. F. Williams, J. W. Proctor.

The Sabbath exercises will be provided for by the pastor and deacons of the Chapel Hill church. Let all of our churches or Sunday-schools send delegates. Please see to it that your church or Sunday-school is represented. C. A. WOODSON, Ch'n.

Notes of Travel.

The month of January was so cold, and so much snow, the rivers being so frozen that one had to sit in the chimney corner. After about four weeks the ice and snow suddenly disappeared, and the sound of the steamboat whistles could be heard, we felt like a captive bird set at liberty. During our confinement the articles of the RECORDER were very enjoyable, especially the one, "The Hymns I Love," by John T. Albritton.

The Court Street Baptist church of Portsmouth, Va., had a protracted meeting of two weeks, conducted by the pastor, Rev. A. E. Owen. The sermon which we heard (2 Peter 3: 11) was a good one, delivered in his usual style.

Our next point was Gilmerton. This place takes its name from the locks which is at the head of the Dismal Swamp Canal, on the Southern branch of the Elizabeth river. It was so named by Ex-Gov. Gilmore of Virginia. We have here no regular organized Baptist church. Rev. N. M. Munden is furnishing the people with preaching. The brethren are making an effort to build a house of worship.

Our next point was Money Point, directly opposite Gilmerton. This place takes its name from tradition, that Captain Kidd, the first pirate, buried his money here. We have no Baptist church at this point. The Presbyterians have a mission house here which they kindly loaned us to hold services in.

We find an article in the Norfolk Virginian of March 7th, headed "Hot Shot," in which a police officer said if he did his duty he would be removed from office. Also, resolutions adopted by the Methodist and Baptist preachers' meetings upholding those who were endeavoring to break up the dens of vice.

Rev. Sam Jones is expected to lecture Friday night, the 24th inst., in Portsmouth for the benefit of the South Street Baptist church. We hope to be able to attend and take notes. The subject is "Manhood and Money," and we hope to be able to give the readers of the RECORDER the benefits of our notes. D. GILLILAND.

Rev. Oscar Haywood on a North Carolina Matter.

Editor Recorder:—A letter from the Rev. J. W. Wildman, in the RECORDER of March 22d, makes a word from me relative to the union of the Anson and the Richmond Associations. When a mere boy, at a meeting of the Pee Dee Association at a church in Richmond county, (the name I now cannot recall) I opposed the division of the old Association, embracing Richmond and Montgomery counties. The motion to divide was carried by a small majority from the churches in Richmond. I predicted then that it would prove detrimental to our cause in that section of the State. I was a true prophet. The brethren of Richmond county seemed to feel that Montgomery was cumbersome to them. I felt then that the leaders of the movement were not exhibiting a spirit of Christian charity. It was a serious, almost fatal, blow to the Baptist cause in Montgomery county. That brave and noble man, Rev. W. M. Bostick, has stood to his post, and he looks out upon a deserted field to day.

Would it not be well for the brethren to take back into the old resurrected Pee Dee one of its former honored members, Montgomery county?

What's the Difference?

Dear Recorder:—To-day I was reading Sister Tatum's letter from China, she said a native Christian was turned off from a much-needed situation because he refused to violate the Sabbath day. Just as I read that, I heard the train approaching Middleburg. I could but think if that engineer had been as faithful a christian as that poor Chinaman, that he would have been treated the same way. We are very much concerned about the heathen in China and talk much of their lost condition, their Sabbath breaking, &c., but is this not the same in the sight of God here as it is in China? Please tell us the difference in Sabbath breaking here and in China. ENQUIRER.

Letter from Arkansas.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—I am truly grateful to you for the privilege of reading the dear old paper another year. In its old age it is not growing feeble and forgetful as I am in the decline of life, but is manly, and even more bouyant and youthful than in its early life. I say without the fear of contradiction that it has done more for the betterment of man than any religious paper in the South. I cite the critic to the ministry and teachers in North Carolina and other States who have ministers and teachers from the Baptist schools of the old Tar Heel State, as it is often called. They are all successful wherever they go, and their influence is felt, and a blessing is a result. Its home influence is indeed great among the farmers and the business men of the State. It stops not in its old age, but is improving weekly and monthly. To God be all the glory.

BY SCATTERHEAD.

"And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 3.

The blessed Son of God has come into this world and has returned home. God made a promise that he would send his only begotten Son into the world "not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved," and he has fulfilled his promise. "Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost." He came as the lowly, self emptied, loving, sympathizing "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He came in love to a lost and ruined world. God's boundless love moved him to send to a lost world, in order to save and bless, the very expression of his perfect love, to-wit, Jesus Christ.

"Jesus of Nazareth" was the brightness of his Father's glory and the "express image of his person" and possessed the same mind, heart and character, and came as God's dear Son to this sin cursed earth to prove to lost men in truth and in deed that "God is love." He came not to bruise, not to crush, but to heal and to "bind up the broken hearted," "to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins. To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace." To the blind he gave sight, and the lame he caused to walk; he cleansed the lepers, unstopped the ears of the deaf, raised the dead, and preached his glorious gospel to the poor. "He was touched with the feeling of our infirmities." He wept with those who wept; to the sorrowing heart he gave joy, and to the weary soul rest.

The Maker of worlds, while here, could be approached by all classes and ages—the poor and rich, the infant as well as those of maturer years were blessed by him. He was ever ready to soothe the sorrowing heart, to feed the hungry, heal the sick, and he made it his daily occupation to minister to man's necessities, ever forgetting his own interest or comfort. "He went about doing good," verifying the statement that he came to minister and not to be ministered unto. He lived not for himself, but for others—for poor fallen, helpless sinners. All his actions, were prompted by love, and he was the embodiment of love. His life was perfect, pure and spotless. The blessed Son of God is gone, as the world rejected him and chose a robber and murderer in his stead. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." The world did not want, neither would it have, Jesus Christ, and we need not wonder at the atrocious crimes committed in the world. Jesus was "taken by wicked hands, crucified and slain." As one man of God has said, "Christ died as a martyr for righteousness under the hand of man. For this man will have to account to God. But he died as a victim for sin under the hand of God. This is the foundation of all blessing to those that believe in his name. The world is stained, and the church purged, by the blood of the cross."

Christ upon the cross shows God's love, and he gave his precious life for us to save us from the pangs of an everlasting hell. The world hated him without a cause, and it cast him out. A short time before he went to the cross, he told his disciples that he would leave them, and their hearts were filled with sorrow on account of his going away. He said to them, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." The blessed Master desired that the sorrowing disciples dry up their tears, and that as they had trusted God without seeing him, and as he was soon to leave them, soon to be taken out of their sight, they should place a like confidence in him. God had made a promise in his Word to them and fulfilled it in the person of his Son, and now to calm the troubled hearts of his disciples, he makes them a promise and desires them to trust him for its fulfilment. "I will come again and receive you unto myself." Our blessed Lord does not say that he will send for us, or that we will go to him when we die—while we know all departed saints are with him; but he does not mean death in this glorious promise, but that he will come the second time. He does not say one thing and mean another, neither will he say one thing and do another. He can not lie nor change his word. "He is not slack concerning his promise as some men count slackness." The Lord seems to tarry, seems to be slow to fulfil his promise, and some fellows are powerful anxious for him to stay away. He has been away so long that some of the "ites" say he will never come back, and this is all in fulfillment of God's unerring Word. "There shall come in the last days scoffers walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Many centuries have come and gone since he made his promise, and yet he lingers, but at the appointed time he will come as he has promised in his Word. "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." "At such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

The hearts of the apostles and early Christians were taught to long and look for the [illegible] Lord Jesus. 1 Thess. 1: 9, 10. [illegible] look for death, but for the per[illegible] of their Lord. We should not [illegible] death, but should be longing, looking for our Lord's return. We know [illegible] should tarry long that we will fall [illegible] The time of our Lord's re[illegible] are not known, but God's [illegible] at least many of them, [illegible] coming of the Bridegroom is drawing nigh. The Lord is impressing this blessed truth upon the minds and hearts of many of his people. Brethren, are you not anxiously watching and waiting for the Lord? Blessed thought, "that in his presence there is fulness of joy, and at whose right hand there are pleasures for ever more."

Realizing the consoling truth from the teachings of God's Word that our Lord will come soon, it behooves us to be more dilgent in the Lord's work. We have no time to idle. What we do, must be done quickly. We will be stimulated to do much work for the Master if we are continually "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." Will not such a blessed hope for which our souls are panting and which we are so soon expecting to realize, move us to live soberly, righteously and godly during our short stay in this vain world? Does it not become us to cut ourselves loose from the perishing things of earth and place our affections upon things eternal? Let us have our loins girded and our lamps burning. The glorious cry may soon break upon our ears, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and could we say with joy in our hearts, "This is my blessed Saviour for whom I have been watching and waiting?" We can say with the apostle, "Whom having not seen we love." When we can get above our wicked, treacherous hearts and this sinful world, and dwell in the presence of our Lord, how sweet and precious is such communion to our souls, and if the joy be so glorious when we are enabled to prostrate ourselves at his feet in this our imperfect state, what will it be when we are enabled to behold him in that sinless, sorrowless state which through him we are to enter? What will it be to see the King in his beauty? We can look up to heaven and know that our blessed Saviour is up there for us. Many of us are anxious to see our absent Lord. He sends us word, brethren, "a little while," soon we shall see him, that he will come back and will never leave us again. "The days of thy mourning will soon be ended." "We have no continuing city here," but we will have an eternal dwelling place with the Lord Jesus; for he has told us, "Where I am there ye may be also." "Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The Brethren at Corinth.

Dear Recorder:—Will you allow me space in your columns to speak a few words in honor of the brethren at Corinth, Rowan county, N. C.

This place was taken up as a mission point of the Pee Dee Association and constituted into a church with twenty members in 1867. The writer was its pastor for the first eight successive years, during which time its membership grew to about one hundred. Since then, brethren J. F. Hodge, H. Sheets, W. G. Morton and G. W. Henderson, its present pastor, have labored with this church successfully. While it has not grown rapidly in numbers, it seems ready to engage in every good word and work. They are now determined to build them a church-house that will compare favorably, if not excel, almost any country church in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

I was agreeably surprised when I received a letter inviting me to be with them on the twenty-third of last month, the day affixed for the laying of the corner-stone of their new house. When I arrived, I found the lumber all ready for the frame and the brethren hard at work on a well-planned and beautiful structure; they had been at work for four days and had the walls nearly up. The foundation is made of beautiful granite blocks. They expect to enclose the walls this spring. This house will be 36x60 and the walls eighteen feet in height, and when complete will certainly be most attractive and an honor to the church and community.

With the usual ceremonies a large granite stone, with a beautiful marble slab embedded in the same, bearing the inscription, "Corinth Baptist Church, Feb. 23, 1893," was put in place.

Brethren Hodge and Henderson were with us, together with a large congregation to witness the exercises of the occasion.

Bro. C. R. Morgan seemed to be leading in the good work, and although he was deprived of a leg in the war, the Lord seems to have given him a liberal share of this world's goods, and he is certainly willing to give a liberal share back in building up his cause. Yours fraternally,

H. MORTON.

The Weight of a Dollar Bill.

In the treasury at Washington, the question once came up as to the weight of a dollar bill. Scales of perfect accuracy were brought into requisition, and the surprising discovery was made that twenty-seven one-dollar notes weighed exactly as much as a twenty-dollar gold piece. The latter just balances 540 grains. However, the bills weighed were perfectly crisp and new. Trial made with soiled notes, such as come in every day for redemption, showed that twenty-seven of them weighed considerably more than the twenty-dollar coin. Every paper dollar, on its way through the world, continually accumulates dirt, perspiration and grease, so that after a year of use it is perceptibly heavier.—Golden Days.

Little girl: "Mrs. Brown, ma wants to know if she could borrow a dozen of eggs. She wants to put 'em under a hen." Neighbor: "So you've got a hen sitting, have you? I didn't know you kept hens." Little girl: "No, ma'am, we don't, but Mrs. Smith's goin' ter lend us a hen that wants ter set, an' ma thought if you'd lend us some eggs we'd find a nest ourselfs."—Ex.

Wise Words.

A wise man understands a good work from the beginning, but a fool only when it comes to an end. Seek the counsel of wise and sensible men, of learned men, of intelligent men, and of men of good disposition, and be thou their friend. Keep thy hands from stealing, thy feet from wandering without work, and thy mind from cherishing wicked revenge; for the man who works righteousness obtains a good reward, and the man that does sin suffers punishment. Do not injure thy soul by wrath and envy. Do not consign thy soul to hell out of a false modesty or shame. Ask God's blessing and keep thy heart cheerful, and thou shalt obtain of the Lord an increase of his goodness. Always, and at every time, trust thou in God alone, and make that beloved to thyself which is increasingly profitable unto thee. Labor and sacrifice thy life for the thing which is of God. Meditate on virtue; do not meditate on sin; for a man does not live forever; therefore the thing that concerns heaven is most befitting thee.—From a Parsee Writer of the Fourth Century.

There is nothing superior to Salvation Oil for the relief and cure of wounds of all kinds. Its effect is marvelous. 25 cts.

"'It cost my father just $1,080 to send me four years to college, and now it costs me $2,500 a year for my son,' was the confession lately made to us. Yes, and that $1,080 education made one of the most successful lawyers of the State, and the chances are that the $2,500 a year will make a good tennis player and a first-rate judge of poor wines! It does not take a great fortune to fit a boy for usefulness, but it costs a good deal to spoil him. And, as a rule, the more money he must dispose of, the deeper he will sink in the dissipations of his time."—Evangelist.

to consumption are ailments we often deem trivial—a cold and a cough. Consumption thus acquired is rightly termed "Consumption from neglect."

Scott's Emulsion

not only stops a cold but it is remarkably successful where the cough has become deep seated.

Scott's Emulsion is the richest of fat-foods yet the easiest fat-food to take. It arrests waste and builds up healthy flesh.

"Paradise" for Sale.

This desirable place is in sight of the ocean and enjoys the delightful sea breeze; five miles from Morehead City, N. C.; bounded on the South by Bogue Sound, on the North by Newport river, both navigable streams; and lawful fences. The Atlantic and North Carolina railroad runs through the centre of the farm and in full view of the residence, with a station near by. The water pure and healthy. The farm contains several different kinds of soil and is adapted to any kind of crops grown in the State. Game, fish, clams, oysters, escallops, etc., are abundant. This place is adapted to trucking, fishing, stock raising, or any other occupation one can follow in the country. "Paradise" contains about five hundred acres, and can be bought for three thousand dollars. This is a rare chance to get a place with so many advantages and no disadvantages, and at so low a price. Who will be the lucky one? Call on or address,

Against the Time of Trial.

As no man knows when the hour of his opportunity will come, so no man knows when the storm of his temptation will suddenly burst upon him. There is no science which can predict the tempests to which every human life is exposed; there is no map on which the storm-centers of the future are indicated; there is no code of signals warning of approaching perils. The strain upon character comes often like a tropical storm, which rises without warning over a cloudless horizon or bursts without the possibility of escape from a radiant sky. There is only one way in which a man can prepare for these sudden and critical strains which are to test the very tissue of his character, and that is the flawless building into truth and righteousness. The oak survives the tempest by virtue of the daily accretions of strength which have entered into it year by year; the man survives the swift and tumultuous advance of temptation by virtue of the moral power which, almost unconsciously, he has slowly accumulated from day to day. It is true that sometimes the strong man suddenly breaks under the strain of instant passion; but, as a rule, the man who breaks is a man in whom the signs of disintegration were already evident. The tree which falls in the silence of a summer day was rotten within; and as a rule, the man who suddenly collapses morally brings to light a process of decay which has long been going on within him. He who is faithful to himself hour by hour is all the while preparing for the storm that may sometime burst upon him. The storm is certain to come. No human life is so sheltered that it escapes those great temptations which, unresisted, play havoc with a man's career. He who lives without the thought of this possibility is as criminally unwise as the captain would be who should give up all care of his ship because, at the moment, waters were smooth and skies were fair. To prepare for peril ought to be the constant solicitude of every man, and this preparation is nothing more than the daily rectitude which becomes first a habit and then a permanent and imperishable character.—Christian Union.

Make Their Acquaintance.

The purpose of the American Baptist Publication Society is to furnish a varied religious literature, adapted to aid in the growth of the denomination, and in the spiritual life of the individual. Those who know the Society's publications need no commendation. To those who do not know them, the Society will cheerfully supply samples of its periodicals, with catalogues and price list of their other publications free.

Lend a Hand.

Where? How? Each in his own sphere, whether that sphere may be in a permanent place or in one of temporary sojourn. There is no spot on this planet where any of God's intelligent creatures can divest himself of his responsibilities or innocently shirk the performance of his duties. Everywhere he must lend a hand in the furtherance of God's cause, the advancement of his kingdom, and in the saving of souls. In deciding how this can be best furnished, he must take into consideration his own talents, adaptability, and environments. What is duty to one in certain circumstances may not be duty to another. God gives to every man his own work, the work for which God has qualified him, to which he has called him, and for the performance of which he will hold him accountable.—The Treasury.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Peach Tree Borer.

The "borer," which infests the roots of the peach tree should receive prompt attention during early spring. This grub is the larval form of a small, steel-blue, wasp-like moth, sannina exitiosa. The female moth lays her eggs in spring-time on the bark, at or near the collar of the tree. From the egg hatches the grub, which gnaws its way downwards into the roots, leaving behind it a tunnel which soon becomes filled with gum. This grub lives in the root one year. The following remedy is confidently recommended:

Scrape away the soil from about the collar of the tree and find the holes from which gum exudes. Probe these with a sharp-pointed wire. Then before replacing the soil, wash the base of the tree with the following mixture: Sour or butter milk, one gallon; hydraulic cement, five tablespoonfuls. Make and use fresh, applying with a brush or rag. The cement will form a thin coating on the bark of the tree through which the grub will be unable to gnaw its way. The liquid should be applied from below the surface to a height of twelve inches. The soil scraped away should then be replaced and tramped solid.—Gerald McCarthy, N. C. Experiment Station.

To the Preachers of the Raleigh Association.

Brethren:—The time for our Centennial work is very short, and probably it is not possible to make a personal canvass of the churches. But the opportunity of making an offering must not go unimproved. We have decided, therefore, to ask each preacher in the Raleigh Association to bring this matter up at once, and to take a collection in each church he serves. Do not worry yourself nor your churches about the several different objects to which it can be appropriated. Take it for "the Centennial of Missions." Let it be the offering of each church towards celebrating the great Centennial year. Do not delegate it to the sisters, nor to the Sunday-schools (unless between your appointments they can see and solicit something from every member). But the time is so short that unless something is done at once, some churches will fail to have a part in this work.

Brethren, make the appeal yourselves. Give all necessary explanations. Let this offering be entirely separate from the regular work of the church. And by or before the third Sunday in April, see that each church is reported with its Centennial collection to Bro. J. D. Boushall, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C. Now, brethren, to the work, and do not fail to have each church included.

"30 Cents More."

"No, indeed, I'm not going to do it," and Mrs. Dent dusted away with all her might; the dust fairly flew from chair, and table, and sofa and desk.

"There is no use talking about it, I am not going to do it. I never saw anything like it; last spring we all had to have chapel cards, and scrimp and save for nearly a year now to get the five dollars to them. Lots of the folks had to take two, one for home and one for foreign missions; but they didn't dare ask me to take but one. Now, after scrimping and saving all this time to get five dollars, they want thirty cents more and ten cents a piece from the children! It is just ridiculous!" And the duster gained in speed.

"I've done without more things—without—I can't tell how many things,"—and she did not particularize, for somehow she couldn't tell just what she had done without, but there had been such a sense of enforced economy ever since she took that card. True new hats had been forthcoming each season, just the particular Sunday that she had wanted them, with the usual array of feathers and jet, and flowers and ribbon, and pretty dresses for herself and Lucy had not failed to put in an appearance when needed. Christmas, too, had brought the usual amount of gifts,—and there was the new sofa right before her that she had managed to get from savings out of the 'house money,' just in time for the little tea drinking she gave last week. Still, there had been all along that feeling of financial pressure on account of the five dollars to be given on the chapel card, and which only a few weeks ago she had paid in with something of a relief that it was done at last. And now to be asked for thirty cents more, and ten cents from the children—there was only one of them, to be sure, in her family,—but she would have to pay for that, and they wanted it at once, when it was only three weeks ago she gave the five dollars.

"It is just ridiculous, that's all! Of course the money is not coming in as they would like. I said at first, the South cannot raise two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the Centennial, beside the regular missionary expenses. The South is too poor; it has not gotten over the war yet. I do declare," she exclaimed, dropping her dusting as she looked out of the window, "if Mrs. Lee isn't going after poor Sallie Thornton for thirty cents more, when she has already filled two cards. I suppose she had to take two as her husband was a minister, and of course she'll scrimp herself and the children and give it."

And there across the street was "poor Sallie Thornton" ready to be victimized. She was out in her little flower garden, and the bright February sun of the far South was sending warm rays down upon the hyacinth and violet beds, rousing the sweet blossoms from their winter nap and making them fill the air with their fragrance.

"This bunch of hyacinths needs straightening a little, and I must put a prop 'neath this slender stem with its burden of curly pink bells. And oh, those violet roots need the earth pressed closer about them. I will have a little more time for it all now, and uncle Billy will be here to spade up the ground this afternoon," she said to herself musingly, as she walked about.

The day made one feel as if just let out from prison, and Mrs. Thornton's mind was atune with the day. She had accomplished something she had striven for, and felt free now that it was done. She had been saving and saving almost a year for it. To be sure she had to be saving always, but there had been real downright pinching times the past year. The little house beyond the garden silently told a story of poverty. One corner was settling down a little, and there had been no paint on its outer walls for many a year. And inside there were four pairs of rosy cheeks that gathered about the table at each meal, and four sets of toes always pushing through their respective shoes, and four little bodies always needing something. And the bread winner, the husband and father, lay asleep on the hillside yonder, and the sweet violets and pink bells are so carefully tended that their fragrance may sweeten the green mound above him.

Sure enough, Mrs. Lee stopped before the house, and after considerable talk across the fence, passed on. And somehow there was a change, the day did not seem so nice, and certainly Mrs. Thornton's face was not so bright. She went into the house and took up her sewing, a dress that must be ready for a customer that afternoon.

"I surely have given every cent that I possibly can," she said, with troubled face; and as she worked her thoughts were very busy. She had not time to put aside the work and get upon her knees for counsel with God, as she longed to do, but soon an earnest prayer was rising above the busy hands. At last the face was as full of peace and calm as when she stood among the flowers. That afternoon Dilly Thornton and Lucy Dent were together as usual, for the little girls were devoted friends, as their mothers had been long years ago. They were busily chatting away in Mrs. Dent's room while she sewed on a dainty lace dress for Lucy, with lips more tightly compressed than usual.

"Oh, I'm so glad the party 's almost here," said Lucy; "won't we have a good time?"

Dilly's face grew suddenly sober, and Lucy, quick to notice, said, "What's the matter?"

"I am not going," said Dilly quietly, but there was a quiver about the little mouth, and the eyes winked hard several times. Mrs. Dent looked up just in time to see it.

"Not going," said Lucy; "and why not?" indignantly.

Dilly said nothing at first, then when pressed, said at last, "Mamma cannot buy me the dress this week as she thought she could."

"Well," said Lucy after a moment, toning down her wrath the best she could, "I think your mamma treats you dreadful."

There was an immediate straightening up of Dilly's little form, and her bright eyes flashed as she said, "My mamma is the best mamma in the world, and I did not mind giving up the dress," with an effort to be very brave, "for I want the Centennial to be a big success, and we children promised mamma last spring we would do without 'most ev'ry thing and help her lots. We got our ten dollars for two chapel cards, and such good times we did have seeing it pile up; we had a stack of five centses so high," she said, measuring with her little hands. "And then Mrs. Lee came to day and told mamma they wanted every body to give thirty cents more right away—all the grown-up folks, I mean, and the children ten cents, so that would make seventy cents for us, and mamma couldn't buy—but I don't care nothing about the party," she concluded stoutly, —and Mrs. Dent did not hear any more. She had suddenly left her sewing and gone out in her front yard. She stood a moment relieved to feel the fresh air on her rather hot face. Then uncle Billy came along with his spade on his shoulder.

"Doan yer want dis heah flower gardin spaded up, missus?" said he.

"Yes, I do, uncle Billy," she said, "would like it done right away."

"All right, missus, all right; unker Billy is de man what kin do it fer yer. I had a job fer Mis' Sallie ober dare," pointing across the street, "'gaged it dis mornin', but she say now she fin' she can't 'ford ter have it done, dat she and de chillun kin work it so's it'll do. I tole her I'd spade it 'thout any pay, but she say I shan' do it. Ne'm mind, I gwine spade it sum mornin' fo' she up. I bet she savin' money fer dem dare commissionaries what goes ter dem heatheners. I neber seed seeh a 'oman fer dat. She wus a tellin' me 'bout dot dare Centenny what we alls is a havin', an' she say 'tain gwine be nuthin' 'cep'n ever'body, eben Hannah an' me, give dat dare thirty cents. When I tole Hannah she say we got ter do bedout terbaccy. De Lord knows I did'n see how we gwine lib bedout dat—but we is, an'"—by this time uncle Billy was at work spading, and Mrs. Dent had gone into the house. She sat down alone, and the tears trickled down her face. For a long time she had fought against the influence of that old friend across the street; she had tried to shut her eyes to the self-sacrifice quietly practiced over there; but the Centennial efforts of the devoted woman were too much—Mrs. Dent broke down at last.

At the next meeting of the ladies' missionary society she asked for two more chapel cards, saying she wanted to fill another for herself, and one for Lucy before the year was out. She paid the "thirty cents more," also, for herself and husband, and ten cents for Lucy.

Then, too, her energetic hand had been busy with the thought of how easily the Centennial offering could be raised, if all the Baptists in the South would only give thirty cents apiece. Over a million Baptists in the South, what an everlasting shame it would be to them if they failed to raise the small Centennial offering of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars! She was enthusiastic on the subject, and the enthusiasm was catching. Everybody at the meeting was inspired with renewed hope. They determined their town should be well worked up at once. Every Baptist man, woman, and child should give their thirty or ten cents; or if any positively refused they would make it up among them—success was the result.

Oh, yes, children, Dilly went to the party after all, and she had on a dress that Lucy's mother must have made, for it was just like Lucy's.—Mrs. E. Y. Mullins, Baltimore, Md.

A Strong Endorsement.

The St. Louis Trade Review and Export Journal in its issue of February 7th, 1893, has this to say:

EDWARDS & BROUGHTON.

One of the leading enterprises of its character in the entire South is the extensive printing and binding establishment, owned and conducted by the firm of Edwards & Broughton, and located at the corner of Hargett and Salisbury streets, Raleigh, N. C. The gentlemen constituting this firm, Mr. C. B. Edwards and Mr. N. B. Broughton, are and have been for many years among Raleigh's prominent and substantial business men and citizens. Mr. Edwards is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Franklin county, and has made this city his home for the past quarter of a century, while Mr. Broughton, also a native of North Carolina, was born in Wake county, and has resided in Raleigh since 1858. They began their present co-partnership about twenty-two years ago. The plant is one of the finest in the South, equipped with the best of presses, etc., and with every improvement and convenience. They do a general printing business in all its branches, and carry in stock a fine line of stationery, letter heads, bill heads, statements, fine wedding stationery, etc., and at prices that no house can discount, quality considered. Catalogues, posters, circulars, etc., will be furnished upon the shortest possible notice. They also conduct a general binding business, manufacturing everything in the line of blank books. With their extraordinary facilities and employing only the best skilled workmen, they are enabled to produce a grade of goods that cannot be surpassed by the product of any firm in the country, no matter where located. Prices, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application either personally or by mail, and all orders will receive prompt and careful attention. They have a large trade from outside the city, and parties residing at surrounding points will save money and receive the very best of satisfaction by giving this firm the benefit of their patronage.

Elizabeth City.

Elizabeth City is not as big as the World's Fair City, but to the Baptists of the State it should be of some special importance this year; for here the State Convention will meet in December. We are making preparations for it. Have decided to build and pay for a new Sunday-school room to accommodate seven hundred by that time.

The church is adding to its membership—four by letter and one by baptism in the past ten days.

I have accepted two invitations to return to Virginia as commencement orator in June—one at Ryland Institute, Suffolk, and the other at the Southwestern Virginia Institute at Glade Spring.

The Lord greatly inclines the people to hear the word at the Baptist church here.

CHARLES S. BLACKWELL.

Chowan Association.

The next session of the Chowan Baptist Association will convene with the church at Plymouth, N. C., on Tuesday, May 23, 1893. Delegates from the counties east of Chowan river and Albemarle sound will take passage on the steamer "Plymouth" at Edenton and reach Plymouth at 6 o'clock p. m. The steamer makes daily connection with the train on N. & S. R. R. at Edenton, and can carry 150 passengers.

Visitors from up the State (Raleigh and Wake Forest) may come either by the way of Rocky Mount or Weldon, coming direct to Plymouth by the A. & R. R. R.

Committee on Hospitalities will meet the brethren at the wharf and provide homes for them. T. J. RIDDICK, Clerk.

Sandy Cross, March 23, 1893.

South Yadkin S. S. Association.

The South Yadkin Sunday school Association will meet with New Bethany church, Iredell county, Friday before the fifth Sunday in April, 1893. The program is as follows:

Friday 11 a. m., sermon—N. S. Jones.

Friday afternoon—Reading and discussion of reports from the Sunday-schools.

Saturday a. m., 9:30—Devotional exercises.

PRACTICAL SUBJECTS.

1. Are not the young members of our churches sadly neglected? If so, what is the remedy? W. J. Hopkins, J. B. Holman.

2. How shall we best enlist our Sunday-schools in the mission work? W. A. Pool, W. B. Clemment.

3. How can we best equip our Sunday-school? C. S. Caswell, Dr. J. W. Wiseman.

Sunday 9:30 a. m., Sunday-school mass meeting. Preaching at night.

R. W. WOODWARD, &c.

Bertie Union Meeting.

The next session of the Bertie Union meets with the church at Pine Forest. Elder Curtis is to preach (by appointment) the introductory sermon; Bro. E. S. Reaves alternate; Elder T. T. Speight the missionary sermon, with Elder F. N. Bristoe as alternate.

First practical subject—The Centennial movement and its beneficial results. Appointees to open the discussion: Bro. J. A. Buxton and Elder Craig.

2. The advisability of dividing the Bertie Union Meeting into two or more bodies; and if so, why? Bro. Albert Vann and Elder C. B. Williams.

3. The best method of working the churches up to their duty to the several Boards of the Convention. Bro. C. W. Mitchell and Elder Scarboro.

4. The duty of pastors and churches to Sunday-schools and superintendents. Bro. Fousbee and Elder Curtis.

5. The duty of Baptists to teach their distinctive principles. Bro. J. H. Evans and Elders T. G. Wood.

Baptist Quarterly Review.

Rev. J. G. Bow, Louisville, Ky., proposes to begin at an early date the publication of a quarterly magazine, The Baptist Quarterly Review. He has secured leading men of the denomination North and South as contributors. The mechanical execution will be first-class, and the quarterly will contain about one hundred pages. Subscription price, $2.00 per year.

He proposes to begin publication as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are secured to justify the enterprise.

If you will encourage the enterprise and want the Quarterly Review, send him a postal card, at once entering your name as a subscriber. No money to be sent till you receive the first number. Address,

Preparation for Old Age.

The youngest among us are preparing an Indian summer of peace or laying the foundations of an unhappy old age. It is a long look ahead, but it is inevitable. Unless we mellow and soften and ripen with years, unless we deepen the channel of the spiritual [illegible] we exercise a noble self-control and live for pure, high, generous aims, there can be no Indian summer for the soul. The aftermath is gathered from all that has [illegible] The peevish, repining, [illegible] old man and woman of real life are often those whom fortune has hardened by lavish benefits. Only the deep, inner life, the tender, homely virtues of modesty and self forgetfulness, can give this beautiful time of gleaning in God's latest harvest, when the stubble and the reaped uplands wear a golden light. Let us strive to be worthy of that time of rest that makes the little sheaf of old age as precious as the full barns of middle life. There are characters we can predict early will have a loveless, lonely, wretched time when the burden of years is laid upon them, because of inward obstructions and unbridled passions and appetites. There are others whose faces, while still young, show what they will be when years put on the white crown. The girl is often seen retrospectively in the old woman. We say, "How beautiful she must have been!" discerning in the shipwreck of old age the remains of a vanished loveliness. There are others, plain in youth, who grow more beautiful as age advances. A new face has formed in the soul, and in time there it is, shaped and painted from the indestructible forms and colors that are subtly made out of ideals. We think less often than we should of the old men and women we are to be if it is God's purpose to let us go down the slope of life. Day by day we should seek to hive a little mellow sunshine for our Indian summer, hiding it in the heart, out of that blessed way of living that thinks not of self-indulgence, but gives all it is and all it hopes to be to God and his suffering world.—Christian Register.

Your dealer can get lamp-chimneys that almost never break from heat, or those that break continually. Whichdoes he get? Which do you get?

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat; not one in a hundred breaks in use. The glass is clear as well as tough. They are accurate, uniform.

Be willing to pay more for chimneys that last till they rot, unless some accident happens to them.

New Spring Dress Goods.

Among the new Dress Goods for the Spring will be noticed some distinct changes, both as to colors and styles, from those of the past season.

Our advance lines of Dress Fabrics for this season are already on sale, and embraces the newest shades and textures in Plain Materials, as well as the latest ideas in the handsomer French Novelties.

This year, Cotton Dress Fabrics will be shown in many dainty effects, and our present exhibit of these is the most extensive we have ever made.

We suggest to our patrons to buy early, as most of these goods are our own importations, consequently many styles once sold cannot be duplicated.

Requests for samples should indicate something as to colors, and about what price goods are desired.

Cash with the order, of $5.00 and over, goods will be delivered free (except furniture and crockery) to the nearest Express Office or Railroad station.

A CHANCE OF A LIFE-TIME.

Here is your opportunity. I am in a great struggle to raise the money to pay off the indebtedness on Walnut Cove and Ruffin churches. You can help me and help yourself. I have made an arrangement with R. H. Woodward & Co. of Baltimore to furnish the Life, Wit and Wisdom of Charles H. Spurgeon, a book of nearly 600 pages, and written with Spurgeon's approval before his death, and also a six months' membership in R. H. Woodward's Book Buyers Bureau, by which you can buy any book at Wholesale Prices. Book finely bound in cloth and certificate of membership in Bureau sent, postpaid, for $1.25.

Also, I will furnish the Holman Self-Pronouncing Bible, which has all the Oxford helps, and bound with elegant binding—French Seal, Persian Seal, Palestine Levant, and Levant, at a discount of 25 per cent. This is the best Bible published. Address,

Persons desiring entertainment during the World's Fair will find it to their advantage to address the First Baptist church of South Chicago, Ill. In addition to finding good entertainment near the Exposition at reasonable rates, you will also aid a struggling church in paying off a heavy debt. We commend this church to the confidence of all. So says J. W. Conley, Superintendent Chicago Baptist City Missions.

MARRIED.

BOOTHE—STEELE—On March 12th, 1893, in Roxboro, N. C., by Rev. W. F. Watson, Mr. S. M. Boothe and Miss Lena S. Steele, both of Virginia.

TURNER—DOWNEY—On March 15, 1893, at the residence of the bride's father in Granville county, N. C., by Rev. C. A. Jenkens, Mr. L. B. Turner and Miss Lucy M. Downey.

CARRINGTON—WATKINS—On March 22, 1893, at the residence of the bride's father in Granville county, N. C., by Rev. C. A. Jenkens, Mr. Luther M. Carrington and Miss Lizzie J. Watkins.

KING—LAWHON—On March 15th, 1893, at the residence of the bride's father, near Crane's Creek church, Moore county, N. C., by Rev. L. R. Dixon, Mr. Joseph F. King and Miss Ida Lawhon, both of Moore county.

DIED.

SEAWELL—At Mocshanne, Moore county, on the morning of March 15th, Eleazer Quimby Seawell, aged about eighty-five years. Deceased had been for about sixty years a member of Friendship Baptist church, and died with bright hopes of a never-ending rest beyond the dark river. Among his last words were "We shall all get home after awhile."

COM.

STEWART—After thirty years of helpless confinement with rheumatism, on March 13th, at 11 o'clock p. m., sister Sarah J. Stewart closed a life of the most intense suffering known to any of her acquaintances. She had been a member of a Baptist church for forty years. Her funeral was preached by Rev. John Prevatt, on March 15th, at 11 o'clock—theme, "Be ready." Peace to her ashes.

BROTHER.

COOK—Bro. Lewis Cook of Mt. Carmel Baptist church was born April 5th, 1834, professed faith in Christ in 1854, and died Feb. 10th, 1893. He was a deacon of the church, and a consistent brother through all the walks of life. He loved his church and its work, and was ever ready to co-operate with his pastor. We will miss him, brethren and sisters of Mt. Carmel, but if we are faithful, we will meet him after a while. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss. May there be grace sufficient to sustain the bereaved family.

PASTOR.

Palmerville, March 24, 1893.

BUNTING—Mrs. Florence Badger Bunting died near Portsmouth, Va., of typhoid fever, Oct. 25th, 1892, aged nineteen years. She was a sweet Christian woman, the life of Mulberry Baptist church, to a great extent, of which she was a member.

I cannot tell how much sorrow I felt when the other day I visited the home of her Christian parents, for the first time in a year, and on asking where sister Florence was, they said she had gone to heaven.

Dear parents, sister, little brother and husband, don't grieve. Let the fact that sister Florence "has gone to heaven" comfort your hearts. May we all meet her one day "beyond the river where the surges cease to roll."

C. W. MATTHEWS.

HOLLAND—Died, at his home in Harnett county, on February 1st, 1893, David C. Holland, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

Bro. Holland had not been well for several months, and gradually grew worse until he fell asleep and was at rest with the Lord. For many years whenever the roll of churches in the Raleigh Association was called he always answered with the letter and contributions from Kinney's Creek church. We missed him from the last session, and his absence was referred to. He was a quiet man, very careful and upright in all dealings, and loved his church and all the work of the Lord, and believed in faithfulness and fidelity to all his pledges.

Bro. Holland was one of a large family in Wake county, whose name is to be found in the minutes of the Raleigh Association for the last fifty years or more, and who have done a great work for their denomination in all this section, and in Harnett, Moore, Chatham and Johnston counties.

May the Lord qualify others to take the place of these departing servants of his.

Building.

We are building every day,
In a good or evil way,
And the structure as it grows,
Will our inmost self disclose,—

Till in every arch and line
All our faults and failings shine;
It may grow a castle grand,
Or a wreck upon the sand,

Do you ask what building this,
That can show both pain and bliss,
That can be both dark and fair?
Lo! its name is character.

Build it well, whate'er you do;
Build it straight, and strong, and true;
Build it clean and high and broad;
Build it for the eye of God.

The Backward Child.

Everybody is ready to pet and praise the forward child, the child whose cleverness reflects credit upon his parents and teachers, and whose attainments are felt to be a testimonial to his school and to forecast for himself a successful future when school days shall be over. Father and mother point with pride to Willie's certificates of progress, to Willie's prizes, to Willie's proficiency in arithmetic and grammar, to Willie's fondness for study and the ease with which he acquires difficult lessons. Not long ago I heard a man of large experience in affairs, himself the winner of fortune in the teeth of adverse circumstances, exclaim in the presence of his son, a bright lad of twelve: "Fred is a genius! He always comes out at the head of his class. As for these drawings, which you observe show uncommon talent and skill, why, he doesn't labor over them, does he, mamma? They are sketched as fast as his pencil can move. It's perfectly amazing!" Freddie, standing by, cool and complacent, accepted this homage with a superb air of indifference; he was evidently accustomed to parental tributes and they had ceased to be an incentive. The probability was that Freddie had touched high water mark. He would never do much better work than he was doing now. The motive for study had been taken away by the indiscreet admiration of an overfond father.

Yet I believe in praise for young and old. Human nature is dependent on affectionate appreciation of its endeavors. Few ever outgrow the necessity to be approved by those with whom they associate in the everyday intercourse of the household. The weary wife toiling on at her common tasks, as wives must—at the making and mending, baking and sweeping, saving and scrimping which fall into the daily lot of so many women—brightens up and receives new courage if her husband takes the time and trouble to praise her. His gratified notice of her pretty and tasteful gown or of the arrangement of her hair fills the morning with sunshine, and he, too, great strong fellow though he be, goes on his way rejoicing if the dear wife give him a kind, commendatory word.

If grown people love, nay, absolutely require praise, and find it as manna on the hard road of life, it cannot surprise us that children thrive on such a diet judiciously administered. The care should be, however, not to feed their vanity while endeavoring to train them in a proper degree of self reliance and a just measure of self esteem.

The backward child—backward for whatever cause—is in little danger of spoiling from this source. He, or she, may be physically weak, may perhaps be physically infirm, without the knowledge of busy parents or preoccupied teachers. Often a little child is scolded or punished for inattention when the ear is at fault, not the mind. That delicate organ is not quick to receive impressions, has lost its sensitiveness through injury or cold, and a deaf child is blamed for not hearing aright, or for not answering promptly when called. A boy or girl may be color blind or short-sighted, or far-sighted, and for this reason be unable to keep pace with mates whose sight is normal. Do not be hasty to condemn a child for something which is only a misfortune or a calamity, not a fault. A little gentle experimenting in the home will frequently solve the problem which is the perplexity of the class room.

Again, a child is often backward because, in a graded school, he or she is not adjusted properly to the rank selected. The preparatory work may have been imperfectly done and the poor little backward pupil may be, in reality, toiling far harder, and with more conscientious effort, than the brilliant comrade who surpassed him with so little difficulty. Class-room triumphs do not always tell when the race is run in the later life, and the qualities of diligence, fidelity and responsibility are incomparably beyond some which make a greater show, as, for instance, facility, a talent for memorizing and a readiness to imitate.

The backward child is just as interesting to the teacher who takes hold of his profession as the other who penetrates mysteries at a glance and recites a lesson glibly after a few minutes' study. In fact, the backward pupil should awaken the stronger sympathy, the greater interest, for there is, could it but be discovered, a reason for the slower mental process and a compensation also in a power to grasp and to retain what is once mastered, which in the long run is as useful as the opposite faculty of easy attainment. That mother or teacher who is wise enough and clear-sighted enough to recognize and consider the claims of the [illegible] to estimate the demands made by [illegible] growth, and to take heed to the indications of nature in the child's own attractions and repulsions, will very probably be [illegible] The manly little fellow may [illegible] to his books just yet, but [illegible] book of life has its fascinating pages open before his eyes, and he may by and by be a botanist, a geologist, or an astronomer. If he can be lured to any single occupation or pursuit, though it be nothing beyond some little daily "chore" which helps mother, let him be praised for achievement in this, and never allow him to be rated lower than another so long as you are convinced that he is honestly doing his best.

The backward child may indeed be deficient in application, not in capacity. Should this be so, arouse him, not by a hailstorm of nagging or a downpour of fault finding, but by a system of rewards lovingly adapted to his disposition and character. Suffer no discouragement to creep into your own heart concerning him, and do not allow him or her to feel that there is reason for any doubt about the reaching the top of the ladder in due season. The top, mind, not the middle rounds; any one can reach these. Set a definite aim before your child, cultivate a high and noble ideal, but be willing to climb slowly. Haste is at the root of many a failure, haste and lack of thoroughness as one goes on.

With tender regret for lost opportunities, who has not sometimes seen a mature woman timid, self-conscious, handicapped from youth to gray hairs simply because she was a "backward" child once, and therefore was snubbed and ridiculed and pushed into the background, while her sisters and brothers bore off the honors and were the objects of universal estimation? A wrong for life was done to the little daughter, and her daughter may perhaps suffer from the same old mistake, for wrongs are far reaching. Be pitiful and just to the backward child in your home.—Margaret E. Sangster.

As a Last Resort.

WILLIAMSBURG, N. C., Sept. 5, 1892.

Mr. Jno. N. Webb:

Dear Sir:—In January last I was attacked with LaGrippe, after I partially recovered I had a stroke of facial paralysis. After trying all the remedies prescribed by the doctors without finding any relief, I saw your Electropoise advertised, and testimonials by the best men of the State of its merits. I was induced to try it. For five months I had been in this condition. I commenced the use of the Electropoise and after the third application of the instrument found myself improved and have continued to improve and now I suffer very little inconvenience. Can open and shut my eye and talk most as well as ever, and believe that by a skillful use of the Poise I will be fully restored. I can cheerfully recommend the instrument to all who are afflicted.

Reasons for the Frequency of Murder.

The courts permit delay for which the only excuse is the technical quibbling of lawyers on points that in reason should admit of no quibbling whatever. When a red-handed murderer comes to the bar, his guilt quite certain, his legitimate punishment clearly defined, the criminal lawyer—term often grimly correct—begins his efforts to annul the statutes, insult the intelligence of the tribunal, ignore the voice of the people and trample upon every precept of right and common sense and decency. The manifest guilt of the defendent seems to lessen no whit his chance of escape. If indicted for having killed his wife with a hickory club, when in reality he had used one of oak, he can be certain of walking forth a free man. A lawyer who would thus cheat the gallows becomes, morally, an accessory after the fact, and, instead of fattening on illgotten fees, should be himself arraigned at the bar.

Insanity as a plea has opened the way of escape to many a gory cut throat. Probably in ninety-nine out of one hundred cases where it serves the plea is a pretense that should be swept aside as worthless. Almost any murderer, with money, can become insane enough to suit his purpose. Expert testimony, reversible, is always for sale.

There are many other reasons for the frequency of murder. Pernicious literature has devised a halo for the beetle browed assassin, so small boys as well as women come to worship at his cell. By punishing the murderer, society cannot only solve this problem, but, in time, can overcome the reproach that now rests upon America of having the largest proportion of murderers of any nation on the globe.—The San Francisco Examiner.

Little Things.

Little words are the sweetest; little charities fly farthest and stay longest on the wing; little lakes are the stillest; little hearts are fullest, and little farms are the best tilled. Little books are most read, and little songs are the dearest loved. And when nature would make anything especially rare and beautiful, she makes it little—little pearls, little diamonds, little dews. Agur's is a model prayer; but then it is a little one, and the burden of the petition is but for little, but the last dedication discourse was an hour. Life is made up of littles; death is what remains of them all. Day is made up of little beams, and night is glorious with little stars.—The Baptist.

Light.

Lord, send thy light,
Not only in the darkest night,
But in the shadowy, dim twilight,
Wherein my strained and aching sight
Can scarce distinguish wrong from right,
Then send thy light.

Teach me to pray
Not only in the morning gray,
Or when the moonbeam's silver ray
Falls on me,—but at high noonday
When pleasure beckons me away,
Teach me to pray.

—Constance Milman in The Spectator.

A Doctor on Long Dresses.

A reporter of the Chicago Tribune says: "I called on a doctor to ask him what he thought of the talk about typhoid fever. He is one of those doctors who can afford to be brusque, and your brusque man is apt to be honest. He heard my question, and still looking over his book, never lifting his eyes, he replied: 'There are worse things than typhoid fever stalking the streets of Chicago, and men are running after them instead of avoiding them. I mean the long dresses which fashion has ordered women to wear. A long dress on the street picks up the refuse of the walks, and the woman who wears one carries enough germ life to her home to sicken the whole family. I would like to see these people who are always on the alert for epidemics take care of themselves and use a little common sense. If my daughter wore one of those long dresses, which she does not to my knowledge, I would make her take it off in the outhouse and have it cleaned before it was brought into her own room.'"

Cold Water as a Disinfectant.

It is a fact that appears to be not generally known, perhaps because it may not be generally credited, that pure, fresh, cold water is one of the most valuable of disinfectants, inasmuch as it is a powerful absorbent. Every sick room should have a large vessel of clear water, frequently renewed, placed not far from the bed, or even beneath it. This not only absorbs much of the hurtful vapor, but by its evaporation it softens and tempers the atmosphere, doing away with the dryness which is so trying and depressing to an invalid, or even to well persons, for that matter. It has frequently been shown, by actual experiment, that troubled sleep and threatened insomnia are corrected by so simple a thing as the placing of an open bowl of water near the sufferer's couch. Of course, it need hardly be said, after these matters have been considered, that water which had stood for any length of time in a close room is not proper for drinking purposes.—Good Housekeeping.

The Best Milkers.

The best milkers that we ever saw milk a cow use both hands and milk rapidly. They adapt their handling to the size and shape of the teats, using all the fingers on large teats, and only the thumb and forefinger on small teats, or, with small teats, bending the thumb in and milking with the thumb-knuckle and forefinger. Habitually they milked with dry hands, and without wetting the teats. Some use a small clothes brush for brushing off the udder before milking. We should never allow our cows to be milked with wet hands, whether wet with water or milk; we know of no surer way of causing the teats to chap and get sore in winter. When teats are sore, the best treatment that we have tried is washing with tepid water, with a little carbolic acid in it, then wipe dry with a soft towel before milking. After milking, anoint lightly with plain vaseline.—Jersey Bulletin.

Grandmother's Advice.

I want to give you two or three rules. One is:

Always look at the person you speak to. When you are addressed, look straight at the person who speaks to you. Do not forget this.

Another is:

Speak your words plainly. Do not mutter or mumble. If words are worth saying, they are worth pronouncing distinctly and clearly.

A third is:

Do not say disagreeable things. If you have nothing pleasant to say, keep silent.

A fourth is—and oh, children, remember it all your lives:

Think three times before you speak once.

Have you something to do that you find hard and would prefer not to? Then listen to a wise old grandmother. Do the hard thing first and get it over with. If you have done wrong, then go and confess it. If your lesson is tough, master it. If the garden is to be weeded, weed it first, and play afterwards. Do the thing you don't like to do first, and then, with a clear conscience, try the rest.—Exchange.

From China.

My Dear Bro. Bailey:—You have published Bro. League's article on "Chapels," several weeks ago I sent to you his paper on "Native Preachers," and to-day I am sending you another article which he has just finished on "Schools." I thought you would like to publish this also, so I asked Bro. League to let me copy it and send to you. He is sending it off to his State paper to-day.

When the prophet was led of the Lord and set down in the midst of the "valley of dry bones," the Lord caused him to pass by them round about, and see how very dry these bones were, and afterwards God told Ezekiel, the prophet, to prophesy unto these bones. We think it is well to study this work to which God has called us; "pass by round about it," view it from every side, and see how very dry it is, and we want those of our brethren and sisters at home, who are helping us to do this work, to study it with us. We do not feel called upon to do the work in a certain way just because some other good and wise men have worked in that way. Yet we are not spending all our time, as some, perhaps, would insinuate, in looking at and writing about these "dry bones." There is prophesying to the bones, and prophesying to the wind, and we believe the Spirit of God is breathing upon these people and many of them shall live. God knoweat whether they shall live and serve him or not. We want him to have all the praise, honor and glory.

May God bless you, dear Brother Bailey, and give you many new years in which to serve his people, which you have ever done so faithfully.

Your friend and sister,

FANNIE S. KNIGHT.

REASONS WHY MISSIONARIES IN NORTH CHINA DO NOT RUN SCHOOLS.

A short time ago were given some of the main reasons why native preachers are not employed in North China. It is proposed to give in the same way some of the main reasons why the missionaries do not run schools.

In order to avoid being misunderstood, it may be well to state at the outset that it is not because there is any lack of appreciation of the general advantages of education from a material standpoint, or for purposes of civilization according to western standards. But the large part of those to whom the missionary goes (leaving out Africa) are already civilized. Whether according to western ideas or not is a very different matter. Civilization, however, is not the direct purpose of the missionary's work. Even if it were, the gospel is recognized as the highest civilizing power, because it puts the lives of men on a pure and spiritual basis. Thus the missionary is indirectly a civilizer. It is nowhere demonstrated, however, that a Western type of civilization presents the best basis for the successful propagation of the gospel; that is for leading men to accept Christ as a personal Saviour.

Again there is no want of appreciation of the force that education has in broadening the mind and developing the usefulness of Christian men. But it is believed that there are other considerations which out weigh these and that even these are subject to important limitations.

Education and Christianity, though so closely associated in lands nominally Christian, have really little in common. Through this association they have come to be regarded in some sense as almost synonymous. The progress of Christianity is thought to depend largely on education. But may it not be possible that it hinders in almost as many cases as it helps? Education does not have a tendency to make men self-sufficient, and thus to rely less, perhaps, on the power of the Holy Spirit. Not that an educated man who is really called by the Spirit will have his power curtailed. The danger lies in the tendency to draw in, as religious leaders, or preachers men who have not the Spirit's call. And what is worse, if possible, the tendency to set aside on the ground of a want of education, men who are real vessels of the Holy Spirit. Baptists have recognized this danger. But is there not more of this spirit and less realization of the danger than there should be even among Baptists? In our great zeal for the "higher education" of preachers, and in our eagerness to prevail on those called to take advantage of such education, is there not danger that we may neglect to fully appreciate the importance of the Spirit's call, and also lightly esteem those who have not taken advantage of the "higher education?" Whatever explanation may be given, the fact remains that the men who have been the most useful in presenting the gospel, and through whose instrumentality most men have been led to accept Christ as Lord and Saviour, are men who were not educated in the schools. It is no sort of an answer to say that they were educated. The simple point is that they were not educated in the schools but by experience and work. They were "educated in the ministry and not for the ministry." They have been moved by the Spirit and have gone forward day by day making the best use of what God has given, and depending on God have not lacked. It is quite as reasonable to suppose that they would have been hindered as helped by what men call a "liberal education."

We meet on the very threshold of heathenism, both ancient and modern, the fact that in their minds education, or learning and religion are synonymous you can scarcely say anything to a Christian more striking, or if he is educated more absurd, than to suggest that a man may be educated and yet not religious. It follows therefore that when a missionary uses schools as a means of spreading the gospel, that he puts Christianity on a level with heathen religions and stamps it as a system of education, a something to be learned, a something to be merely intellectually apprehended and after its various parts, customs, ceremonies, etc., have been thus apprehended to be entered. Not long since, an intelligent Chinaman called to see me and said that he had been examining Christianity and found that ages ago China had it and practiced it. In explaining himself he said that for many hundred years after Confucius the Chinese followed learning for the purpose of obtaining salvation. Afterwards learning was made the means of rising to official distinction and thus the real merit of it lost. He was glad to know that foreign countries were preserving the pure idea and were propagating it in China. When the attempt was made to show him that the two were entirely distinct and that learning had no sort of efficacy in salvation his objection was that surely if that was the case there would not be so much attention given to education on the part of those whose avowed purpose is the salvation of men. Will some one kindly answer his objection? It is possible that this impression may be eradicated from the minds of some of those with whom the missionary comes in daily contact. But upon the mind of the masses, which is the important thing, the impression is almost ineradicable. Is this worth while? What is gained? The missionary comes in closer contact with a few and feels that thus he may "more thoroughly impress himself upon them." But it is not the missionary that needs to be impressed. It is gospel truth. We have the assured promise of the Spirit to impress that if we preach it. The obvious duty of the missionary is to get the gospel in direct contact with as many as possible. It is suggested that one will multiply his preaching ten-fold through those educated and sent out? But there is no sort of assurance that a single one of those on whom years have been spent will be chosen of God to bear his message. If they are not chosen of God ——? God gives to each missionary his own opportunity of proclaiming the "good news," salvation. He prepares whom he will and calls whom he will. It is nowhere indicated that he has left to men the preparation of the material from which he shall select. If this were true and if it were also true that God calls only educated men——. But neither is true, God has chosen the "foolishness of preaching" to save men, and he has declared that the learning and wisdom of men cannot attain to a knowledge of God. That some of the scholars are saved is not doubted. But it is through the gospel being preached to them, and not because of the school, but in spite of it. Why should the missionary tie himself down to the few who gather daily in the school-room when at the very best, if he is at all faithful to those who send their children to him, the longest part of his time must be given to secure work, when there are hundreds available to whom he may preach the gospel? No farmer would content himself with cultivating an impoverished hill-side when there was right by available a rich plain, even though the plain had briers and stumps on it. Nor would he employ anyone else to do it.

It may also be urged that some of those who are thus educated do preach. True—but may it not be that some of those preach rather because of the feeling that they have been educated for that purpose than that they feel the call of God? Many cases look much like it. More especially if they are paid with foreign money for the preaching. Educating men into the ministry may be consistent with some Pedobaptists, but never for Baptists. We are instructed to pray for laborers to enter the harvest, not to furnish them for it. If it is urged that no such purpose is in view, I would ask what then is the purpose? It surely cannot be to educate for education's sake. Is not the avowed purpose this preparation for religious work? Is this not forestalling the purpose of God? If any of those thus educated are of the number whom God would call, might they not be as efficient if they had not been thus educated? Does anyone suggest that this may be God's way of calling? There is no sort of evidence for it. All that is indicated as belonging to us in the matter is preaching the Word. But perhaps some will say that the Lord has set his seal to this in that he does seem to bless it with success. It may just as well be said that the Lord has set his seal to Catholicism, or to heathen religions such as Mohammedanism or Confucianism. All of these are eminently successful in the same way, as the number of adherents will show.

What it may be our duty to do in the case of those who do give evidence of being called to preach, it is not the purpose to discuss now. We are praying that the Lord will call men from among these Christians, but never have yet come forward. They will come in the Lord's own time. One thing is needful that they shall be men not only called by the Spirit, but men who depend on the Spirit. The greatest danger is in producing artificiality. To teach such to observe all that Christ commanded may not include so much after all. Our dependence on the Holy Spirit must be real if it should avail. It is unwise to go to extremes in any direction, but this one thing may be safely put down as true that we are in far more danger of making too much than too little of ourselves in the matter of carrying forward the Lord's work. One is never in danger of hearing too much real truth in God. One may be lazy, which is quite a different thing, but sometimes passes for the same.

One of the most serious objections to schools is the foreignizing influence which unfits those educated for real life among their own people. Those so educated depend largely on employment by foreigners. Indeed many of the schools are conducted on the understanding that all who graduate are to be thus employed. This grew largely out of the foreignizing influence referred to above which was recognized by the Chinese, but as a place with foreigners is considered superior to a place among their own people, they are willing, some of them, to accept and turn over their children to the foreigner. One of the most difficult things that the foreigner finds is to learn to accustom himself or, at least, to understand the modes of thought in the minds of the natives. Is it helping matters to put forth a set of men trained in Western modes of thought to grapple with the same difficulty? If indeed the modes of thought of the nation itself need to be changed and formed after the Western pattern, this would be the thing to do, but who will say that this ought to be done? There is no doubt as to the neccessity of the matter of their thought being changed, but this is the province of the gospel and not of mechanical means such as education, etc.

This foreignizing influence applies with great force to the education of the children of Christians. Many are very thoroughly convinced that this ought to be done. The reasons usually assigned are that education is a good thing for the foreigner and will be for the Chinese, therefore, we owe it to them. But is it not an essential condition, indeed it is not a condition at all of the progress of the gospel. It may help, it may hinder. On what ground then do we owe it? We do owe it to give them the gospel, not because it is "a good thing" but because it is salvation, and there is none else. If we will only be content to do the work which lies out so palpably before us where millions have not heard of the gospel, and leave to natural development all those other things that are not our province at all, they will adjust themselves. Whatever advantages are to be had from education will be perceived and taken advantage of in a natural way. There would be no sort of sense in putting a steam plow to work in a newly cleared field full of stumps and roots.

There is already the idea among native Christians that the foreign school, or at least the school supported by the foreigner, with foreign appliances, etc., is essential to the progress of the gospel. This idea has its origin, of course, in the great amount of attention given by missionaries to schools. A Chinese Christian said to me sometime ago: "I see no way for these boys who are growing up here to become acquainted with philosophy, science, etc. How then is Christianity to go forward?" He simply put into words what such a large number of missionaries are practicing. His conclusion was perfectly legitimate. Without intending it, the impression is being made that the gospel is not a sufficient force. Oh for more trust in the promises of the Holy Spirit! This feeling of the insufficiency of the gospel is not confined to the native Christians, but has its effect on the missionary. One of the most prominent of those in China says that it is useless to look for real Christians in this generation in China. That it is only by educational development we can hope to reach a real Christianity, and that it will take longer than a single generation to reach it. His consistency is admirable and worthy of emulation by all those who hold to the necessity of schools. But he would hardly seem to be in accord with the spirit of him who said: "All power is given unto me," and "Lo I am with you." Such a legitimate following out of conclusions as this, would soon work a revolution on this subject so far as Baptists are concerned.

A very serious matter and one which perhaps has not been much noticed, is the fact that schools breed covetousness in no small degree. The heathen who allow their children to be educated in the foreigner's school, do it because of what they hope to gain, either through the pupil's being fed and clothed, or as indicated above through the position they expect to gain with the foreigner. It is not so easy to see that the Christians will be influenced by other motives. The fact that they do feel that the missionary is defrauding them if he does not give them a school, indicates as much. And as shown above, even if the desire for the school is claimed to be founded on a desire to see the gospel make progress, this desire is founded on a perverted notion of the real force of the gospel. It must not be supposed, as some perhaps will, that it is a matter of learning to read the Scriptures. The feeling that there are certain things that they may claim as a right, and certain obligations which giving them the gospel puts the missionary under, leads to serious error. I once heard an honored missionary say with reference to a matter of persecution: "Well, we have got them into this difficulty by their following us to learn the doctrine, and I feel like we ought to get them out." There was hardly a realization, I think, of the force of what was said. If the upbuilding of the lives and hearts of the native Christians depends on the missionary, surely both are in an unenviable position. Above all things converts from heathenism, or any other converts, need to feel that their dependence is on God. Material help, whatever its character, is not what will help in this direction. Not that it is felt that these are sinners above all others in covetous tendencies, but that it is unwise to place before them the conditions which lead in that direction. If we owe it to them to give them all that is believed to be useful in the work in Western lands, what do we not owe them? The time may come when they may be judiciously helped in many directions, but it will need to be when it can be done as brethren, and not doled out from overseers and employers. For the present, at least, it is felt that money used in schools can be more wisely spent in sending men to "preach the Word," "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Not what Western civilization has developed or Western learning interpreted but what Christ has commanded.

To suppose that the heathen need the elevating power of education to prepare them for the reception of the gospel is to deny the gospel the very power it is declared to have. The hardest class of men to reach in China is the proud, self-sufficient, educated class. Those who rejected our Saviour when he was on earth belonged to that class. It will be so from the very nature of the case. It is not through the powerful convincing arguments of men that souls are born into the kingdom of God but through the simple, faithful presentation of a crucified and risen Redeemer, who himself gives power to the Word. "To the Jews a stumbling block, to the Greeks foolishness, but to them that are called, both the Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God."

THOS. J. LEAGUE.

Pingtu, China, Feb. 4, 1893.

Religious Lunacy.

Lunacy is a species of insanity, or a periodic madness. Religious lunacy is a condition of the mind which attempts to measure the infinite by a finite tape-line. Strange to say, nevertheless true, there is as much religious lunacy to-day as there was in the bygone dark and mediæval ages. Its existence, which is of no earthly benefit, does immense harm to the poor, weak, sin-laden, immortal souls, for whose deliverance Jesus died and made the atonement.

That the Bible, Old and New Testaments, is the inspired book of God, written by inspired authors, given to man as God's only revelation; that the establishment of the Christian church, being the legitimate outcome of the life, teachings and commands of Christ, are well established biblical, historical and traditional facts, which need no wasting of time, and reasoning, and produce offensive controversies. But the "everlasting reason, reason, reason," appears upon the Christian arena, now and then, to fight God and his sacred revelation, not knowing that it is hard to kick against the good. But what is human reason? or what is human mind? What is man as compared to God? What is a drop in the boundless and fathomless ocean? A drop in the ocean may be conceivable, but to compare man's mind to the Great Infinite is beyond human comparison, and beyond the reach of a mortals' conception. "We may reason of that which we can see and touch, but the invisible responds only to that which is beyond reason." It is religious lunacy that tries to find God outside his revelation, and salvation out of Christ. It is religious lunacy that wants to prove that the inerrancy of the Bible is impossible. Newspapers are full of discussions and controversies. Here is Briggs with his little reason; there is Smith with his insignificant reasons; and there are the "higher critics" with their trifling little reasons; and still others with various colors of other reasons. All are reasons which should be thrown in dirt-carts, like city garbage, and hauled away as waste products so as not to impregnate and and contaminate a pure, healthy, religious atmosphere.

Unsanctified reason, like unsanctified riches, is a curse, and a dangerous thing in the world. Like storms, it gathers up clouds of doubts, breathes thunders, brings forth a moral deluge, and drowns feeble souls in despair. Reason can not but add to doubts, make apostates, skeptics, and damn a soul instead of rescuing. Reason makes "apostates, not converts." It can not reach the spiritual world. Religion of the mind or reason is a sort of machinery, which runs to mangle up souls. God dwells in the heart, deals with the heart, talks to the heart, and appeals to the heart, not to the head. A true religion is divine. It is the life of God in the heart of man. The religion of the mind, therefore, is not the life of God. The head can not convert, but the heart does. Argument can not move, but tear does move.

God is no more the God of deluge, fire, earthquakes, wind and plagues, but he is God of whisper, and the whisper of God to man is the echo of his love from heaven to earth. The whole tenor of the word of God breathes love, peace, sympathy and life eternal. Peace on earth and good will towards men.

The dark ages of all religious warfare and mad controversies are gone and sunk into eternity. Let "higher criticism" go. Let reasoning religion go. Time is short and precious. We cannot afford to lose time on any kind of religious lunacy.

This is a period of active life, a period of preaching Christ, a period of saving immortal souls. This is a Christian era to sing "Jesus lover of my soul," to play "Rock of ages cleft for me," and preach by life and word "the Son of Man is come to seek and save that which was lost." We have to let unsactified "reason" and its noxious doctrines and venomous dogmas alone, and take up the Word of God as a weapon, and like a good soldier of Jesus Christ enter into the slums of the cities, and go into the highways and hedges and benighted lands to rescue the perishing from alcoholic intemperance, social impurities, doubts, covetousness, selfishness and idolatry. Let us live Christ, preach Christ. Let our words, as well as conduct, preach the gospel in its simplicity, in its purity, in its sweetness, savored by the love of God and flavored by the life and character of Jesus.

Conversion of an Infidel.

An interesting account of an infidel's conversion was recently given in the daily prayer-meeting in Chicago. It is said that the man, while on his way to take the cars for the East, heard a little Irish boy who was sitting on the doorstep, singing—

"There'll be no more sorrow there,
There'll be no more sorrow there."

"Where?" inquired the skeptic, whose mind was impressed by the words. "Where is it there'll be no more sorrow?" The boy answered:

"In heaven above,
Where all is love,
There'll be no more sorrow there."

The infidel hastened on to take his seat in the cars; but the simple words of that hymn or chorus had found a lodgment in his mind. He could not drive them from his thoughts. They were fixed. A world where there is no sorrow! This was the great idea that filled his mind. He dwelt upon it—revolved it over in his thoughts. It was the message by the Spirit that led him to the Saviour, who delivers the lost and ruined from sin here, and raises them to that world of joy and glory where sin and sorrow are unknown.—Kind Words.

Companionship of Christ.

"Make Christ your most constant companion." Be more under his influence than under any other influence. Ten minutes spent in his society every day, ay, two minutes if it be face to face and heart to heart, will make the whole day different. Every character has an inward spring; let Christ be it. Every action has a key-note; let Christ see it. Yesterday you got a certain letter. You sat down and wrote a reply which almost scorched the paper. You picked the cruelest adjectives you knew and sent it forth, without a pang, to do its ruthless work. You did that because your life was set in the wrong key. You began the day with the mirror placed at the wrong angle. To-morrow, at day-break, turn it towards him, and even to your enemy the fashion of your countenance will be changed. Whatever you then do, one thing you will find you could not do—you could not write that letter. Your first impulse may be the the same, your judgment may be unchanged, but if you try it the ink will dry on your pen, and you will rise from your desk an unavenged, but a greater and more Christian, man.—Drummond.

Many of our Pedobaptist brethren are constantly quoting Robert Hall to show how "inconsistent" we are in advocating strict communion; but the United Presbyterian is frank enough to say on this subject: "We cannot understand how Robert Hall could contend for mixed communion, when he "did not believe that infant sprinkling was any baptism at all."—Central Baptist.

The undemonstrative brother is not necessarily unbelieving or backsliding, the demonstrative brother is not necessarily a fanatic. Temperaments differ. These are divers manifestations, but can all be patient toward one another.—Religious Herald.

THE ROD AND THE STAFF.

David, in the twenty-third Psalm, uses these words, "Yea, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." This verse of the Psalm is usually interpreted so as to make it refer to the Christian's experience when he comes to die—when he is passing through the shadows of death. We are willing to admit that the passage may refer to the hour of the Christian's departure from the earth; but it is not necessarily confined to the hour of death. Very often in the providence of God, Christians pass through experiences in this life during which the trials and misfortunes of life press so heavily upon them that they pass through what may seem a veritable "valley and shadow of death." So we think that the comforting assurance contained in the words "thy rod and thy staff they comfort me," may, and does, apply to the Christian not only when dying, but in any of the sad experiences of life.

It requires a somewhat careful study of the sentence just quoted, however, to reach the true interpretation involved by the use of the word rod and staff. Both words are generally supposed, we believe, to teach the idea that God gives his people, in the sad hour of affliction, a support—a staff to lean upon. We are willing to admit that the word staff does convey that meaning, and with it the additional idea of protection or defence. But how about the word rod? The more general sense in which this word is used in the Old and New Testament is that of an implement of punishment or correction. It is to be noted that the Hebrew has different words for rod and staff; and there is evidently a distinction in their meaning in the above passage.

While the word rod, then, may at times be used in the sense of a prop or support, owing to the peculiar construction of the sentence quoted, we think it is here used in the sense of an implement of correction or punishment. The opinion is becoming quite common that the rod should be banished from the fireside and from the school-room, as a relic of barbarism; and "moral suasion" should take its place. Solomon's views on the rod as a means of enforcing parental authority and raising up useful and obedient boys and girls is considered by many as quite antiquated; and they are sure they have found a "better way." When men and women get wiser than the Bible they at once transgress the bounds of propriety, and naturally drift into fanaticism, or any other "ism," rather than the right one. Much of our social and religious trouble is caused by men and women who are bent on going beyond Bible limits, and launching improved (?) "moral methods" upon the world.

We doubt whether society will ever become so pure, and children so good, that we can afford to banish the rod entirely from our homes and from our schools as a relic of barbarism. Yet the constant indiscriminate and cruel use of the rod is to be condemned. Especially is this true when the rod is in the hands of men. They may make mistakes; and at times the stripes may be laid on more heavily than the offense deserves. This is not true, however, of God. He uses the rod upon his children; they evidently need it at times; and the twenty-third Psalm teaches us that he uses it. God is not at all influenced by our modern notions about the rod as a relic of barbarism, and we suppose he will continue to use the old-fashioned remedy to the end of time. We have an abiding opinion that human nature is going to remain about what it is now until the end comes; and the same corrective methods that our wise Father once used to teach fallen man sense and obedience, and develop his piety, will also continue with it. The Great Physician of souls long ago made a careful diagnosis of sinful man's case. He then prescribed the necessary remedies to "heal the smart" of his people; and as those remedies were the best for all time, there is no need that he should change them. Through long centuries God gave wayward men ample opportunity to find a remedy to heal the wounds that sin had made in their bodily mental and spiritual organization; and when disappointed and humbled they turned to him with the piteous cry, "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no Physician there?" he heard their cry and sent deliverance. After all this experience, however, there are men and women who think they have found "a better way" and better remedies than those prescribed by God. There are > "None so blind

> As those that will not see;"
> None so ignorant
> As those that will not learn.

It would be well for us then, brethren, when we are passing through trials and afflictions to remember that God may be using them as a rod to correct us, to purify us, and even to comfort us. The idea of comfort may seem foreign to the use of the rod, but there is philosophy and religion in that idea. Explain it as you may, we well remember that when a boy, and at times we "caught it" rather heavily from the "old folks" for some act of disobedience, after the chastisement was over, and the pain gone, we felt unusually well, and experienced a sense of unusual comfort. Yes, dear brethren, there is correcting and comforting power in the rod when wielded by the hand of those who love us on earth and by our Father in heaven. The words of the grand old Baptist hymn are true—

> "When through fiery trials thy pathway shall lie,
> My grace, all sufficient, shall be thy supply."

"We have had fathers according to the flesh that corrected us and we gave them reverence; shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits and live?" This you know is Paul's language, and it not only brings back the tide of the gushing memories of our childhood days, but also teaches us a useful lesson. Ah, no! we did not enjoy the whippings we received when boys or girls; but sometimes now we go in the gloaming to the dear spot where father and mother were buried and we scatter flowers over the mounds and water them with our tears, while we thank God for parents that loved us well enough to correct us with the rod, if need was, in the days of our youth. This experience only confirms Paul's language as applied to God's means of purifying us, "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; but afterward, it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby."

We have written these words partly with the view of trying to comfort our dear brethren and sisters who may be passing through the deep waters of affliction. Death has been busy in our land during the severe winter through which we have passed; and many are the hearts that have been wrung with anguish, and many are the family circles that have been broken, and the firesides that have been saddened. Some who read, or hear these lines read, may themselves be laid upon beds of suffering; but cheer up, dear brethren; light will break again on your pathway, and with its coming you will see that the hand that smites you is that of a loving Father, who uses at times the rod as well as the staff.

FROM OUR TRAVELLING AGENT.

MINE AND THINE.

What is mine, and what belongs to another, is a very important distinction for every one to make. In the common acceptation, it is common honesty—nothing more, nothing less. And yet the principle may be violated without supposing any direct violence being done to the command which says, "Thou shalt not steal."

We have no desire to appear pessimistic on this or any other subject. Yet we fear this disposition of people to disregard the rights of others is on the increase; and if the limits of our space were sufficient we could show that with the growth of our country has grown a disposition to shade off the lines which should clearly separate what is mine from what is yours. It may be the form of our government has indirectly had its influence in bringing about this state of things at least in the minds of many, for it is rather hard for them to see how, after participating as a voter in naming the men who administer the affairs of the government, they can have no control in the minor affairs about them, although these belong to individuals about whose titles there is not a single doubt. The troubles at Homestead, and the recent shutting up of the great English cotton mills, by which the present surplus of cotton has been increased by more than 500,000 bales, and injuring producers as well as manufacturers, are only some results which come from the disposition of men to overstep the bounds of justice and to disregard the rights of others. There can be no question about the right of an individual or a collection of individuals declining to remain where terms are not satisfactory, but certainly there can be no moral right on the side of these men when they decline to allow others to take the places which they have made vacant. We believe this levelling process is started long before that stage of existence is reached when the influences referred to above were felt or even talked about. May it not be that the home government, or rather the want of it, tended to early blunt the discriminating powers of the boy while he is yet in his "knee britches?" We are not very old, yet we think we can remember when the boys were not recognized as equal partners in the things of the household and upon the premises to the extent that now, in many instances, prevail. We remember distinctly when "father's" saddle was his, with all the term implies, and the stirrups were not to be changed to suit the legs of any fifteen-year-old boy. The old rifle was always to be found in the rack, and was used only by the head of the family, and there was something sacred about the very nail upon which the old-fashioned silver watch hung which was not called into use except on Sunday, election day, or perhaps on Tuesday of court week. This sounds decidedly primitive and "old fogy," and is in marked contrast with what exists to a great extent now. It may be, however, that this same youngster doesn't trouble the "old man's" saddle now; but if so, the reason is he wants a better one. And if the old watch escapes him, and the old gun keeps its place in the rack, it is because it requires the latest pattern stem-winding watch and the most improved breech-loading gun to satisfy his more progressive and advanced notions, and not because of any reverence which may attach to them, and which ought to differentiate them from all other things like them.

This may seem a small matter, but it is small things which make up the life of us all, and to the notions thus early imbibed may be traced many of the troubles which come to us in after life. It is very easy for a boy who has never been taught that there is such a thing as "mine" and "yours;" that there is a thus far and no farther, to get into trouble, when he comes to combat people and circumstances which insist on the keeping of these relations, promptly and literally. Speaking with a gentleman some time ago who has spent many years in the school room, he said: "I fear the tendency of students at the present day is to more and more disregard the rights and belongings of other people." Of course it was not intended to speak indiscriminately of students as a class, for the number of students who are inclined to disregard authority and the rights of others, are as greatly in the minority as perhaps any other class, but after that is said the fact remains that there are plenty of this sort to remind us of their presence. We are aware of the fact that there is a sort of "student license" which more or less screens the boys who at certain times in their student life go out and help themselves from the fruit garden, watermelon patch, potato patch, or hen roost of some friend (?) who is himself fast asleep, regarding the transaction as a sort of joke. But the question is, where is the right in such things? What really distinguishes such conduct on the part of these young men from the conduct of others who are constantly before the courts to answer and suffer for such conduct? It may be, as stated above, that a generous public will wink, to some extent, at this sort of conduct in these particular cases, but one thing is certain: the Great Lawgiver will know no exceptions in favor of any who shall, in any way, violate principles which have been given for the guidance of all men.

PERSONALS AND OTHER ITEMS.

....Drs. John Mitchell, and J. D. Huffham, called our office last Monday with their presence.

....Rev. O. L. Stringfield of Wakefield, and Bro. W. H. Tucker of Asheville, called to see us last Monday.

....Rev. L. Johnson, Rockingham, writes: "We are in the midst of a glorious meeting. Will let you hear when we close."

....The Board of Trustees of Mars Hill College will meet the fourth of May next to elect a president for that institution.

....Dr. W. W. Landrum of Richmond, Va., is expected soon to assist Dr. J. W. Carter of the First church, Raleigh, in a meeting.

....In the First church, Raleigh, on Sunday morning last, the pastor, Dr. J. W. Carter, extended the right hand of fellowship to six persons.

....Rev. D. M. Austin of Charlotte, is assisting Rev. N. S. Jones in the meetings at the Baptist church this week.—Salisbury Watchman, March 30.

....Rev. M. A. Adams of Monroe is having very large congregations, and expects to begin a series of meetings soon, and is going to remember Home and Foreign Missions in this month.

....Rev. Frank Dixon, has resigned his pastorate in Oakland, Cal., and will return East. He is engaged to supply three months in New York and Brooklyn for his brothers, Revs. A. C. and Thos. Dixon, Jr.—Christian Herald.

....The congregation at the Baptist church have pretty well determined to make some needed improvements in their house of worship. They will most probably put in nice gothic windows, new carpeting, and repair the ceiling and walls, besides repainting the seats.—Waynesville Courier.

....Dr. J. C. Hiden, pastor of Grove Avenue Baptist church of Richmond, Va., will deliver the commencement address before the Medical College of Richmond, Va., on April 5th.

....Rev. C. C. Newton, missionary to Lagos, Africa, was in the city last week, and paid us an interesting visit. He is full of enthusiasm for his work, and expects to return next fall.

....Rev. J. L. White of Asheville, N. C., is aiding Dr. J. A. Mundy of Greenville, S. C., in special services. He preached his first sermon on Monday night, the 27th ult., to a large congregation.

....Dr. J. D. Huffham preached continuously at Wake Forest from Sunday, the 26th ult., to the 2d of April, holding two services a day. The meeting was very much enjoyed, especially by Christians.

....Dr. T. P. Bell has presented his resignation as Assistant Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, and it is understood, we think, that the Board, in the future, will try to do its work by one Secretary.

....Rev. W. R. Carawan of Hyde county, a missionary of our Board, has large and attentive congregations, much interest in the prayer meetings, and more calls to preach in different sections of his county than he can fill.

....At the Virginia Portsmouth Association, at its session in 1793, in Black Creek church, among the questions proposed and answered was: "Are the people formerly called Dissenters yet oppressed by any State laws? Answered, yes."

....The next session of the Eastern Union of the Raleigh Association will be held with the Baptist church at Four Oaks, Johnston county, N. C., on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 28th, 29th and 30th, 1893. The program will appear next week.

....Rev. C. C. Newton, our Missionary at Lagos, Africa, preached at the Tabernacle church in Raleigh last Sunday night. His discourse was highly interesting; it treated of the power of the gospel to dispel the spiritual darkness of Africa.

....Rev. Thos. Spurgeon, son of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, has been elected pastor of the celebrated Tabernacle as his father's successor. We hope this will settle the needless confusion that has been produced by Dr. A. T. Pierson's relation to the church.

....Rev. J. A. Beam of Bethel Hill Academy, Person county, called to see us last Friday. He says he has a better school than he has ever had—an enrolment of sixty-eight. Bro. Beam, in addition to his school work, is pastor of four country churches.

....Bro. J. H. Morrissette of Shiloh, N. C., writes: "Dr. C. S. Blackwell of Elizabeth City, N. C., has promised to deliver a lecture at Shiloh Baptist church, Camden county, N. C., at 7: 30 p. m., April 19th, for the benefit of the Ladies Aid Society."

....How is a church to get rid of a pastor? We will tell you one way not to do it. Do not freeze him out, for if you do, you may freeze yourself as well. By all means be honorable and Christ-like in your dealings with Christ's servants.—Central Baptist.

....Rev. J. F. Love will supply the pulpit of the First church, Roanoke, until a permanent pastor is secured. An effort will probably be made to keep Bro. Love in Roanoke to look after some of the promising mission fields in the magic city.—Religious Herald.

....Prof. W. L. Poteat of Wake Forest College delivered a lecture last Friday night at the A. & M. College in Raleigh. His subject was "The Influence on the College Curriculum of the Introduction of the Natural Sciences." The lecture is highly spoken of.

....From May 1st, 1892, to March 15th, 1893, the Baptists of North Carolina sent to the Foreign Mission Board, Richmond, Va., $6,802.12, and for the corresponding months of last year, $5,498.13. This is a gain in these months over last year of $1,303.99.—C. Durham.

....All who have sent in their names and asked to be appointed delegates to the Southern Baptist Convention have been appointed, and can at any time send their names to the committee on homes at Nashville, Tenn. Let each one send his own name.—C. Durham.

....Dr. W. A. Nelson directs his paper changed from Aiken, S. C., to Hawkinsville, Ga., and writes: "I have declined the hearty and unanimous call of the Aiken church, not because the work was too heavy, but because there is not enough of it for a well man. It was all right for an invalid. Among all my pleasant pastorates, none were more harmonious than the one I am now leaving."

....Prof. George R. Bliss, D. D., LL. D., of Crozer Theological Seminary, died on Monday, the 27th ult. Dr. Bliss was an instructor at Bucknell University from 1849 to 1874, and from 1874 at Crozer Theological Seminary. As a teacher and as an interpreter, he was calm, scholarly, thorough, able, candid, evangelical. Dr. Bliss was in his seventy-seventh year, having been born in Sherburne, N. Y., June 20th, 1816.—National Baptist.

....The Paderewski mania has been fiercely raging among fashionable women in London, and it has begun to affect some fashionable women in this country. "And who is Paderewski?" Oh! we beg pardon; we should have stated that he is a player upon the piano, with copious auburn locks, multitudinous airs and abundant self-appreciation. A fashionable woman in London actually prostrated herself at his feet in a concert room. But so far the fashionable female fools in America have been content to send him notes, etc.—Western Recorder.

....Rev. J. M. Bridges of Spartanburg, S. C., writes: "Your paper comes every week, and it makes me feel like I was still one of the brethren of the Old North State. I commenced a meeting with my church here at Green street last Sunday night (one week ago) and the Lord has blessed us abundantly already. Many have professed faith. Six have joined by experience and several by letter. The Lord is with us, and Bro. Derieux will be this week. We look for more and more to follow. Our congregations are large. Last night the house would not hold the people. Many had to leave for want of room. Not less than one hundred gave their hands for prayer. Pray for us. I love Old North Carolina, but I am enjoying my work over here fine."

....Next to knowing what is the matter and how to remedy the trouble, probably the best thing is to have a real good, large, poly-syllable, vague word, with which to cover up our ignorance. Nowadays, if a patient is ill and does not recover—notwithstanding he is so eminent as to have six or eight physicians in attendance—and nobody knows what is the matter with him and if he does not solve the matter by going to heaven, the physicians have one word that stands them in good stead. They say "There are complications." This at once avoids the necessity of telling that they do not know, and gives an adequate reason for the failure of the remedies to get a good grip upon the vitals either of the patient or of the disease.—"The Rambler," in the National Baptist.

....Rev. H. B. Someillan, Cuban missionary of the M. E. church South, in a letter to the Florida Christian Advocate, refers to the work of the Baptists in Cuba in the following complimentary terms: "The Southern Board of Missions of the Baptist church in the United States have recently purchased and fitted up for worshiping purposes, the 'Jane theatre' at a cost of sixty thousand dollars. They are now making an effort to purchase another theatre, ('Teatro de Iripoa,') a magnificent building, at a very great cost, and a view to founding a Commercial Training College for Cuban young ladies. An excellent idea indeed, and a movement that is justly giving them a wide-spread population and influence, especially among the most intelligent class of our people, not only in the capital but all over the entire Island. I bid them God-speed in their laudable enterprise."—Florida Baptist Witness.

From the West Chowan.

Dear Recorder:—In your issue of Feb. 24th, I see a communication from Rev. L. M. Curtis of Aulander, N. C., informing the Baptist host of the West Chowan of the action of the delegates of said Association at our last State Convention held in your city, in pledging this Association's credit for the snug little sum of one thousand dollars for the Centennial movement. I have no criticism to offer upon their action if they chose to do so. But it seems to us, as Bro. Bristow has said, that said delegates should be called upon to explain why they kept it such a profound secret until the time had nearly expired for raising the money. This is all unlooked for by us, and my word for it, it will take the raking of the last copper from a great number of poor homes like mine to raise it at this season of the year.

I do not know whether our delegates knew it or not, or even care as to that matter, but nearly all the Baptists in this Association are poor farmers, and a large majority of them have consumed, and are to-day living upon, what they hope to make this year—eating up their crop under mortgage before it is planted. They are forced to do it. I venture the assertion that ninety per cent. of the real estate in our midst is under mortgage. So it is impossible for us to jump and raise it at a moment's notice; however, I second Bro. Bristow's motion that the pastors do what they can among themselves. Besides, people will take time to consider and talk over matters of this kind, and if we are to suffer the "reproach and chagrin" spoken of by Bro. Curtis, surely we should have known it sooner.

When a house of worship was to pay for in Havana, we paid our share, because it was brought fairly before us. I wonder what kind of an exposition some of our pastors would place on such passages as 2 Cor. 11: 8; 1 Peter 5: 3; 1 Thess. 2: 6.

But I am not trying to throw a damper over anybody's efforts. Let all be done that can be. But, I do claim that we should have had fair play; some of our churches have already passed resolutions not to accept any assessment or apportionment until our regular pledges are paid. I think I can voice the sentiments of many of my brethren by saying that without some care be used a damper will be thrown over our little ardor for missions. The money we give belongs to God and ourselves and not to any class of ecclesiastics. Let me explain: We stand pledged for one thousand dollars (I quote from memory) for State Missions which must be raised by the same few, and if I am not badly mistaken, a portion of that money is used in our own bounds to enable an old church, which makes a flattering report to our Association, to employ a pastor for all or or near all his time while other pastors have worked themselves nearly to death in destitute sections for nothing so far as support is concerned. I do not covet the advantages enjoyed by any church. I rejoice at their advance so long as they pay for it themselves; but I do not want to enjoy preaching three or four Sundays monthly at the expense of my sister churches which has only monthly preaching and while other sections are entirely destitute. Bro. Dodson said that "grumblers were not workers, and workers were not grumblers." I think I do what I can for benevolence, and I know that I voice the sentiments of several of my brethren when I kindly express some dissatisfaction at such a distribution of mission money. Yours for missions.

Baptists Imprisoned and Whipped—No. 2.

COURT RECORDS OF 1730-1746 IN THE TOWN OF NEWBERN, N. C.—THE NAMES OF SEVEN WELL KNOWN BAPTISTS—FIFTEEN YEARS' PERSECUTION—DRS. C. E. TAYLOR AND C. T. BAILEY HAVE SEEN THE RECORDS.

In an article last week—"Baptists Imprisoned and Whipped, No. 1."—we presented four important antecedent items of information to the proper appreciation of the facts here stated.

5. The following is copied from an old record, titled "Minutes of Court of Pleas and Quarter Sessions of Craven County, North Carolina, 1730 to 1746":

"June, 1730.—Court met according to adjournment.

Present, { George Roberts, John Bryan, James Macklwaine, Thos. Person, } Esqrs.

After Proclamation—

A motion and petition was received by a sect of dissenting people, which call themselves Baptists, praying that they may be admitted to build a house of worship.

Rees Price, William Caruthers, and John Bryan, Esqrs., made oath to several misdemeanors committed by the Petitioners, contrary to and in contempt of the laws now in force. Upon which it was ordered by the Court that the Petitioners be bound by recognizance for their appearance at the next court of assize and jail delivery, to be held at this town, then and there to answer to such things as they shall be charged with, and in the mean time be of good behaviour to all his Majesties Liege People."

Then follows the bonds of six well known Baptist citizens of that section, viz:

"John James came into open court and acknowledged himself to be indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, in the sum of 40£. Sterling money.

William Fulsher and Francis Ayers also acknowledged themselves to be indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, in the sum of 20£. Sterling money, each, security for his appearance at the next court of assize and jail delivery to be held at this town of Newbern, the several sums to be levied on their several goods and chattles, lands and tenements, &c.

William Fulchor came into court and acknowledged himself indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, in 40£., and John James and Francis Ayers, each, the sum of 20£. securities for his appearance at next court in this town, and to be of good behaviour.

Francis Ayers came into court and acknowledged himself indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, the sum of 40£., Nicholas Purify and Lemuel Harvey, each in the sum of 20£ for his appearance at next court of assize and jail delivery.

Nich. Purify came into court and acknowledged himself indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, in the sum of 40£., William Fulchor and John James securities in each 20£. for his appearance at next court of assize and jail delivery.

Lemuel Harvey came into court and acknowledged himself to be indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, in the sum of 40£., Francis Ayers and Nich. Purify securities for the sum of 20£. each for his appearance at next court at this town, and be of good behaviour.

John Brooks came into open court and acknowledged himself to be indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, in the sum of 40£. Sterling money.

Lemuel Harvey and Francis Ayers acknowledged themselves indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, in the sum of 20£. each, securities for his appearance at the next court of assize and jail delivery, to be held in this town of Newbern, the several sums to be levied on the several goods and chattels, lands and tenements, &c.

Court adjourned till to morrow morning."

There are in this same old record, from this date, June, 1730, and through to 1741, many references to these matters, which show that this persecution of Baptists was kept up in some form for at least ten or fifteen years.

6. The following is also copied from the same old record, titled "Minutes of Court of Pleas and Quarter Sessions of Craven County, North Carolina, 1730 to 1746":

"Present, 20 June, 1740. { John Bryan, James Macklwain, Thos. Pearson, } Esqrs.

After Proclamation—

At the request of P. Roberts, it was admitted to receive a motion and petition read, made by a sect of dissenting people called Baptists, that they may have the liberty to build a house of worship, and being duly examined by the court, acknowledged to all of the articles of the Church of England except part of the 27th and 36th, they desiring to preach among themselves. Referred. Court adjourned till to-morrow morning.

June 21st, 1740.

Present, { George Roberts, Thomas Masters, James Macklwain, } Esqrs.

Be it remembered that Francis Ayers, John James, William Fulchor, Lemuel Harvey and Nicholas Purify, do each and every one of them acknowledge themselves to be indebted to our Sovereign Lord, the King, 40£. each. These to be levied on their several goods, chattles, lands and tenements, &c. The condition is in case the aforesaid named do well and truly keep the King's peace to all of his Leige people and in good behaviour, and appear at this court on the third Tuesday in September next, then and there recognizance.

Court adjourned to to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock."

The men named in all of these bonds were prominent Baptists of Craven county in those trying times. About two years ago, we went carefully through this old record, believed to be the same old book examined by Mr. H. S. Nunn, editor of the Newbern Journal, in 1883, and referred to by him as the minute docket, and in which he says there was then the record of Baptists being "publicly whipped, bound over to keep the peace and required to give bond for their good behaviour, and also to take the test oath."

But this old book has, seemingly by design, been mutilated—a half page cut or torn out—a page—two pages—and at at a number of places, from three to six pages have been cut or torn out. When or by whom this was done, or just what was their real object, we cannot here and now discuss. Drs. C. E. Taylor and C. T. Bailey have also examined, to some extent, this old book with me.

The above facts, so far as we know, are now given to the public for the first time. One other article will close this discussion.

The Missionary Call.

The last mail brought the RECORDER of January 18th, containing an editorial on "The Missionary Call," and a request that brethren give their views on certain questions concerning this call. I have not yet been long enough on the field to have had missionary experience, but I have thought much on these questions for a score of years and venture to express my opinion concerning some of them.

The primary question is suggested by the editorial to be, "Is there a special call to the work of Foreign Missions in addition to the call to the ministry?"

The answer which the Scriptures give to this question, seems to be very decidedly in the affirmative. Paul, the great foreign missionary, received what may be called four calls to this work, two directly from the Lord, and two through others of the Lord's servants. When the Lord appeared to him on the way to Damascus, he said, "I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister * * * delivering thee from the people and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee." Acts xxvi. 16, 17. Afterwards in a vision at Jerusalem, the Lord in answer to all his excuses for remaining in that city and preaching to the people who knew him, said, "Depart, for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." Acts xxii. 21. When the Lord sent Ananias to baptize the newly converted Saul of Tarsus, he said of this new convert, "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name unto the Gentiles." Acts ix. 15. After the church at Antioch had grown strong and was blessed with a number of preachers, the brethren of this church received this word from the Holy Spirit, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them?" Acts xiii. 2. This last call includes Barnabas, also. There were other foreign missionaries, whose position in the Scripture history is less prominent, concerning whose call no mention is made. John Mark went on the first journey with Paul and Barnabas, but he soon grew discouraged and returned to Jerusalem. Afterward he accompanied Barnabas in missionary work of which we have no detailed account, and Paul mentions him as an efficient missionary. 2 Tim. iv. 11. But no mention is made as to whether he had a special call from the Lord, or only from these brethren whom he accompanied. The same is true of Silas, whom "Paul chose," and of Timothy, whom "Paul would have to go forth with him," and of other companions of Paul. The silence in these cases would scarcely be considered proof of the absence of such a call, when we have the plain statement of its existence in the case of the two foremost missionaries of those early days.

If we consider the reasons arising from the present condition of the nations and the requirements of missionary work, we shall find them leading in the same direction. In Paul's day the world was the Roman Empire, penetrated in every direction by Roman roads, patrolled by Roman soldiers, united by the prevalence of the Roman speech. The Greek language, also, was spoken almost everywhere. Even without the miraculous gift of tongues possessed by the early missionaries, most of them could find some medium of communication with the people of almost every province which they visited.

Modern invention and discovery have brought distant places much nearer together, but they have also made the world much larger. Instead of the Mediterranean, we now have the Atlantic and the Pacific. True, the time required to cross one of these oceans is less than that consumed in Paul's winter voyage to Rome, but it requires a small fortune to pay the passage across one of these oceans. Instead of languages on the tongue of almost every one, we have the strange speech of the nations of Asia and Africa. Instead of the gift of tongues, we have the long and patient toil required to master these foreign tongues. With all these difficulties standing between him and the first proclamation of the good news, what wonder if the preacher, full of youthful zeal, eager to tell the story, sometimes grows discouraged with the long waiting and returns home to tell the story to those who can understand him at once?

Such being the case, it is natural to expect that those who undertake a work of such delays and difficulties should do so only under a stern sense of duty. It is wise for those who have these matters in charge to spend money in sending out, and supporting while they learn the language, only those who give promise of overcoming the difficulties and being able to do effective work.

The nature of this call and its relation to the call to the ministry is a question much more difficult to discuss and especially difficult to decide. An extended discussion would involve a discussion of the nature of the call to the ministry. Both calls will doubtless vary in different individuals.

A young man came to my study at Moravian Falls one Sunday afternoon to talk about a call to the ministry. A very few words convinced me that the quiet but deep impression made upon his mind would soon lead him to decide to enter the ministry. Just before I left Wake Forest to start for China, the same young man came to talk about a call to the foreign mission work. The stage reached by him on this question was about the same as that reached on the other question at the time of the first conversation; and I was hoping soon to welcome him as a co-laborer in China. But last fall the Lord called him to heaven. The Lord knew he would preach the gospel but little at home and never come to China, and yet I firmly believe these impressions were of the Lord. Why he thus wrought on the heart of his servant, I cannot tell. While this young man had quiet impressions of duty, gradually growing stronger, first that it was his duty to preach the gospel, and afterwards that it was his duty to preach it to the heathen, another of a different temperament will have a mighty struggle over one or both these questions. Sometimes the struggle will come when his preferences or his ambition or some other influence would turn him from the gospel ministry, to which God's Spirit is moving him. When the decision is made on the side of duty in the first case, the struggle is less violent in the other. In another case the struggle will be resumed for the time when he is moved to commit himself to the work among the heathen, and his inclinations prompt him to draw back. Sometimes equal conflicts will come in both cases.

To the young man, impressible, with limited experience, not yet able to see much of God's leading in his providences, the call will be more likely to be made known by deep impressions of duty on mind and heart and conscience. To the man of maturer years, who has seen more of God's dealings with his servants and has learned to follow the leadings of his providences, the internal impressions may be less vivid, but "such a culmination of events as to enable any preacher to say, 'the path of duty leads me to enter the foreign work.'" The same sense of duty will be present in each case; but the steps which led up to it, will be slightly different in the two cases. But without this sense of duty impressed on the conscience, it seems hardly safe for anyone to enter the foreign work. Readers will remember the recent case of a quiet, consecrated young man, who was led by the influence of others to enter the work without this sense of duty, and who after a few years in the work withdrew from it for this very reason. He was told that there was no need of a special call except the knowledge of the need of laborers, but he soon found this to be a mistake.

God does not call all preachers to be foreign missionaries nor even a majority of them, any more than he calls all converted young men to enter the ministry. But no one should conclude from this that he is freed from the duty of considering the question. Every Christian young man, feeling in his heart a desire to serve the Master who has redeemed him, should prayerfully consider whether or not that service is to be rendered in the ministry or in an unofficial capacity, and he should accept the latter alternative only when it is clearly evident that the Lord does not require his services as a minister. In like manner, every one called to the ministry should prayerfully consider whether or not that call is to preach at home or to the heathen, and he should be content to settle down at home only when it is put beyond dispute that such is the Lord's will. And as the years pass on and new conditions arise in his life and his surroundings, he should repeat the inquiry whether the Lord has not been fitting him by his experiences for the work in the regions beyond.

Does the call to the foreign work even come with the call to the ministry? Probably it does in some cases. I have heard of young men considering the question of entering the ministry, with the distinct impression that if they enter the ministry, it would be the ministry among the heathen. Sometimes a boy feels the assurance that he must preach the gospel, even before he distinctly realizes his conversion. In like manner it is not unlikely that sometimes the needs of the heathen will be the first means used by the Holy Spirit to influence the young heart toward the ministry. I have recently heard of a cultured young physician who offered himself to our Board for appointment as a missionary physician. For some reason the consideration of the matter was long delayed. Receiving no encouragement from the Board, he entered into obligations for several months to practice his profession in his native State, and so when the Board were ready to consider his application, he felt it his duty to withdraw it for the time being. Before his engagement expired, he decided to enter the ministry, and has now been sometime at the Seminary. I hope soon to hear of his appointment to China.

The relation between the call to the foreign work and a call to enter any particular field at home, is a very interesting question. For a number of years I have been gradually strengthening in the opinion that the only difference ought to be a difference in degree and not in kind. The preacher ought always to feel, and I know that many of our brethren do feel a call from God to take up each work which they undertake for him. There is danger that the modern system of candidating and seeking for desirable positions will push this proper view of the case into the back ground. When a field of labor opens before a servant of God, he ought to consider all the indications of Providence, the opportunities for usefulness, the question of personal fitness for the work, the matters of health and support, as well as the reasons for leaving his present field, and allow each to have its proper weight, praying always for the guidance of the Spirit; and when the decision is made, he ought to be able to say, "I feel that I ought to go to that field." Of the same kind must be the investigation of the question of the duty to go to the heathen. There must be a consideration of all the questions affecting the decision, and the result must be a firm and unquestioning sense of duty to go or not go. The expense of going to the field is so great, the time required to learn the language is so long, the evil consequences of a mistake in the decision are so numerous and so far-reaching, that the sense of duty needs to be, in this case, as nearly as possible beyond question.

And yet, I should hardly be willing to say that the path of duty was clearer to me when I came to China than it was in most of the previous events of my life. I as firmly believe that the Lord called me to do more than a dozen years of preaching and teaching in Western North Carolina, as that he called me to come to China. I did not come to this conclusion, however, at the first. For a time I was restive under the restraints of the school room, but no way opened to get out, and I came to feel that, when the Lord wished me to leave, he would open the way. I as fully believe that the Lord had called me, through my brethren, to go to Wake Forest, as I now believe that he called me to come to China. I thought that call was for life, or at least many years, but I see now that I was mistaken in that. Why the Lord did not send me to China direct from Moravian Falls, instead of sending me first to Wake Forest for a year, I do not know, and I do not trouble myself to try to find out. I followed what seemed to be the leadings of Providence, and I still believe that it was the path of duty.

Will not the same principles apply to all workers needed in missionary work? The Christian physician ought to ask the guidance of the Lord in choosing his field of labor, looking at the questions which enter into the decision from a Christian standpoint; and when the decision is made, he should feel that his duty calls him to the place he chooses. The only difference in the case of one who decides to be a missionary physician is the need of more positiveness in the sense of duty, as a mistake would involve more serious consequences and could not be so easily rectified.

But some have become foreign missionaries and after a little while have returned home, some from failure of health, some from discouragement at the difficulties, some from mental or moral crankiness; what shall be said of these cases? Doubtless some were mistaken in thinking themselves called. Many men have entered the ministry under the impression that they were called, but subsequent events have shown that they were mistaken. The call of many, who have not been able to do much work, we can scarcely doubt. Why the Lord calls some who are not permitted to continue long in the work, is another of the unanswered questions. It is exactly parallel to the case of many promising young men, who seemed called to the ministry, and yet in the providence of God never preach more than a few sermons. May it be true that some are called to do a temporary work in foreign lands? Why not? Many a man seems called to work for a few years in some city, and then the time comes when he can do more somewhere else, while some other can do more there. May it not be true that the call of some men to the ministry is temporary, and that when their usefulness as ministers ceases, they ought to resign their credentials and be simply laymen? Is there anything in the Scriptures to forbid such a conclusion? Many good and pious men do a vast amount of good for a number of years, and then through no fault of theirs, their usefulness seems to cease? Who will say that they have not finished the work given them by the Lord, or that they were mistaken in thinking themselves called. Who will say that the men who have done a good work in foreign lands and then been forced to return home permanently, ought never to have gone?

Maggie Herring Monument—Aid Therefor.

Received $25 00 from Mt. Airy Missionary Society for Maggie Herring monument; $1.00 from Alvada Green for same.

I hope every missionary society in the State will follow the example of Mt. Airy Society, so that the monument can be erected before Mr. Herring returns to his field. Let us hear from each one at once.

Respectfully, LIZZIE LOWNDES.

Dear Recorder:—Our plans for a splendid new church on the principal avenue in this city have matured at last. We have sold our church, and will at once begin the erection of the new building, which will be of stone and cost about $35,000 or $40,000. We have been gathering money for it for nearly two years, while at the same time we have been on the look-out for a purchaser for the old church. Our new lot is the handsomest lot for a church in the city. This movement, if carried to completion, will undoubtedly make the Remsen Avenue Baptist church the most prominent church in this city of any denomination. It is quite a bit of enterprise on the part of our people to make this move out into the leading avenue of the city, but it is in keeping with the progresive spirit of the Baptist denomination in this age. We believe in getting the best possible location for our churches and for our schools and colleges. Why shouldn't the best people covet the best things?

It is useless to say that I still read the RECORDER every week with great interest and as a letter from home. Every North Carolina Baptist loves the RECORDER, whether he lives in the State or thousands of miles away. So may it ever be.

Fraternally, M. V. MCDUFFIE.

New Brunswick, N. J., March 21, '93.

We are pleased to announce that Mr. John Y. MacRae, our enterprising druggist, has secured the agency for the Japanese Pile Cure; a most wonderful discovery for the cure of piles of every kind, which he will sell with a written guarantee to refund the money if it does not cure. It is said to be a specific for that terrible and dangerous disease. Get a free sample and try it.

Good Meeting at North Catawba.

Dear Recorder:—We have just closed a good meeting at North Catawba church. There were six additions—five by baptism, and one by restoration.

It was a busy time, but the meeting was well attended. Bro. Robert Moore, principal of Amherst Academy, took an active part in the meeting, adjourning his school each day for the meeting. Bro. C. C. Pool aided in the meeting. He is a good brother to work with. Everybody was glad to see and hear him, as he had been pastor of the church for many years.

Organization.

J. F. Redwine, S. F. Conrad and C. S. Cashwell met at Advance, Davie county, N. C., Sunday, March 26, 1893, to organize a Baptist church. J. F. Redwine was chairman, and C. S. Cashwell, clerk.

Fifteen persons presented letters from different churches. The church covenant and articles of faith were read and adopted. The right hand was extended by the presbytery and the covenanting parties recognized as a Baptist church. J. F. Redwine led in prayer.

"Advance" was adopted as the name of the church.

The church agreed to defer the election of pastor and other officers till a future meeting.

The Wake Forest Alumni Association of Person County.

Pursuant to a request of the committee of the Alumni Association of Wake Forest College for county organizations of same, the alumni of Person met on the night of March 24th and effected an organization with the following officers: President—W. W. Kitchen; Vice President—Rev. J. A. Beam; Secretary and Treasurer—Rev. G. T. Watkins.

The Association decided to hold meetings quarterly in the county for developing the interest of Wake Forest College and of education in general. The first meeting will be held April 29th at Bethel Hill Institute.

Standing committee on Time and Place—Rev. W. F. Watson. Standing committee on Program—Revs. J. A. Beam, W. F. Watson and G. T. Watkins.

We hope to do much good by these meeting.

Rev. R. T. Vann of Scotland Neck lectured in the Institute chapel on Friday night, March 24th, on "Housekeepers." His lecture was entertaining and instructive. His manner is his own and is inimitable. He kept his audience laughing nearly the whole time, but each story drove home a thought. In some respects, he is the best speaker among our Baptist ministers. A native of this county, formerly a professor in the Institute and pastor of the church here, he was in the hands of his friends. It has been hinted that a certain large city church wants him, but we trust that it will be long before he can be induced to leave our State.

The Institute is moving on nicely. The third quarter is past and we are now almost at commencement. Indications are that the approaching commencement (the 45th) will be the best in years. Sunday night, Rev. Mr. McCutcheon of Franklin, Va., will preach the sermon; Monday night will be class night; Tuesday night, exercises by the elocution class; Wednesday morning, address by Rev. Dr. C. S. Blackwell of Elizabeth City; Wednesday night, final concert.

Just a Word.

Bro. Wildman's article about the union of the Anson and Richmond Associations seems to have made the impression on Bro. Haywood that the Richmond Association saw its mistake in withdrawing from the old Pee Dee. Such is not the case. We were convinced that our Association was too small to secure the interest in our Associational meetings that was desired, and hence the proposition to join Anson.

We never have, for a moment, regretted our withdrawal from the old Pee Dee. We would do the same thing again under the same circumstances. The vast territory embraced in the old body, with no railroad passing through it, was considered a sufficient reason (not to give others that might be given) for withdrawing. Although the new Association is about as long as the old one, a railroad runs almost centrally through the two counties, making nearly all the churches easily accessible by rail. This was our reason for joining the Anson. Brother Haywood speaks pathetically of Montgomery county as "a deserted field." Churches go to make up associations. So far as churches are concerned, there are seventeen or more of them in Montgomery. The churches are plentiful, but "the laborers are few." The withdrawal of Richmond didn't take a single preacher from Montgomery.

May I not modestly suggest to Bro. Haywood that, instead of placing the responsibility for the condition of affairs at the door of Richmond, a much more practical solution of the problem would be for Montgomery county boys to do as Bro. Bostick has done, remain in the county as a sacrifice in order to help them. What Montgomery county needs is not more territory, but more to work up the territory she already has.

Thoughts.

BY SCATTERHEAD.

"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52.

Lots of people use the expression, "We all must die," when we can readily see from the foregoing word of God's truth, that all will not die, or sleep, but that all the living saints will be changed when Christ comes for his people in the air, above the earth. The Lord will not come to the earth when he comes for his church, but later he will come as the Sun of Righteousness, as we may notice in some future thoughts. We are looking for the return of the Lord Jesus as the Bright and Morning Star. "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the Bright and Morning Star." Rev. 22: 16. The morning star appears before the rising of the sun. Sometimes there is a considerable interval, and very often a short one between the appearance of the star and the rising of the sun. Our blessed Saviour is now in heaven "in his own true and glorified humanity," and will come as he was seen go into heaven. "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld" (about 500 believers) "he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in shining apparel, which also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1. It was in person that he was seen go away in his glorified body, and in like manner will he so return. None but believers saw him taken up, and we have no proof from God's word that the unsaved will see the Christians taken up. When Christ cometh with clouds, every eye shall see him, but at that time he will bring his saints and his bride with him. Jude 14 verse. Rev. 19.

When our Lord has finished up his business for us, he will come for us, and more than likely it will be in the silent watches of the night that the Christians will hear the alarm given that their lovely Bridegroom is coming, for whom they have been waiting and watching, and "whom having not seen we love." The early Christians' hearts were comforted and were filled with joy at the thought of being caught up with the Lord Jesus. Our Lord may soon give the signal for us in the air above the earth, that we who are his may be taken up.

"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. We believe from many things now transpiring, that the Lord will come soon, and very soon, it may be. We know, however, he must and will come some time, and he says, "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching." Luke 12: 32. "Persuade yourself," one man of God has said, "the King is coming. Read his letter sent before him. Behold, I come quickly; wait with the wearied night watch for the breaking of the eastern sky." Let us as Christians standing on the watch tower be more faithful. Let us endeavor to keep a mighty strict watch over "Old Self." Lots of evil fellows hide in the walls of "Mansoul," and I am inclined to think some of these ugly, pestiverous diabolonians show themselves powerful often. Let us look at the things which are not seen; for when we get our eyes set upon things earthly, we are mighty apt to get down in the mud. We must keep our eyes fixed upon Christ, occupied with him and his glory, and be willing to endure hardness as good soldiers of his. As Christians, when we get to looking for ease, we are mighty certain to find trouble and sorrow in the cones. When Christians get to sneaking around for soft places outside of Christ's service, they are just making big preparations for bitter weeping. In looking to the Lord we find joy and peace, and he gives us the privilege of drawing on him every moment, all the time, for our joy of soul. Many professors seem to look in every direction but Christ for joy. If our hearts are occupied with Christ, we can have joy all the time, no difference how thick and fast trials may come. Phil. 4: 4. Keeping our hearts fixed upon the Lord Jesus and the blessed hope of his return has the tendency of purifying us and making us more like him, and we are not so liable to go astray when our hearts are centered in Christ and our souls filled with the glorious hope of his coming again. When we are rejoiced at the thought that soon we will see our Lord and be like him, we will make an effort to be more like him now. Blessed thought that we soon shall see the blessed Lord and be just like him outwardly and inwardly—altogether like him. Sin is mixed with every thing we do, but when we see the Lord Jesus in person, we will drop this "sinful coil," or, at least, it will be changed. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." 1 John 3.

Loving Sacrifice of Self.

There is no love for Christ, there is no vital faith in him, there is no realization of him in the human life, that does not manifest itself in the loving sacrifice of self in the service of man. And the attitude of despair, distrust, contempt towards one's brother-man is essentially pagan; it is Pharisaical. The Roman disdained the rabble; so did the Greek; so did the Pharisee. And the scorn of the pagan, the scorn of the hypocritical Pharisee, is in the heart of the Christian who, in the conceit of superior knowledge of truth, or pressure of personal interests, or pride of social position, or possession of material things, withdraws from loving, life-giving contact with his less wise, less favored, less religious fellow men.

When Jesus saw the multitudes, he had compassion on them, as sheep having no shepherd. He made his home among them—unlike the rich and cultured disciples who seek the fashionable avenues for their churches and homes. The common people heard him gladly when the cultured and comfortable treated him with malignant scorn. He saw in all the men images of God—broken and defaced; but they were yet images that grace could restore. He faced a race of prodigal sons, but they were still sons. He saw blinded eyes, but he opened them. He saw vile men and fallen women, but he loved and saved them. He saw jealous, greedy, scheming, blundering disciples, but he stilled them with his peace and conquered them with his character. He met the hard, unreasoning religious bigot, who always uses the truth as a weapon of strife and cruelty rather than a torch of love; but he saw that even in the bigot's heart was some spark of love that would yet revive under the quickening breath of God. He looked into the eyes of the low, sordid slaves of money, who could see nothing better in the world than the arena of clashing self-interests; but back of the greed he saw and called forth mighty moral possibilities, the germs of spiritual beauty, the early movements of vast heroic powers—tearing the soul in their struggles to break through its selfishness and reverse its habits of thought and action.

He who was crucified in the world's behalf loved and trusted men more than all others. And the race has always been loved most by those who have suffered most at its hands. Those hearts which are richest with the sympathy that helps and heals God takes into his own hands, and presses their preciousness into the cup of Christ, which he is forever passing to the earth as the remedy for all its ills. The hearts that are profoundest with the power to love he baptizes with Christ's baptism, that they may love purely and unselfishly. We cannot manifest the love of Christ toward men in our lives, apart from suffering and sacrifice in their behalf. The luminous path of our Lord, while it issues in the throne of God, will lead us through wildernesses, through Gethsemanes and across Calvaries. But, if we follow on to do his bidding, continuing his saving, loving life in our words and deeds, the light of love will never go out to leave us in the darkness and misery of selfishness. And our characters will unfold in perennial bloom with the beauty of God's holiness.

The life of fret and friction, failure and bondage, because lived for self, is transmuted into a song of joy when its comes under the mastery of the redemptive purposes of Christ. It passes from a sphere of religious drudgery to one of infinite freedom and exhaustless vigor. When we come to be absolved from self through devotion to Christ, letting him into the blessed possession of the whole life, willing to be nothing in self and for self, that he may manifest himself through us as Saviour to our brother men, we shall then be so absorbed in doing Christ's compassionate deeds, so engaged upon his errand of love, that we shall have small time to spend in the self-seeking that consumes so much strength that should be given to service; we shall be so thoughtful in opening doors into larger and better futures for others that we shall not be anxious about ourselves; we shall not fret about what people think of us because our supreme concern will be what they think of Christ—glad to be forgotten that Christ may be remembered, grow smaller in others' estimation that Christ may grow larger, decrease in the sight of men that Christ may increase.

If we are ruled by a purpose to make Christ glorious in the world's eyes, enlarge his authority in the world's work, increase his worth in the world's thought, we shall not worry about what or where we are, what we have or have not—losing sight of self in our transfixing vision of the Lord—honoring him with a faith that asks not to see, and a peace triumphant over all our sufferings and vexations; we shall take care of our minds and bodies, dissipating the strength of neither in any sort of self-indulgence, because they are Christ's; mere trifles will become to us eternities; everything we touch, and all that touches us, will acquire a sacredness in our thoughts; everything without will speak to us a divine message, and gleam with the light of divine purpose, because the divine Christ-life is within. * *

When Christ becomes the soul of our activities, we shall go to and fro upon our daily tasks, finding in each a burning bush aflame with God, because there is nothing but God's holy ground to walk upon; our homes and markets, our courts and schools, our factories and counting rooms, will all be holy places; the whole earth will become to us a sanctuary of worship, because the altar of the cross has been raised upon it, and the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world offered thereupon as our sacrifice—because the voice of the Lord has spoken in this sanctuary, and his glory has been seen therein—because he is tolling on at its completion, building it with the strength of his grace, rejoicing with his mighty love.—From Rev. George D. Herron's "The Larger Christ."

To the Preachers of the Raleigh Association.

Brethren:—The time for our Centennial work is very short, and probably it is not possible to make a personal canvass of the churches. But the opportunity of making an offering must not go unimproved. We have decided, therefore, to ask each preacher in the Raleigh Association to bring this matter up at once, and to take a collection in each church he serves. Do not worry yourself nor your churches about the several different objects to which it can be appropriated. Take it for "the Centennial of Missions." Let it be the offering of each church towards celebrating the great Centennial year. Do not delegate it to the sisters, nor to the Sunday-schools (unless between your appointments they can see and solicit something from every member). But the time is so short that unless something is done at once, some churches will fail to have a part in this work.

Brethren, make the appeal yourselves. Give all necessary explanations. Let this offering be entirely separate from the regular work of the church. And by or before the third Sunday in April, see that each church is reported with its Centennial collection to Bro. J. D Boushall, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C. Now, brethren, to the work, and do not fail to have each church included.

J. J. Hall,
O. C. Horton,
O. L. Stringfield,
Cen. Com. Raleigh Association.

The Best is the Cheapest.

Baptists cannot overestimate the facilities for the work of the churches furnished by our American Baptist Publication Society. With grateful appreciation of the noble work the Society has done and is constantly doing, let every pastor and every church strive to extend its beneficent influence by giving the widest possible circulation to its carefully guarded and reliable literature. If you want the next generation to be spiritually vigorous, use Baptist literature published by the American Baptist Publication Society, which is the best, and the best is always the cheapest.

Do Your Share.

You cannot set the world right, or the times, but you can do something for the truth; and all you can do will certainly tell if the work you do is for the Master, who gives you your share, and so the burden of responsibility is lifted off. This assurance makes peace, satisfaction and repose possible even in the partial work done upon earth. Go to the man who is carving a stone for a building: ask him where is that stone going, to what part of the temple, and how is he going to get it into place, and what does he do? He points you to the builder's plans. This is only one stone of many. So, when men shall ask where and how is your little achievement going into God's plan, point them to your Master, who keeps the plans, and then go on doing your little service as faithfully as if the whole temple were yours to build.—Phillips Brooks.

EPILEPSY OR FITS

Can this disease be cured? Most physicians say No—I say, Yes; all forms and the worst cases. After 30 years study and experiment I have found the remedy.—Epilepsy is cured by it; cured, not subdued by opiates—the old, treacherous, quack treatment. Do not despair. Forget past impositions on your purse, past outrages on your confidence, past failures. Look forward, not backward. My remedy is of to-day. Valuable work on the subject, and large bottle of the remedy—sent free for trial. Mention Post-Office and Express address.

The Worst Phase of our Immigration Problem.

One who desires to study the vital phase of the immigration problem should go to the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania. There he will find one of the richest regions of the earth overrun with a horde of Hungarians, Slavs, Polanders, Bohemians, Arabs, Italians, Sicilians, Russians, and Tyrolese of the lowest class; a section almost denationalized by the scum of the Continent, where women hesitate to drive about the country roads by day, where unarmed men are not safe after the sinking of the sun. There he will see prosperous little cities like Hazleton, Mahanoy, Ashland, Shenandoah, with fine business houses and educated people of fortune, and surrounding these towns great wastes of the Commonwealth diseased by thousands and tens of thousands of foreigners who have no desire to become Americans, who emigrate to the United States for a few years to make money, who have driven to the cities and to the West the great army of English, Scotch, Irish, Welsh, Germans, and Americans who once gave stability to the coal regions; in short, a condition of affairs which, if equalled elsewhere, may become more than a National problem—a National peril. They leave their families abroad and send to them sums of money that seem enormous when the fact is considered that they belong to the laboring class. The little city of Hazelton is said to send each month to Southern Europe from seventy-five thousand to one hundred and twenty five thousand dollars. Such immigrants, as a rule, make no attempt to become Americans. They care naught for our country but as a place where they can accumulate enough money to make them independent when they return home.—Henry Rood, in the September Forum.

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

No Bad Words at All.

Sir Edwin Arnold says the thing that took him to Japan was reading in a grammar of the Japanese language that there were no bad words in their dictionary! He could not believe the statement, but avows that he found it true. He says that you cannot abuse anybody in Japanese; the worst thing you can say is "fellow;" or, if you are in a towering rage, you can say, "There! there!"

And he adds that a language of such refinement reacts upon the people, making them invariably courteous and polite. This brand-new nobleman does not seem to feel, as self-respecting Americans certainly do, that this politeness reacts too much, and "topples over on the other side."

Sir Edwin may approve of having it said to his august self, "Condescend an honorable entrance into my despised abode;" of being spoken of as a sun-god, by one who pretends to put himself under his feet; but as for us, we mistrust what pretends to go beyond the Golden Rule of loving our neighbors as ourselves.—Kind Words.

Now is the seed-time; God alone
Beholds the end of what is sown;
Beyond our vision, weak and dim,
The harvest-time is hid with him.
Whittier.

A Long Procession

of diseases start from a torpid liver and impure blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures every one of them. It prevents them, too. Take it, as you ought, when you feel the first symptoms (languor, loss of appetite, dullness, depression) and you'll save yourself from something serious.

In building up needed flesh and strength, and to purify and enrich the blood, nothing can equal the "Discovery." It invigorates the liver and kidneys, promotes all the bodily functions, and brings back health and vigor. For dyspepsia, "liver complaint," biliousness, and all scrofulous, skin, and scalp diseases, it is the only remedy that's guaranteed to benefit or cure, in every case, or the money is refunded.

About catarrh. No matter what you've tried and found wanting, you can be cured with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. The proprietors of this medicine agree to cure you, or they'll pay you $500 in cash.

Is it Nothing to You?

BY G. P. T.

"Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?"—Lamentations 1: 12.

Is it nothing to you, O ye Christians,
That millions of beings to day,
In the heathen darkness of China,
Are rapidly passing away?
They have never heard the story
Of the loving Lord who saves,
And "fourteen hundred every hour
Are sinking to Christless graves!"

Is it nothing to you, O ye Christians,
That in India's far-away land
There are thousands of people pleading
For the touch of a Saviour's hand?
They are groping, and trying to find Him;
And although He is ready to save,
Eight hundred precious souls each hour
Sink into a Christless grave!

Is it nothing to you, O ye Christians,
That Africa walks in night?
That Christians at home deny them
The blessed Gospel light?
The cry goes up this morning
From a heart-broken race of slaves,
And seven hundred every hour
Sink into Christless graves!

Is it nothing to you, O ye Christians?
Will ye pass by and say,
It is nothing WE cannot aid them!
You can give, or go, or pray;
You can save your souls from blood-guiltiness,
For in lands you never trod
The heathen are dying every day,
And dying without God.

Is it nothing to you, O ye Christians?
Dare ye say ye have naught to do?
All over the world they wait for the light;
And is it nothing to you?

MISS FANNIE E. HECK, Pres. C. C.
MRS. J. A. BRIGGS, Cor. Sec. C. C.

Letter from Mexico.

The following is an extract from a letter by Rev. H. P. McCormick of Morelia, Michoacan, Mexico, and printed in the Baptist Basket:—

You will be sorry to know that as yet I have been quite unable to establish open work in this city, owing to the inability to secure a permanent preaching place. Of five suitable houses which I have tried to get four belonged to priests, and the other to the church lawyer. A day or so ago I arranged for another house only to find that it also is the property of the priest, who is the chief of the tithe department in the State, but I purpose now testing the law by entering the house and commencing public services. I can see then at what point the government of this State—which for fanaticism and clerical influence stands first in the Republic—will protest us. I know of no better argument for the Permanent Fund and the purchase of mission property than my

SIX WEEKS' EXPERIENCE IN MORELIA.

In addition to the loss of time now past, there must be a continued loss of power, owing to the insecurity of our hold upon the house. It needs to have a door cut through the thick stone wall, giving a front entrance and other changes necessary to transform the bed-room and parlor of the house into a suitable preaching hall. As it is, those who attend will have to go in through a long hall, then into an open court, and from there into the church room. You may easily imagine that few outsiders will take that trouble. But what is the use of making these changes, which would entail considerable expense, when we may, within a month or two, be obliged to look for another place, and restore the house to its owner in the same condition as when rented!

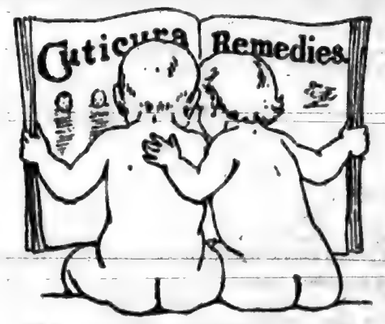
Of course, in the meantime I have been at work making friends, selling Bibles, scattering tracts and holding religious conversations. I have succeeded also in establishing a preaching station some twenty-three miles from here, in the house of an old Revolutionary Colonel whom providence threw in my way. He had become, forced by the follies of Rome, an infidel, but has, I trust, received with a true heart the saving truths of the gospel. To-day I am off for Patzcicaro, where I have a liberal acquaintance who seems open to the Word, and who by God's grace may prove an open door for the entrance of our Lord in that famously fanatical place.

If we could only have the editors of the Basket with us during the terrific weather the papers say you are having! Here the windows are open by day and night, the birds sing as if it were summer, and the orange trees are full of fruits and bloom. Morelia has a charming climate. Religiously, it is what would naturally be expected when priests and nuns and monks and Jesuits are as thick as ticks.

PARDON THE COMPARISON,

but it is so suggestive. In this State we have not only a bishop, but an archbishop, who lives in this city. Tithes are forcibly collected and universally paid all over the State, and the Romish church is rich and powerful. The State is almost virgin soil for the gospel. Some 150 miles to the south are two small Presbyterian congregations, and the Methodists have three small organizations in the State, which numbers largely over half a million souls. As yet it is totally untouched by Baptist effort. This State and Jalisco, neighbor Goldsmiths kingdom, from the fertility of the soil, and the large percentage of Spanish blood have always been the paradise of the priests. We purpose making it as uncomfortable as possible for them by faithfully preaching a crucified Redeemer unto this people. We have shaken hands on that!

I gladly accept your proffered assistance in commencing this work. A baptistery will cost some $25.00; an organ (not counting freight and duties which will be something over $30.00) will cost some $50.00. I am trying to get lights and seats little by little. Help along the line you like best. I am grateful to God who answers prayer for your promise to help. But nothing else could be expected of the Basket's liberal managers whose faith and works are already bringing fruits in many an arid desert beyond the limits of the Christian world. Let me know how I may serve you.—You can scarcely imagine how much lighter hearted your letter has made us feel. God bless you in the good, honest work you are doing for Mexico.



What Can Cuticura Do

Ask thousands of tortured and disfigured little babies throughout the land. Everything that is cleansing, purifying and beautifying for the skin, scalp and blood of infants and children, the CUTICURA REMEDIES will do. They afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure in the most agonizing of itching and burning eczemas. They clear the skin of the most distressing scaly, crusted, pimply and blotchy humors. They cleanse the scalp of dandruff, scales and crusts, and restore the hair. They purify the blood of simple, scrofulous and hereditary humors. Thus from a simple blemish to the worst case of scrofula they are equally successful. Everything about these great skin cures, blood purifiers and humor remedies inspires confidence. They are absolutely pure and may be used on the youngest infant. They are agreeable to the most refined and sensitive. They are speedy, economical and unfailing. Cures made in childhood are almost invariably permanent.

Sold everywhere. Price: CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1.00.

The St. Louis Trade Review and Export Journal in its issue of February 7th, 1893, has this to say:

EDWARDS & BROUGHTON.

One of the leading enterprises of its character in the entire South is the extensive printing and binding establishment, owned and conducted by the firm of Edwards & Broughton, and located at the corner of Hargett and Salisbury streets, Raleigh, N. C. The gentlemen constituting this firm, Mr. C. B. Edwards and Mr. N. B Broughton, are and have been for many years among Raleigh's prominent and substantial business men and citizens. Mr. Edwards is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Franklin county, and has made this city his home for the past quarter of a century, while Mr. Broughton, also a native of North Carolina, was born in Wake county, and has resided in Raleigh since 1858. They began their present co-partnership about twenty-two years ago. The plant is one of the finest in the South, equipped with the best of presses, etc., and with every improvement and convenience. They do a general printing business in all its branches, and carry in stock a fine line of stationery, letter heads, bill heads, statements, fine wedding stationery, etc., and at prices that no house can discount, quality considered. Catalogues, posters, circulars, etc., will be furnished upon the shortest possible notice. They also conduct a general binding business, manufacturing everything in the line of blank books. With their extraordinary facilities and employing only the best skilled workmen, they are enabled to produce a grade of goods that can not be surpassed by the product of any firm in the country, no matter where located. Prices, etc., will be cheerfully furnished upon application either personally or by mail, and all orders will receive prompt and careful attention. They have a large trade from outside the city, and parties residing at surrounding points will save money and receive the very best of satisfaction by giving this firm the benefit of their patronage.

Southern Baptist Convention.

The thirty-eighth session (48th year) of the Southern Baptist Convention will be held with the Baptist churches in the city of Nashville, Tenn., beginning Friday, May 19th, 1893, at 10 a. m. Preacher of annual sermon, Rev. W. E. Hatcher, D. D., of Virginia; alternate, Rev. J. Morgan Wells, D. D., of Tennessee.

LANSING BURROWS,
OLIVER F. GREGORY,
Secretaries S. B. C.

RAILROAD RATES.

The Southern Passenger Association (which embraces nearly all the railroads east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio river) was applied to, as usual, on Jan. 15th, for a rate of one full fare for the round trip. The application was referred to the Rate Committee in February; and then action was postponed. While single roads have shown a willingness to grant this usual rate, no official consent has yet been received from the Southern Passenger Association.

I am glad to announce that the Louisville & Nashville R. R., and most of the roads in Texas, have made a rate of one fare for the round trip; and I hope the other roads will do the same. Other announcements will be made.

O. F. GREGORY,
Sec'y in charge Transportation.

In arranging for the coming session of the Southern Baptist Convention in this city, the committee desires to have as soon as possible the names of all persons knowing themselves to be delegates, either of the Convention or the Woman's Missionary Union or the Education Society. We wish in sending out this notice to call special attention to the following points:

1. We will make ample provision for entertaining only accredited delegates. This rule will be rigidly adhered to.

2. As we expect to furnish homes to all delegates, we will not be responsible for any bills made for entertainment at hotels.

3. All delegates who may prefer hotel accommodations at their own expense and will write to the committee to that effect, will have the very best possible arrangements made for them.

4. The committee will be glad to furnish any information or to make any arrangements at boarding houses and hotels for all visitors who may request it.

5. A special committee on reception will meet all trains and furnish information and assistance to both delegates and visitors.

The careful observance of these rules will greatly facilitate the work of the committee and add to the comfort of the great crowd which we are expecting.

MINIMUM HOTEL RATES.

Maxwell House (headquarters), per day, $2 50; Duncan Hotel, $2.50; Nicholson House, $2.00; Commercial Hotel, $1.50; Bailey House, $1.00; boarding houses generally from $1.00 to $1.25. In sending names, please address M. B. Pilcher, chairman.

W. C. GOLDEN, Sec'y.

What has the Society Done?

A Baptist brother living in Missouri calls attention to the fact that the Sunday-school Board of the Convention has generously distributed $3,000 of its expected profits for the present year to the mission boards of the Southern States, to aid their mission work, and asks: "What is the Publication Society doing for mission work in these States?"

This question is entitled to a candid answer. On inquiry, the bookkeeper of the Missionary Department of the Society makes the following statement: "The Society expended last year in direct mission work in the States covered by the Convention, $13,081.78 in cash, and $2,690.18 in books at catalogue prices. Reducing these books to wholesale cash rates, they would amount to $1,614.11 cash, making an aggregate of $14,695.89 expended last year in cash, and its equivalent of cash, in mission work in the Southern States. The amount this year just closing will be more. For the last twenty-eight years an average of [illegible] each year has been expended by the Society in the Southern States in direct mission work.

Besides this, the Society made last year donations of Bibles and Testaments, books, and other Sunday-school literature, amounting, at catalogue prices, to $7,850.78. And the average value of the grants made every year for the last twenty eight years, is $5,280.

The answer, therefore, to the question is in brief this: The Society has given every year, for twenty-eight years, over $15,000 to aid the mission work in the Southern States. It should never be for a moment forgotten that every order made of the Publication Society for Sunday-school books or periodicals adds to the Society's ability to help the mission work of Baptists in all sections. "Not only does the literature itself do good, but the profits go directly to mission work."

Don't Have to be Watched.

The old man whom a traveler in England overheard singing while at his work of planting potatoes:

"I rams 'em in,
Now thick, now thin;
For what care I
If they live or die?"

would no doubt have taken more pains if his employer had been there looking on. Such careless work is not honest, and is expressly forbidden in the Bible, where we are taught that whatever we have been told to do by any one having rightful authority over us we should do "not with eye-service, as men pleasers," but "heartily as to the Lord, and not unto men."

[illegible] faithfully and honestly the [illegible] by parents, teachers, or employers, are Christians, and wish to [illegible] here is one way to do [illegible].

To the Ladies' Missionary Societies of North Carolina.

Dear Sisters:—We are trying to build a church at Cherry's Cross Roads in Edgecombe county. We have only about one hundred Missionary Baptists in Edgecombe county. The prospects are very encouraging for us in this county. Large and attentive congregations attend preaching at school-houses. We need churches so much! Will not every Ladies' Society in the State take up a collection for this object and send it to me at Whitaker's, N. C.? I will acknowledge all money sent to me in the RECORDER. We want to get our church at Cherry's Cross Roads ready for use in the next sixty days, and we can do so if we can get the money to keep the workmen at work. The material is nearly all on the ground. The workmen are now at work on it. Shall we stop them for the want of money to pay them?

Dear sisters, you have beautiful and comfortable houses to worship God in, and here we have only a little school house. Won't your Society pay for a day's work on the house? Do it in token of your love for him who died to redeem you.

You can send money by postal note or money order, or small amounts in stamps.

Dear sisters, I hope to hear from you soon.

MRS. J. R. PACE.
Whitaker's, N. C., March 30, 1893.

Resolutions.

The following resolutions after appropriate remarks were unanimously adopted by the Ephesus Baptist church, Person county, N. C., at their meeting on the 5th day of March, 1893, to wit:

WHEREAS, Rev. J. H. Lamberth the pastor of this church for the past six or seven years, has surrendered this, and we desire to express our high estimation of the great work he has wrought among us, and our love and admiration for him as a man and as a christian. Therefore, be it

Resolved 1. That we tender him our best wishes for his continued health and happiness and continuation of his good work wherever his lot may be cast, assuring him that no one ever did better work for us, or more deeply impressed his congregation, or more strongly attached to himself the hearts of his brethren and the community.

2. That we extend congratulations to whatever people secures his services and ask that they receive him in that confidence and affection which he as a pure God-fearing follower of Christ so richly deserves.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the church and also sent to the BIBLICAL RECORDER and the Person County Courier with the request that they will publish them. By order of the church in conference March the 15th, 1893.

Sale of Land.

By virtue of an order of the Superior Court of Wake County, made in special proceedings entitled W. T. Edwards, Administrator, vs. W. T. Edwards and wife, and others, being No. 642 on special proceeding docket, as commissioner appointed in said proceeding, I will, on Monday, 10th day of April, 1893, at 12 o'clock M., on the premises below described at Holly Springs, Wake County, sell to the highest bidder for cash the following described real estate: First Tract—A certain tract of land in the corporate limits of the town of Holly Springs, Wake County, bounded on the north by the land of P. A. Norris, on the east by land of M. A. Edwards, on the south by land of D. P. Judd, and on the west by land of W. G. Burns and others, containing 14 acres.

Second Tract—A certain tract of land just east of the corporate limits of said town of Holly Springs, bounded on the north by lands of G. B. Alford, on the east by those of A. J. D. Cross, on the south by those of N. G. Burns and M. Prince, and on the west by lands of M. A. Edwards, containing 6¾ acres.

W. T. EDWARDS,
Administrator and Commissioner.

Mortgage Sale.

By virtue of a mortgage executed to W. H. Morris, July 7th, 1892, registered in Wake county, N. C., Book No. 121, page 481, July 21st, 1892, I will expose to public sale at the court house door in Raleigh, N. C., April 29th, 1893, at 2 p. m. the lands therein mentioned, conveyed by Thomas Y. Barbee and Emma, his wife, to W. H. Morris.

R. W. YORK,

The Leaksville Woolen Mills, Leaksville, N. C., need no introduction to the public in North Carolina and adjoining States. This is simply to remind you that they are still "in touch" with the people, working up their wool into various forms of finished product at satisfactory prices. A handsome catalogue containing samples of their new and attractive styles of Fancy Cassimeres and All-Wool Flannels, together with all other goods made by them, is sent to any address on application. Besides an interesting article on "Wool on How to Handle It," the catalogue contains full particulars in regard to shipping wool. If these details are carefully followed, we guarantee prompt return of goods.

Write to Hiram Foard, Sec'y, Leaksville, N. C., for catalogue, before disposing of your wool.

New Spring Dress Goods.

Among the new Dress Goods for the Spring will be noticed some distinct changes, both as to colors and styles, from those of the past season.

Our advance lines of Dress Fabrics for this season are already on sale, and embraces the newest shades and textures in Plain Materials, as well as the latest ideas in the handsomer French Novelties.

This year, Cotton Dress Fabrics will be shown in many dainty effects, and our present exhibit of these is the most extensive we have ever made.

We suggest to our patrons to buy early, as most of these goods are our own importations, consequently many styles once sold cannot be duplicated.

Requests for samples should indicate something as to colors, and about what price goods are desired.

Cash with the order, of $5.00 and over, goods will be delivered free (except furniture and crockery) to the nearest Express Office or Railroad station.

Electropoise.
(TRADE MARK)
"ATMOSPHERIC OXYGEN" BY ABSORPTION

What a trio of diseases! Only sufferers from these diseases realize what depths of despair they produce. Have any of your friends been CURED by medicine? Temporary relief can possibly be obtained in this way, but cures are very rare. The Electropoise cures when other methods fail. For proof of our assertion, we refer to the numerous testimonials given by the most reliable people of North Carolina—people you know and can trust. Read what Mrs. Judge Dick of Greensboro says. Her letter is in this paper. Write to us for full information.

From Monroe, N. C.

Dear Bro. Bailey:—Having had an opportunity of reading the RECORDER from my childhood, I think I am in position to know, or to express an opinion as to what it has been, and is still worth to those who read it. It is not necessary for me to say that every Baptist in North Carolina should read it. I cannot see for the life of me why they do not; certainly they cannot afford to remain ignorant of what the RECORDER teaches.

Our pastor, Rev. M. A. Adams, has been with us a month, and has already greatly endeared himself to us. You remember we had been without a pastor for some time. We were greatly in need of a man that could put his whole soul into the work. We did not forget to petition the King of kings to direct and send us the right man. Most assuredly our prayers are answered.

Bro. Adams is certainly preaching us very good sermons. Our congregation has grown from a small one to a crowded house at every service. The outlook for the Baptists here is very promising.

We will begin a series of meetings on the second Sunday. Will the many readers of the RECORDER offer special prayer to God for a great blessing on our work here? Some have already joined us since Bro. Adams has been with us. I feel sure that the morning light is breaking—that a blessing is in store for us. God help the people of Monroe to open their hearts and receive us.

Fraternally, R. REDFEARN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Raleigh Affairs.

Last Wednesday about 450 bales of cotton, belonging to Mr. E. H. Lee & Co., were burned. The cotton was on a platform near the railroad track, and the fire was ignited by sparks from a passing engine. The cotton was well insured.

Last Tuesday week the case of the State vs. S. Otho Wilson on the charge of being the chief organizer of "Gideon's Band" came up before Wake Superior Court. The defendant, while protesting his innocence, entered the plea of nolo contendere. Judgment was suspended, and the defendant was taxed with the costs.

Destructive fires raged in Wake county on Saturday, April 1st. In Barton's Creek township, several citizens lost their dwellings, cribs, corn, stock, fences, wood, &c. Other parts of the county also suffered. The fires have left some of the victims in a state of destitution. A subscription for their relief has been started, and Mr. John T. Pullen at the Savings Bank will receive donations for this purpose.
